Day-after-Day
EXCELLENCE

EASTMAN Super-Sensitive "Pan" Negative has played a part in productions that marked veritable milestones in cinematic progress. Yet its success in these outstanding pictures is based upon the same dependability it offers cameramen and producers every day in the year. Unfailing, day-after-day excellence is the quality that makes this film the natural choice for the screen's greatest ventures. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

NICE WORDS FOR

Naughty MARIETTA

"SUPERLATIVES for 'Naughty Marietta'! It's the top. Madly enthusiastic audience applauded each song. The ovation has not been approached in recent movie memory. Jeanette MacDonald is thrice-crowned queen of song-stars . . . Eddy a thrilling thrush cast in the heroic mold."—Regina Crewe, N. Y. American

"Such love songs not heard since 'One Night of Love'. Would have delighted its composer . . . gayly romantic and rhapsodically tuneful. Pictorially handsome in lavish Metro-style, it tells its story in spirited romantic episodes."
—Andre Sennwald, Times

"Handsomely produced it's charming and tuneful entertainment . . . Nelson Eddy sings brilliantly."
—Rose Pelswick, Journal

"A fitting tribute to the composer of the operetta. Eddy steals the spotlight with fine, full-powered voice."
—Kate Cameron, News

"A perfection of cinema light opera . . . Eddy a brilliant barytone . . . masculine, engaging and good looking . . . as charming as a screen operetta ever is likely to be!"
Richard Watts, Jr., Herald-Trib.

"Those advance enthusiasms were justified. This handsome version should please even Victor Herbert himself. Eddy is a find; MacDonald is at the top!"
—Eileen Creelman, Sun

"An exquisite film, so rich musically and strong in story it makes the average movie seem tawdry. Great entertainment!"
—Bland Johaneson, Mirror

SCREENLAND HONOR PAGE

To Paul Muni for the Most Honest Portrayal of the Movie Month in "Black Fury"

PAUL MUNI is indisputably the most honest of all actors on the screen. If he cannot "feel" a part, he cannot do it justice. He submerges himself in his character. He ceases to be Paul Muni and becomes Every Man. His intensity reaches right out from the screen to us. His blazing honesty compels our interest in "Black Fury," the stirring drama which is the star's current vehicle. Not since "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" has he so impressed us with his art. As a simple, earthy, brawny coal-miner Paul Muni is an heroic figure, a vitally real character of valiant and unforgettable sincerity.

SPELLS LONG LINES AT ANY B

Read every word of one of the most thrilling reviews in the history of motion picture criticism!

If I were writing the advertisements for "Go Into Your Dance" I would first measure the film, and then claim in large, boldface letters "that every inch of the celluloid is packed with entertainment!" And that's just what it is.

Many years ago—when Jolson made New York's Winter Garden famous—the mammy singer was acclaimed as "the world's greatest entertainer." He's still that—and then some. To use his words, "You ain't heard nothin' yet!"

"Go Into Your Dance" is tops among the many musical films. Everything about it — acting, direction, music, lyrics, photography, dance ensembles, comedy—is absolutely grand!

Aside from all this tuneful glamour the story is both exciting and highly amusing. The plot has to do with a star (Jolson) who walks out of a show once too often and is barred from Broadway. His struggle to come back weaves in a pretty little hoofer (Ruby), several gangsters, a misunderstood romance, a near tragedy and a few hilarious situations, all building up to a smash climax.

Of course, Ruby is marvelous as the hoofer, and she has plenty of opportunity to display her light fantastic wares. As for Al—well, haven't I already given him a flock of adjectives?

Patsy Kelly is particularly bright with a brief comedy role. Helen Morgan does nicely with a difficult part and one vocal offering. Glenda Farrell is her usual swell self, while Sharon Lynne, Barton MacLane, Phil Regan, Gordon Westcott and others complete the cast.

A nice long bow to Jack Warner, Hal Wallis, Bill Koenig and Sam Bischoff for "Go Into Your Dance"—and that spells long lines at any box-office window!

NEWSREEL RIGHTS

THE decision of Judge Joseph Sprouls of the California courts directing a verdict in behalf of Universal's newsreel upholding its co-equal right with the newspapers to present pictures of actualities becomes important precedent for screen publication. A damage action was brought by a woman who claimed that pictures of the body of "Babyface" Nelson had serious biological effect on her.

In an expression entitled "Newsreels and Corpses" the editor of Motion Picture Herald some months ago gave voice to a declaration that such pictures are not to be considered entertainment for any wholesome general audience, but that opinion applied and applies to questions of policy, not of rights under law. The furore over the pictures of the Hauptmann trial at Flemington was a tempest over the same legal right. It is to be observed that no legal procedure was actually instituted.

It should be axiomatic that the newsreel is entitled to the rights of the press, even if they do include the right to sensationalism and the journalistic taste which colors the tabloids. The right to be wrong is still a right.

Incidentally, Universal seems to be the try-out concern for most of the precedent making litigation on such issues. It will be recalled that back yonder in the days when Mr. Jack Cohn, now of Columbia, was editor of Universal's newsreel there was the celebrated case in which Miss Grace Humiston, attorney in the unraveling of a murder case, sued for invasion of her right of privacy, despite the fact that she had posed for the camera. At the end of a long controversy a decision was rendered in behalf of Universal, in 1919, declaring the newsreel right to picture persons in the news, by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York.

INTEREST and DISINTEREST

A VIVID contrast in both methods and purposes appears between the impingement of the Legion of Decency upon the motion picture and the invasive campaign of appropriation launched by the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, presented and discussed in the news pages of this issue of Motion Picture Herald.

Both movements purport alike to be in the service of the common good and the great public of the screen.

The Legion movement crystalized into support for and encouragement of, the industry's own internal arrangements for improved application of the Production Code and the establishment of the Production Code Administration—distinctly a process by which the motion picture has been left free to tend to its own business, by its own methods.

The Parents and Teachers, and their allies, propose in substance the enactment of legislation aimed to permit them to take over the amusement industry. They propose to dominate it, to select wares for the customers and to take over the customers, too. They demand delivery of the box office to them in the name of piety, virtue and public service.

The Parents and Teachers program appears little short of a paraphrase of the Hooey Long platform.

SUCCESSORS

THE announcement of the public daily press of its re-election of Mr. Will H. Hays to the presidency of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., were somewhat incomplete in that they did not list the array of persons their rumor writers had put in nomination as his successor in the past year. Checking our rumor inventory we find that the list of successors to Mr. Hays has been exceeded only by the roster of those who were about to buy Universal.

SPECULATIONS IN GENIUS

MONOPOLISTIC ambitions are still the curse of Hollywood in the opinion of Mr. Samuel Goldwyn. "There are still persons and concerns that want to tie up all the talent there is on long term contracts," observes Mr. Goldwyn. "I am now increasing my schedule to produce six pictures—why?—because I have to make six so that I can organize and support a competent organization to make three."

In this expression Mr. Goldwyn gives point to our frequent observation that each and every important feature picture is a business in itself, calling for its own production, its own selling, all the way from the studio to the box office. That implies obviously the value of great elasticity in production organization. The long term contract for the preponderance of production talent does not conduce to that elasticity, and tends to close the gates of opportunity to continuously developing ability.

Five year contracts with creative minds are, at the most, highly speculative options.

TYPE TRICKS

THAT large element of the show business which is still controlled by the black-faced typography evolved by the Chicago mail-order advertisers should be advised of the march of time. The reverse-etching, black-face, sardine-packed copy was a hit in the time when, driven indoors by early winter darkness, the prairie farmers sat around the kitchen table, under an oil lamp, studied the catalogues and hungered for more "reading matter".

The American Federation of Actors has formally protested to the NRA in Washington and to the Code Authority in New York, charging the use of amateurs in film theatres is "an unfair trade practice and decidedly in contrast to . . . the purpose of the National Recovery Act." . . .

FILM BOOM

Addressing a labor legislation conference in San Francisco, Madame Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins this week cited figures to indicate the motion picture industry is booming. More workers were employed by the industry during January than in any January for the past six years, she said. . . .

CLAIMED

Following long experimentation, MGM has evolved a new developing process which, it is claimed, eliminates all flicker from release prints. This "chemical unsteadiness," it is said, is eliminated by "anti-direction turbulation development," or the bombardment of the film with minute chemical particles. Elimination of eyestrain, greater brilliance, better detail, are claimed for the method. . . .

MEDDLERS SEEK TO GRAB SCREEN TO FINANCE "WELFARE WORK"

by TERRY RAMSAYE

In quest of information on the motivations behind the increasingly aggressive interest in motion picture affairs on the part of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the editor of Motion Picture Herald last week addressed a telegram of inquiry to Mrs. A. R. Klock, motion picture chairman for the District of Columbia for that organization. Since Mrs. Klock resides and officiates in the city of Washington, her position as contact with the capital is significant beyond the importance of the district she represents. The inquiry read:

WOULD YOU BE GOOD ENOUGH TO GIVE US YOUR OPINION OF THE PETTENGILL BILL AND INDICATE IF YOU THINK IT IS THE PROPER KEYNOTE OF APPROACH ON A PROGRAM OF PROGRESS IN DEALING WITH THE MOTION PICTURE?

Reply from Mrs. Klock was prompt, direct and revealing beyond expectation. Her message read as follows:

MRS. A. RAYMOND KLOCK, MOTION PICTURE CHAIRMAN,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CONGRESS OF PARENTS AND TEACHERS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The National Congress of Parents and Teachers is hereby declared to be contemplating forcible entry, entry by law, into the picture business to engage in exhibition in competition with the existing institution of the screen.

It is naively stated that: "In the present circumstances the theatres have every advantage over many beautiful and well equipped church, school and civic auditoriums."

The implication here is that there is something unfair in this [Continued on following page]

The announced platform takes no cognizance of rights that may exist among the investors in and builders of the industry.

And consider the alluring bait to busy-bodies and job hunters that is held out in the suggestion: "Much splendid welfare work can be financed in every community from the proceeds of motion picture exhibitions in church, school and civic auditoriums."

Welfare work, financed on the motion pictures' receipts, would indeed supply payroll for a grand army of welfare workers. The promise of such a prospect is well calculated to enlist the enthusiasms of vociferous thousands of those persons who devote their lives to tending to other people's business. Just what that invasion of the box office would do to the invested capital and the large employment rolls of the industry is another matter which, it seems, is no concern of either Parents or Teachers.

Ever since the Reverend Wilbur Crafts and his colleague, Canon William Sheafe Chase, began, now more than twenty years ago, to harry the industry of the motion picture, there have been plans to invade the business in the name of piety and social interest.

The motion picture's glamorous reputation as an industry of swift flowing millions has made it a shining mark for meddlers down the years. Production plans have leaked through the cautious expressions of an unending array of alleged reform and social uplift organizations, eager for a conspicuous cause, publicity and profits.

This industry, with the hand of the tax collector ever heavy upon it, has made proportionately high contribution to the public's interest, through its whole existence. It has pursued a policy of very ready generosity in its dealing with social groups. In that it has kept up the tradition of all showmen—always the first to lend a hand at the benefit. The typical motion picture exhibitor is a personage in his community and his theatre is a local institution.

The motion picture mechanisms necessary to the art are on the open market, available to all who desire to make motion pictures. The National Congress of Parents and Teachers and all friends and affiliates have an entirely free opportunity to engage in the production and distribution and exhibition of any and as many motion pictures, of any sort, as they may desire.

That opportunity is not sufficient.

They prefer invasion, expropriation, a special license to take from the exhibitor's box office the amusement merchandise on which the whole industry exists.

The scheme and its array of interlinked special motives is old, but never before has it been set forth in such candor. Never before has it been so organized, and so daring.

Whose industry is this?

WHAT TEACHER-PARENT CONGRESS IS

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The National Congress of Parents and Teachers is the organization which unites the membership of parent-teacher associations throughout the United States, Hawaii and Alaska. The structure of the Congress includes the membership of community units and their councils, state branches and their districts. The membership is 1,463,012, organized into 20,000 local units.

The objects are: first, to promote child welfare in home, school, church and community, and, secondly, to bring into closer relation the home and the school.

Founded February 17, 1897, this organization was launched as the National Congress of Mothers by a group led by Mrs. Theodore W. Birney and Mrs. Phoebe Apperson Hearst, mother of William Randolph Hearst, newspaper publisher and motion picture producer (Cosmopolitan Pictures, released by Warner Brothers, and Hearst Metrotone News, released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer).

The name soon was changed to the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, and later to its present form.

Washington headquarters attaches say the National Congress is now the largest organization of its kind.

In control of the organization's attack against the motion picture is Mrs. Catheryne Cooke (Robbins) Gilman, as motion picture chairman. She is being aided to some extent in field work by the president, Mrs. B. F. Mary L. Langworthy, formerly a village trustee of Winnetka, Ill.

Outstanding on the organization's present legislative program is its support of the Congressional proposal by Samuel B. Pettingill, Democrat, of Indiana, to outlaw block booking and blind buying. Officials have been unwilling to talk about other legislative policies and programs in definite terms.

Not once since 1925 has Mrs. Gilman deviated from her charge that there has been no improvement of any kind in motion picture standards.

The Congress tells inquirers that its policy grows out of the action of a board of managers; that the policy is not determined by an individual or even by a group of officers. However, Mrs. Gilman, as chairman of the national motion picture committee, appears to be laying down the adverse policy against the motion picture.

The board of managers is constituted of the president of each state branch, or in the absence of the president, a state officer authorized as alternate by the state board, the historian, the chairmen of standing committees, the chairmen of committees-at-large, the editor of the Child Welfare Magazine, the honorary officers elected before 1921, and the chairman of the trustees of the Endowment Fund.

This board of managers has absolute power and authority over the affairs of the organization, regardless, and attempts to influence the beliefs of the units in the field, many of which now are operating in direct opposition to the national program against motion pictures. There are dozens of city and state Congresses cooperating with the industry who are friendly to it and sponsor lists of approved films.

The extent to which the National Congress is opposed to the industry is seen in the following declaration appearing in the presentation of the new plan to take the motion picture out of the theatre and put it in school and community auditoriums over the signature of Mrs. Gilman:

"It has been fairly well established that previewing amusement films, publishing evaluation lists, promoting the best pictures and ignoring the rest, sponsoring junior matinees, arranging family nights, and even local legislation, have failed to improve the production of those motion pictures made for amusement purposes which come through the regularly organized channels of the motion picture industry. These practices have delayed the use and development of authentic educational and wholesome recreational films, created a false security, neutralized the benefit of the recommended pictures, given free advertising to the undesirable pictures and stimulated attendance in theatres where the entire program could not be selected or controlled. They have diverted the efforts of large

The National Congress has headquarters at 1201 Sixteenth Street, Northwest, Washington, D. C. All free publications, propaganda, plans and communications are drawn together at this office for distribution by the states to their local units. The Congress is one of a group of organizations which share the headquarters building. Others in the structure are the Association for Childhood Education, National Association of Deans of Women, National Committee on Education by Radio, Parent-Teachers' Association of the District of Columbia and the World Federation of Education Associations.

Mrs. William T. Bannerman, 1901 K Street, Northwest, Washington, is chairman of the legislative committee and the contact between the organization and Congress. She will preside at a conference on legislation at the annual convention of the National Congress to be held in Miami, April 29 to May 3. Mrs. Gilman will preside over the motion picture conference.

At Miami delegates will be told that the Pettengill (H.R. 6472) Bill to prohibit and prevent block booking and blind selling does not represent the ultimate aims of the organization. Besides control of trade practices, the National Congress seeks the creation of a federal motion picture commission.

Legislative, propaganda and other Washington activities of the National Congress are financed from membership dues. The individual member pays the sum total for active membership in the national, state and local to the local annually. The local keeps its share and forwards the remainder to the state. The state retains its share and forwards the balance to the national. In addition, the national receives a small income from the following sources: Endowment Fund, which is largely made up of national life memberships; Founders' Day Gifts; honorariums from courses; sales of publications and other material.

Officers of the National Congress are as follows:

President: Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, 6 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago.
First Vice-President: Mrs. J. K. Pettengill, 426 West Saginaw Street, Lansing, Mich.
Second Vice-President: Mrs. Hamilton Shaffer, 37 Gerlaugh Avenue, Dayton, Ohio.
Third Vice-President: Mrs. Noyes Darling Smith, 807 West 21st Street, Austin, Tex.
Fourth Vice-President: Mrs. A. B. Shuttleworth, 321 State Museum Building, Denver.
Fifth Vice-President: Mrs. A. F. Harman, Montgomery, Ala.
Sixth Vice-President: Mrs. C. H. Thorpe, 2606 State Street, Little Rock, Ark.
Seventh Vice-President: Mrs. M. P. Summers, 1919 Rebecca Street, Sioux City, Iowa.
Secretary: Mrs. Raymond Binford, Guilford College, N. C.
Treasurer: Mrs. Simon S. Lapham, 4 Weybosset Street, Providence, R. I.
Parliamentarian: Mrs. L. Cass Brown, 96 Sixth Avenue, La Grange, Ill.
General Secretary: J. T. Webner, National Headquarters.
Publicity Secretary: Miss Clarice Wade, National Headquarters.
Motion Picture Chairman: Mrs. Catheryne Cooke (Robbins) Gilman, 1929 Second Street, Minneapolis.
Legislation Chairman: Mrs. William T. Bannerman, 1901 K Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.
Radio Chairman: B. H. Darrow, State Department of Education, Columbus, Ohio.

The National Congress of Parents and Teachers, through a few of its leaders, has been conducting an arbitrary attack against the motion picture business since 1924. Prior to that year the Congress participated constructively with other large groups in reviewing motion pictures and otherwise cooperating through the Committee on Public Relations, which still is functioning. Mrs. A. H. Margaretta Reeve, then national president, suddenly decided, in the fall of 1924, to withdraw the Congress from Public Relations membership, and she immediately set out to campaign against the film.

Contrary to the organization's system of operation which is supposed to prevent any individual or even group of officers from determining national policies for the whole membership, Mrs. Reeve said at the time of withdrawing from industry cooperation that "I have become convinced that our place is no longer upon the Committee on Public Relations . . . and . . . I have therefore withdrawn our membership."

Mrs. Reeve's pronounced participation in the anti-film campaign did not come, however, until some 18 months later, when her son, Henry Reeve, operating the Star theatre, at Menard, Texas, was in difficulties with the distributors. It seems that he overbought features, in blocks, to such an extent that at the end of the 1925-26 season he still had under contract and unplayed a total of 278 old features from eight companies and a new season was already at hand.

Denounced Block Booking

At that time Mrs. Reeve was frequently heard publicly to denounce the block booking system, especially in small towns, and she warned that the National Congress would further competition in exhibition through nontheatrical showings unless the distributors abandoned block booking.

Mrs. Reeve's line of attack was subsequently taken up by Mrs. Gilman, who in recent years has been even more active in the field in spreading propaganda for the idea which embraces chiefly a definite program on the part of the National Congress to wheedle the United States Government into a frame of mind where it will take over control and operation of the production and exhibition branches of the industry.

In 1922 Mrs. Gilman was on the other side, working for Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in aiding to defeat adverse film legislation in Massachusetts. The industry won that battle and Mrs. Gilman's services were terminated. Since that time her activities relating to the motion picture business have been reflected in the "new line of attack."

"Professional Recreation Leaders"

In her visits to local affiliates in the field, Mrs. Gilman has said in recent weeks that "we want to take children's recreation out of the hands of commercial money-makers and put it in the hands of professional recreational leaders." She has also said that "nothing that has ever been tried has reduced by a fraction the production of salacious films."

On the other hand, some of the parent-teacher organizations have expressed disapproval of the program after its presentation by Mrs. Gilman. Typical is the situation at Altoona, Pa., where C. E. Whipple, principal of the Keith Junior High School, had asked Mrs. Gilman to address the local motion picture committee of parents to urge their cooperation with junior matiness. Afterward he announced:

"At a meeting of the committee held last evening we took action to ask the Central Council of the Parent-Teacher Associations to write to the National Congress remonstrating with them for sending out a person such as Mrs. Gilman with the presentation and program she has to offer."

Too, the California Congress of Parents and Teachers, one of the several large groups which are out of line with the campaign being conducted by Mrs. Gilman and a few others of the National Congress, has openly expressed satisfaction with the new order in the motion picture industry.

In a letter sent to Joseph I. Breen, the Los Angeles district of the California Congress, said: "The executive board . . . voted unanimously to express to you the appreciation of our parent-teacher members for your efforts in behalf of the production of more wholesome films and the elimination of coarse suggestive, sex, drinking and gangster types."

An Opposite Stand

Arbitrarily taking an opposite stand to the California declaration, Mrs. Mary L. Langworthy, National Congress president, sent a message to each local Congress warning them that the organization will not recommend any film until block booking is abolished.

"Parent-teacher people must not be diverted by this movement (of the Legion of Decency) into forgetting that we, the National Congress, have resolved to cooperate no longer with the motion picture industry until the entire abolition of the trade practices of blind and block booking has been accomplished. For until that is done we cannot safely recommend any film, no matter how good, for fear that indecent and vulgar ones will be shown with it. This course we have taken and we must allow nothing to swerve us from it."

The National Congress, through Mrs. Gilman's attacks against films, has been getting more newspaper attention in the past six months than during its whole history. Little of it is complimentary when editorial expression is given to an analysis of the program of the Congress.

The 'Times-Star', Cincinnati, answered Mrs. Gilman's charge that "the movies have exploited our children" with the expression that the remark was "cheap balderdash, typical of the exaggeration, the intolerance and unfairness of the misdirected crusading spirit run wild."

Said the Buffalo Courier-Express:

"Mrs. Gilman has been associated with every national movement to reform the movies since 1912, carrying on the fight which her husband started when he was named to the first board of censorship 25 years ago."

Said the Baltimore Evening Sun:

"It was inevitable that the various efforts to tie up the cinema in reformer-made diapers should attract such persons as Mrs. Robbins Gilman, who would go the whole fanatical hog and have the United States Government emulate the Nazis, the Soviets and the Fascists and take over control and operation of the production, distribution and exhibition branches of the industry."

Said the Richmond, Va., Times Dispatch:

"Censorship of any kind is bad enough, but when it is presented in camouflaged form on the plea that it is something else, it is particularly objectionable. Such is the type of censorship advocated by Mrs. Robbins Gilman."

The program which Mrs. Gilman advocates, besides the establishment of a mammoth bureaucracy in control of public entertainment, and control of trade practices and distribution through the Pettingill bill, would also involve rigorous federal censorship. Not content with espousing federal censorship of films, she has gone so far as to assent to the principle of similar censorship of the press.

'NOTABLE SCREEN MUSIC ADVENTURE'

Says Joseph O'Sullivan of the Film 'Naughty Marietta'; Story Is Made to Dramatize the Music

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

An inspired composer who passed on before the screen became audible, leaving a rich legacy of lilting melody that has enriched the lyrical stage for more than three decades, contributed the melodic material for a romantic screen adventure drama that is a notable contribution to musical photoplay production.

A producer with vision, a director with imagination, a musician who comprehends the scope of the screen, and writers with the ability to translate into motion picture terms a story that speeds on the wings of tone, united their talents in making Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta" a vital, significant and wholly entertaining screen vehicle.

The result is a musical movie that really moves—swiftly, surely, inspiringly—gathering momentum and intensity with cumulative effect. The scope and power of the audible screen was never more in evidence than in this film transcription of the adventures of the piquant Herbert heroine.

AH! SWEET MYSTERY OF LIFE

Forms climax to story after recurring in fragmentary form.

The stage operetta, originally produced by Oscar Hammerstein at the New York Theatre, November 7, 1910, with Emma Trentini in the title role and Orville Harrold and William Frederic in the leading male roles, was a delectable bit of musical entertainment built around a rather thin story. The screen version, while retaining the Herbert music intact, is expanded and amplified into a saga of high adventure that ranges from the effete environment of 18th Century Paris, through exciting episodes involving the capture of the Casquette Girls by pirates, their rescue by the band of Yankee Scouts in the wilderness of the New World, and the subsequent romantic experiences of Princess Marie de la Bonfain (masquerading as a Casquette Girl—Marietta) in old New Orleans.

Hunt Stromberg and his cohorts, Director W. S. Van Dyke, with Herbert Stothart as musical adaptor, and John Lee Mahin, Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett preparing the screen play, have achieved their results by the logical, if elusive, process of making the story dramatize the music—vitalizing in picture action the tonal and rhythmic media. Thus they arrive at the liaison of action, dialogue and music without sacrificing the entity of either element. The story is given added impetus by the music, which in turn takes on new meaning and integrity.

I'M FALLING IN LOVE WITH SOMEONE

Another of the best known romantic melodies.

The lovely Princess Marie de la Bonfain is endowed with much of that Gallic joie d'esprit which finds outlet in lyric outburst. In the bohemian atmosphere of Paris, Marie is revealed as a high spirited and democratic aristocrat much given to consorting with the choice artistic denizens.

In the studio of her old music master, Herr Schuman, she discovers her mentor working on a musical composition inspired by the neighboring bells of St. Ann. Marie suggests certain changes in the composition, and promises to write words to it. The song is later developed by Marie and becomes the dominant love theme of the romantic drama, the celebrated "Ah! Sweet Mystery of Life," which forms the climax to the story after recurring in fragmentary form throughout the production.

ITALIAN STREET SONG

One of the most sparkling Herbert chansons.

It is evident from the very opening scenes that the makers of "Naughty Marietta" intended to interpret the romantic drama in terms of visual and vocal movement, and so the volatile Marie (Jeannette McDonald) skips from atelier to attic in la vie boheme, giving vent to a sprightly chansonette, ably abetted by sundry parties of music revelers in various studio quarters.

Well known in the field of the music of the screen, Joseph O'Sullivan couples together in his writings the practicable experience of the stage gained as general manager of the Montreal Grand Opera Company, stage director of the Boston English Opera and the Chicago English Opera Company, with years in motion picture companies.

When Marie returns to her conventional and aristocratic abode to be informed that she is to marry the fat and odious Don Carlos, grandee of old Spain, by order of His Majesty Louis XV, she bribes her maid, Marietta, to let her use her passport as a Casquette Girl—the appellation given to a group of nice girls sent to Louisiana by the King to become the wives of the colonists.

The transition from the Old World conventions to the raw and racy, loose and lusty life of Louisiana of the New, is made through the medium of blood-curdling experiences for the Casquette Girls.

Pirates in the offing! Yea! Cutthroats—blackguards—scum of the Seven Seas—attack and swarm over the ship, and each blackhearted devil, after slitting the gullets of the crew, grabs a girl—and off to the mainland!

'NEATH THE SOUTHERN MOON

"Where the scent of the magnolias steeps the soul in dreams".

Adventure? In gobs! But what of the music? Well, listen to these hell-raisers as they bawl their bawdy songs around the campfire and guzzle rum. Odes to the Anacreon de damned! . . . Sixteen men on The Dead Man's Chest! Yo! Ho! Ho! and a bottle of rum . . . And such bed-time ditties. "And now for the ladies, me lads" . . . It looks like a bad spot for the Casquette Girls . . . when a different kind of song is heard in the distance. A song of strong, manly voices in measured rhythmic cadence.

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, along the highway
Tramp, tramp, tramp, the road is free;
Blazing trails along the byway,
Couriers de Bois are we.
"Tramp, tramp, tramp, now clear the roadway;
Room, room, room the world is free!
We're Planters and Canucks,
Virginians and Kaintucks,
Captain Dick's own infantry."

It's the song of the Yankee Scouts as they march through the forest, led by Captain Richard Warrington (Nelson Eddy), chanting the song of the spirit unafraid. To the Casquette Girls it is as thrilling as was the shrill pibroch of the Highland pipes to the besieged at Lucknow. To the pirates, a challenge to the fight—a prelude to bloody battle.

'Marietta' Music Called Adventure

Here is the coordination of music and suspense and lusty action, probably the most inspiring of its kind yet revealed on the musical-dramatic screen.

The scene shifts to old New Orleans. Captain Warrington, he-man and woman-scorner, goes romantic. He high-handedly appoints himself "protector" of Marie, who pretends to be just a "lady of the evening" and is duly installed by the governor in a suitable house. It is here that a band of street singers appear, and Marie from the balcony lifts up her voice in a spirited rendition of the "Italian Street Song," one of the most sparkling chansons that Herbert ever wrote.

The effervescent Marie eludes Warrington and gets a job working with a marionette show. The erstwhile woman-scorner discovers her singing there, and also discovers that he is hopelessly in love with the siren. In romantic scenes " 'Neath the Southern Moon' where the scent of the magnolias steeps the soul in dreams," he confesses that he's "Falling in Love With Someone."

But love's young dream is shattered by the arrival of her uncle, the Prince and fat Don Carlos, who have come to take her back to France. In order to save the life of the man she loves, Marie agrees to go with her uncle.

Despite warnings, Warrington comes to the farewell ball given in her honor by the governor the night before her departure. Asked by the guests to sing, Marie, in order to let Warrington know of her love for him, sings the song which had its inception back in the Paris studio of her old music master, and which the real love that has come into her life has inspired her to perfect—"Ah! Sweet Mystery of Life."

Warrington, just on the point of leaving, hears and understands, and blends his resonant baritone into a moving and magnificently conceived musical climax with the entire ensemble.

The denouement, when Warrington persuades Marie to elope with him, and the lovers march away to the wilderness, surrounded by Warrington's faithful Scouts and singing lustily the refrain of "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," is a stirring and significant musical finale.

Jeanette MacDonald is superb as the capricious Marie. She has never done a finer bit of work, vocally or dramatically. Nelson Eddy, ranking baritone of the operatic stage, gives a virile characterization. His voice, of wide range and dramatic in timbre, is capable of appealing nuances and registers with remarkable fidelity. This newcomer to the screen should prove a sensation.

"Naughty Marietta" is something more than a gorgeous bit of screen entertainment. It is an inspiring romantic adventure into hitherto unexplored regions of the audible screen.

NEW PATRONS DRAWN BY CODE, SAYS HAYS

Points to Few Rejections Necessitated in Production, Under Industry's Self-Regulation

New strata of patronage have come to the motion picture theatre since the industry, following a concentrated appeal of civic and religious organizations, went about the business of producing films with content of higher moral and cultural standard, said Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, delivering his annual report to the organization at a meeting Monday in New York.

All officers of the MPPDA were reelected. Carl E. Milliken was returned as secretary, and Frederick L. Herron as treasurer. Re-elected to the board of directors were M. H. Aylesworth, Robert H. Cochrane, Jack Cohn, Cecil B. DeMille, Ned E. Depinet, E. W. Hammons, Mr. Hays, F. L. Herron, Sidney R. Kent, Jesse L. Lasky, Sol Lesser, Hal E. Roach, David Sarnoff, Joseph M. Schenck, Nicholas M. Schenck, Albert H. Warner, Harry M. Warner, and Adolph Zukor.

In the past year the Production Code Administration, headed by Joseph I. Breen, has had full the cooperation of the producers, Mr. Hays said. Activities of the Breen organization were summarized as follows:

Books, synopses, plays, stories studied	261
Scripts studied	822
Pictures reviewed	*1,328
Consultations	1,899
Detailed opinions written dealing with stories, scripts, pictures, etc.	2,603

---

* Includes completed pictures which, because of changes, deletions or "retakes" suggested, were reviewed more than once. Also includes features and short subjects reviewed in New York.

In the field of advertising, Mr. Hays quoted from an article in Printers' Ink that 100 per cent cooperation had been achieved by J. J. McCarthy and his Advertising Advisory Council. There were 403 complete campaigns reviewed by the Council. Other activities were:

Material Submitted		Discarded or revised to meet standards of good taste prescribed by Advertising Code
39,230	stills	836
15,400	publicity stories	35
12,060	advertisements	357
11,600	exploitation ideas	35
10,320	miscellaneous accessories	7
2,016	posters	31

In addition the Council has worked in the field bringing exhibitors' advertising completely into line. Also, 632 trailers have been passed upon by the Council since May 23, 1934. Only two trailers had to be rejected, only two changed.

Improvement in the field of titles was so pronounced, Mr. Hays said, that of 3,500 offered for registration in 1934, only 50 rejections were necessitated.

Released in 1934 were 174 foreign pictures, as follows:

British	33
French	10
Hungarian	5
Irish	1
Italian	3
Mexican	21
Polish	5
Russian	17
Czechoslovakia	1
Swedish	4
German	74
Total	174

Mr. Hays cited the following facts as to source material in the year's production: original screen plays, 40 per cent; adapted from classics, novels and short stories, 40.5 per cent; adapted from stage plays and musicals, 19.5 per cent.

"The step we have taken in the last year is definitely in the right direction," Mr. Hays said. "It is of creditable length. It demonstrates the soundness of our theory that quality can be produced in quantity and that generous support can be enlisted for it; that the twin necessities of improved supply and improved demand—useless one without the other—can be developed in such relationship to each other as to meet every responsibility of entertainment, of social value, of art, drama, literary quality, and box-office."

Traces Current Trend

The MPPDA president presented title after title of productions made in the current season, productions to be made for 1935-36, in tracing the trend of the motion picture of today. With dates of the beginning of work on some of the best known and most successfully exhibited pictures, he pointed out the "everlasting need of looking in advance to the entertainment requirements and possibilities of the screen."

Forces for betterment which have figured in the improved standards of product did not alone advance the cause; on the other hand, he said, "the steadily rising level of motion picture quality has been accompanied by a rising standard of public appreciation."

Stories from the classics, from biographical or historical subjects, pictures containing music, romantic comedy rather than sex per se, and, too, more heavily dramatic themes, will carry forward into the 1935-36 season as they have through the current, Mr. Hays said.

Improvements in the field of technics he reviewed, with emphasis on increased fidelity and wider range sound with noiseless recording, lightweight portable systems for newsreel recording; extended use of fast panchromatic emulsion, improved reproduction in theatres, in design, in lamps for the studios.

FOX FILM NETS $1,273,069 PROFIT FROM OPERATIONS IN PAST YEAR

Business Done in January and February of 1935 Shows Further Gains; Gross Income Was $36,253,617 in 1934

The full effect of the reorganization and rehabilitation of Fox Film Corporation that took place in April, 1933, under Sidney R. Kent, president, is reflected in the corporation's annual report of operations sent last week to stockholders. The following conclusions concerning earnings for 1934 and the growth of the company's financial strength were set down:

Net operating profit for 1934 was $1,273,069, compared with earnings of $853,668 in 1933 and losses of $8,401,448 in 1932. Earnings last year were equal to 52 cents per share on both A and B stocks outstanding.

Gross income from sales and film rental was $36,253,617 last year, $4,274,919 more than 1933 and $6,541,202 more than 1932.

The corporation has no bank loans.

The net worth of the corporation was $36,518,027.

Working assets on Dec. 29, 1934, indicated the liquid nature of the Fox Film financial structure, embracing $20,021,879, of which $4,499,462 was cash and $13,688,351 represented film and story inventories. These current assets compared with $18,264,085 at the end of 1933 and only $13,522,219 in 1932.

Current assets related to current liabilities of $4,442,246, ratio almost 5 to 1.

It is noted in the balance sheet that National Theatres Corporation (formerly Wesco Corporation, western theatre circuit) has been reorganized and that Fox Film is now the owner of 42 per cent of its outstanding capital stock. As a result of the reorganization National Theatres Corporation, as such, now has no funded debt or bank loans. During 1934 continued progress was made in improving the operating position of the various subsidiary circuits of theatres comprising the former Wesco group which for some time have been in bankruptcy. Subsequent to the closing of the corporation's fiscal year, the most important group has been taken out of bankruptcy and the management predicts that by the end of 1935 the entire system will have been reorganized. Fox Film's former ownership of Wesco Corporation has been reduced to 42 per cent but elimination of the large debts formerly existing ahead of Fox Film's 100 per cent ownership has brought the present 42 per cent interest in National Theatres much nearer the actual theatre properties and, in the judgment of the management, has improved Fox Film's position with respect to the entire circuit.

The company continues to write off nega-

Investment in Metropolis and Bradford Trust Company (holding company for investments in Gaumont-British Picture Corporation, Ltd., one of the largest in England), were carried at $17,087,618, the same value placed on the investment last year, but $2,000,000 less than the $19,030,929 valuation established in 1932.

Investment in National Theatres Corporation was $8,493,667, and in Movietonews, Inc., and sundry other subsidiaries was said to be worth $4,882,251. In 1932 these same investments were set down at $9,421,643.

Land, buildings and equipment were worth, net, after depreciations, $10,130,022, about $500,000 less than in 1933 and $6,000,000 less than in 1932.

Capital stock was listed at $12,182,045.

Out of gross film sales in 1934 totaling $36,253,617, the company paid $10,191,000 in operating expenses of exchanges, home office and administration expenses, and charged off $19,372,093 to amortize production costs.

Interest expense under the reorganization during which the company was shorn of heavy standing obligations, dropped from $2,018,370 in 1932 to $292,871 in 1934. There was $56,700,000 written off in the 1933 reorganization. Earned surplus accumulated since April 1, 1933, totaled $3,006,812.

The company actually spent $21,936,903 on production in 1934. These expenditures include not only the disbursements in the California studios, but also all disbursements made in foreign countries, costs of pictures made in foreign countries for quota requirements or as a matter of policy and so on.

Mr. Kent told stockholders that the "management believes that the year 1934 witnessed further improvement of your corporation's position in the motion picture industry." "After completing the reorganization of the company's finances during the year 1933, all efforts were turned to improving operating results," Mr. Kent continued. "To accomplish this it was necessary to improve the quality of your corporation's product and to build its personalities and thereby secure an increase in gross business. In these efforts it is believed there has been noticeable success."

The statement to stockholders called attention to the selection of the Fox stars, Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor and Shirley Temple, by motion picture exhibitors in MOTION PICTURE HERALD's annual "Money-Making Stars" canvass.

K-A-O Reports Sharp Gain in 1934 Over 1933

Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, a Radio-Keith-Orpheum theatre subsidiary, this week reported a decided improvement in 1934 operations over the previous year. The net loss for 1934 was $176,316. For 1933 it was $642,293. The balance in the K-A-O deficit account now is $2,936,212. It was reduced during 1934 by $154,070 received as a discount on retired bonds and an adjustment of $36,777 on prior years' taxes and other items.

April 1, 1933, was the date when Fox Film Corporation gave effect to the reconstruction of its financial structure, during which millions in financial obligations were written off and the corporation began anew. The company did not issue a full 52 weeks report for 1933, but rather one report for the 13 weeks of the year prior to the reorganization and another, for the last 39 weeks, showing how the corporation benefited its earnings position by the reorganization.

NEWSREELS NOT LIABLE FOR PICTURE SHOCKS

Verdict in California Action Involving Universal News Sets Highly Important Precedent

The motion picture newsreel has the same right as the newspaper to run pictures of dead men without being subjected to legal action or suits for damages.

California's courts so declared on Tuesday when, further recognizing the rights of the newsreel to the freedom of the press, Judge Joseph Sprouls, in Los Angeles, directed a verdict in favor of Universal Newsreel and the Pantages theatre in refusing to grant damages for the loss of a prospective child by a mother who had witnessed a Universal newsreel picture of a slain gangster on the screen of the Pantages.

Furthermore, Judge Sprouls said: "I consider the service that the newsreels gave the public of great benefit in showing the inevitable end for gangsters who try to evade the law, and for showing proof that crime does not pay."

The decision establishes a precedent not only for newsreel and feature pictures, but affects equally all newspapers and magazines in this country.

Mrs. Doris Preisler and her husband, Sidney Preisler, sued Universal Pictures Corporation as the owners of Universal Newsreel, and the Pantages theatre, in Los Angeles, on the ground that the witnessing of a newsreel scene showing the dead body of "Baby Face" Nelson caused Mrs. Preisler to lose a prospective child. She and her husband each sued Universal and the theatre for damages totalling $4,150,000.

In his instructions to the jury, Judge Sprouls directed a verdict and stated that the theatre had obviously posted notice of what was being exhibited, both in its lobby and in newspaper advertisements, and that it was not liable for damages. The jury brought in a verdict for the defendants.

The Universal management at the home office in New York said:

"In the event that this case, heard in the superior court of California, had gone against the defendants, every one of the newsreels and every theatre in the United States would have been in danger of similar suits. Furthermore, a precedent of this kind would have inevitably affected every newspaper and magazine which shows realistic pictures or describes scenes of horror and gruesomeness in its columns.

"The Universal Newsreel has pioneered in defending actions of this kind in behalf of newsreel and newspapers. In 1919, Universal Newsreel established a precedent which was as important and far-reaching as the one established in the Preisler case, when Grace Humiston sued Universal for displaying her picture in its newsreel."

Films Enlisted to Track Down Slayer in Detroit

In Detroit, theatre owners are to be asked to join in a nationwide hunt for the fiend slayer of 11-year-old Lillian Gallaher, whose mutilated body was found there several weeks ago in the deserted apartment of Ward Goodrich, who is wanted as the killer.

A two-reel motion picture showing the victim, the interior of the apartment where her body was found, closeups of Goodrich and his wife and of his fingerprints, has been prepared by the Metropolitan Motion Picture Company, under supervision of local and federal authorities. H. M. Richey, general manager of Allied States, of Michigan, is co-operating with police in having the film shown in every Michigan theatre, and J. E. Flynn, divisional manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is making arrangements for nationwide distribution through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Mr. Flynn said that Canadian theatres also would show the film.

DISHING THE DIRT

Wichita, Kansas
March 21st, 1935

TO ALL DISTRICT MANAGERS, EXECUTIVES OF FOX MIDWEST THEATRES AND OTHERS:

Gentlemen—

During the last three weeks my district has lost millions of tons of valuable soil. Information I have received indicates it has been widely distributed in districts other than mine. I would like to secure your co-operation in having it returned where it belongs. We need it badly. In some places where wheat fields once were, there is nothing but bare rock—and if we don't get help soon something else is going to be bare too.

If you find yourself in possession of any soil or sand alien to your community, and do not know its original home, just send me a small sample. I am the world's champion dust taster. I can tell immediately whether it's Seward County sand, Ford County dirt, Stevens County soil, or Meade County manure.

Very sincerely yours,
H. E. JAMEYSON,
District Manager.

Pathe News On "HeadacheHour"

Pathe News announced this week that on April 8 it will inaugurate, under the commercial sponsorship of Bromo-Seltzer, a bi-weekly news broadcast over a network of the National Broadcasting Company.

John Begg, who has been placed in charge of the broadcast by Courtland Smith, Pathe News editor, this week was completing the first experimental program.

Pathe plans to avoid news dramatization similar to that used in the "March of Time" broadcasts and will confine its material to events to be shown in forthcoming reels.

Erpi-Paramount Settlement Taken Under Advisement

Special Master John E. Joyce in New York on Tuesday took under consideration the petitions for orders authorizing the Paramount Publix trustees to proceed with the settlement of the claim of Electrical Research Products, Inc., for $1,900,000 against Paramount and the settlement of litigation against Marks Brothers, former Chicago theatre operators, and the Continental Illinois Bank.

The Erpi settlement provides for allowance of the claim in the sum of $1,200,000 and the negotiations of new recording license and equipment service agreements. The settlement of claim was agreed upon about four months ago, but the new recording and servicing agreements have since been negotiated.

The only objector to the Erpi claim settlement on Tuesday was Ralph Vatner, attorney, who said he represented Paramount stockholders. Mr. Vatner stated the $500 per reel recording fee was excessive and said Paramount could obtain similar recording rights from Radio Corporation of America and others at half that rate. At that rate, he estimated, domestic recording fees of Paramount would approximate $3,000,000 annually.

Counsel for Paramount's trustees said all other large producers pay the same fees as those proposed in the new recording license agreement for Paramount, and Mr. Vatner countered by pointing out that other producers cannot avoid paying such royalties while Paramount, in its bankruptcy proceedings, could disavow its Erpi contract.

Sufficient bondholder assents to the plan of reorganization to virtually clinch its acceptance by the required number of creditors are to be filed immediately by the Fortington creditor group in return for assurances from other major creditor groups that the present board of 16 directors will not be changed unless at the discretion of the federal court at the April 4 hearing, it was learned last week.

A petition asking leave for the Paramount trustees to adopt 181 executory contracts made prior to the company's bankruptcy, in order that they may be assumed by the new Paramount on its reorganization, was filed Tuesday with Mr. Joyce. These contracts include many theatre operations made at the time various circuits were acquired by the company throughout the country. They include fulfillment of contracts made with Saenger, Rickards & Nace, Publix Northwest and Minnesota Amusement Company, Dent Theatres, A. H. Blank, Southern Enterprises, Fitzpatrick-McElroy, Famous Players Canadian, Olympia, Mullin & Pinanski, Jefferson Amusement Company, Walter S. Butterfield and Balaban and Katz.

EXHIBITION'S 'DOUBLE LIFE' NEEDS TRIP THROUGH WRINGER: FRANKLIN

One-Third of New Tango Parlor's Intake Comes From Relief Checks, Says Head of the Standard Theatres, Inc.

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

Topping his announcement that he again will actively engage in exhibition through Standard Theatres, Inc., a California company, Harold B. Franklin, in launching his new venture, offered antidotes for lagging theatre business: a return to good old-fashioned showmanship, a militant front by exhibitors against "common enemies," a practical solution for the "double life" that affiliated and unaffiliated exhibitors are leading.

From a semi-furnished office in the California Bank Building in Beverly Hills, through which interior decorators were flitting with chairs and desks, his associate, Alex Kempner, formerly identified with the real estate activities of Fox Film Corporation with Mr. Franklin, and the writer repaired with him to the Brown Derby, where, under the spell of film personalities and cuisine, Franklin unfolded some of his theatre plans.

"In the last few years every branch of the industry has gone through the wringer with the exception of the exhibition end. Production has seen many changes; distribution has had its conniptions; but exhibition, outside of real estate and mortgage convulsions, is still where it was—kind of muddling through—but it can't be called progress in showmanship.

"No, I don't pretend to be able to remedy that situation, but on my own, with Kempner here, it may be possible for me to put into force some pet ideas that meet the challenge of these crazy-quilt times.

"What do I intend doing? Well, it's all down on paper—ideas, plans which I will divulge at the proper time. Yes, it'll be new and, I might add, revolutionary—but based on principles I've proved for myself in the past, in Buffalo with Shea, with Paramount and with West Coast."

"Back to the Old Religion"

What about product?

"That's the least of my worries. Does Leo Brecker in New York, who runs after Loew's and after RKO, and charges a higher price—does he worry about product? He does not. He concentrates on showmanship—good old-fashioned, personal, neighborly, enterprising showmanship.

"As soon as I get my locations, and announce my policy, and revive the spirit of showmanship that made the exhibitor great in the past, I think you'll see a swing away from unessentials, a departure from the smoke screen of 'cease and desist' orders, protection, bank nights and other bunk that exhibitors are somehow forced to concern themselves with today.

"Free the exhibitor from the red tape and he'll go back to his good old religion of showmanship.

"Give the exhibitor a common cause to fight against and he'll put his house in order himself. And right now there's plenty for them to line up against—not only here in Los Angeles, but all over the country.

"Right now some one should be marshaling showmen against unhealthy, unbusinesslike competition at which even the Government frowns."

"F'rinstance?" we interjected.

"F'rinstance? Why, it's all around. You and your publications in crusading against these evils will be doing all showmen a favor.

"Here are facts as I got them. Right here on the outskirts of Los Angeles they again open up a tango parlor. The first week, mind you, they took in fifteen thousand dollars.

"That is bad enough, but when they counted up, they tell me, they found a third of that money—five thousand dolalrs—to be S.E.R.A. checks, and another five thousand was County Relief Coupons! There's something to crusade against. If the Government is making a drive against crime, bootleggers, narcotics, racketeers, because they take away money from legitimate business, why not give this kind of illegitimate practices of tango parlors some attention too, because they take revenue that otheriwse would go to the theatres and to the butcher, the baker and the grocer.

"Then there's the slot machines and the marble games—rackets that deflect coin from the box-office.

"How about the dog tracks and horse racing? Sure, both of them are legal, but why make dog racing more attractive to the public through the newsreels. The exhibitor should get some of that dog track money at his ticket-window. Why give comfort to the enemy?

"Well, maybe horse racing isn't so bad, but right here in Los Angeles the first season showed a take of over sixteen million dollars—a part of which, you will agree, would have gone to the exhibitor. But that alone isn't so bad, except that a lot of folks mortgaged their homes, their cars and put themselves in 'hock' for money the ponies took away. Some of that unpawned money should have gone to the legitimate picture exhibitor who at least gives 'em entertainment for their money. And after the season is over the town is full of bookies, touts, tipsters who continue to steer the public for other tracks and clip more money from their purses.

"A few years back it was the stock ticker that took time and congested money as an unhealthy influence on studios, exhibitors and public.

"Now it's these new-born competitors, and if the exhibitor wants something to fight he's got plenty, and in most instances the Government will be glad to help."

"Do you think double and triple bills a constructive force for the exhibitors?" we asked.

Showman Decries Newsreels' Glorifying of Dog Tracks; Proposes Contracts Bar Double Billing of Designated Films

"Of course they're destructive—but what are the distributors and exhibitors doing about that situation, but going through a lot of motions.

"The industry has got to stop leading a 'double life.'

"Exhibitors resort to the duals as a means of self-preservation. You can't blame them, because they all can't stop doing double on the same day at the same time. They consider a feature—plus vaudeville—equal to double competition and, to keep going, resort to the double standard.

"But distributors can do something about it, if only to protect their product, to give their better class picures added luster and glamour, and by signing contracts with exhibitors that certain pictures must be played single bill.

"When I see 'Bengal Lancers' with another good feature, when I see 'David Copperfield' with a second major studio picture, it' shigh time Zukor, Kent, Nick Schenck and others gave showmen a break by having big pictures—outstanding productions—played single bill, and I'll bet they'd get a round of commendation from most showmen that would swamp their mail bags."

"But they've tried already by adding a clause to the standard contract, they've even tried by negotiation, but it doesn't seem to jell," we interposed.

Suggests Selected Lists

"If I could be permited a suggestion—I think the major distributing companies might be able to nail the dual situation just as they inaugurated percentage pictures—by contract. If the leading distributors individually picked out 10 or 12 pictures on their schedule that they deemed worthy, or even if they only stated the number of pictures to be played single, as they state in contracts the percentage of cancellations, and, in their campaign, proposed that the number so specified were to be run as single features and as single features only, I'm inclined to think they'd meet with an overwhelming response from all exhibitors. If this ruling, to start, is made on certain definite pictures, and is made national, then it's fair and square all over to all showmen, and my experience has shown, when an exhibitor feels he isn't getting the dirty end of the stick he'll play ball."

U. S. HOUSING REELS IN 4,000 THEATRES

First Two Reels Previewed, with Release Starting Early in April; Many Loans Reported

Federal Housing Administration official motion pictures, portraying the benefits of the National Housing Act, are to be released in more than 4,000 theatres early in April, the department announced in New York this week. The pictures, two already completed, are 600 feet in length and bear the title "Better Housing News Flashes." Pathe News, Inc., is producing the subjects and Pathe Exchange, Inc., is doing the laboratory work. Each reel is to be released individually.

Plans are indefinite as to the number of subjects to be made after release of the first two FHA officials said. If the pictures prove popular, an initial series of six will be made.

The FHA, before inaugurating "Better Housing News Flashes," sent a form letter to 13,500 theatre owners and managers outlining the plan and asking whether they would cooperate.

Within three weeks, it was said, more than 4,000 exhibitors had reported they would show the pictures, which are offered free of charge.

James Loughborough, veteran film publicist, is in charge of publicity for the motion picture division of the Federal Housing administration.

Kuykendall Commends Films

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who reviewed the first reel last week in Washington, said:

"I was pleasantly amazed by the 'Better Housing News Flashes.' They have fine audience value. They are far different from the average run of pictures of this type. The pictures carry the message of better housing in a highly pleasing and entertaining manner. I only hope they cause some exhibitors to look over their own theatres, and then to redecorate and repair inside and out. It will result in finer looking houses and better business for the showman. These pictures have the action and the tempo of a newsreel."

Mr. Kuykendall said he would incorporate in the weekly MPTOA bulletin a strong indorsement of the "Better Housing News Flashes," recommending not only that theatre owners use the reels but that they also take advantage of the FHA's loan plan to rehabilitate their theatres.

Many Loans Reported

The FHA recently made known that a large number of exhibitors already have obtained improvement loans from local lending agencies under the Government's plan to guarantee credit extended by the banks in the field to the extent of $1,500,000,000 for building improvements, as provided for by the Federal Housing Act.

Each theatre may apply for as much as $2,000 for remodeling and reequipping. The loan can be applied only to permanent improvements and fixtures and to unmovable equipment.

A theatre owner, according to FHA officials, need have a net of only five times the actual payments due annually on a loan in order to qualify. If the owner or lessee borrows $2,000, the annual maximum payment to be made is $662 a year for three years. The exhibitor, therefore, need show a net yearly income of $3,310, or $63 net a week. The sole security is the theatre owner's unindorsed note of hand and not a mortgage or lien.

However, applications from exhibitors will not be considered unless the taxes on properties have been paid up to date, and in most instances it is required that there be no arrears in interest on outstanding mortgages.

Loans as small as $100 may be obtained by all classifications of property owners.

Two Reels Shown

Reel one of the "Better Housing News Flashes" shows Washington Monument having "its face lifted," and the White House given a new coat of paint and otherwise improved. There is a talk by a banker explaining how the rental value of a store at Broadway, Fifth avenue and 22nd street, New York, was increased from $5,800 to $11,500 a year by dividing the building into a series of small shops. An interior decorating expert of R. H. Macy & Co., talks on modernizing; there's a discussion by a New York fire chief on how the modernization of homes and other buildings reduces fire hazards, this being preceded by night shots of fire trucks roaring to a residential blaze, and facts on employment.

Reels Run 6 Minutes

The second subject deals largely with improvements which can be made within the home itself, taking up in turn the remodeling of kitchens to save steps; repairs on the exteriors of buildings and homes, modernization of plumbing equipment and other subjects to interest the housewife.

The reels run six minutes each and all inquiries regarding the pictures should be addressed to the Motion Picture Section of the FHA, 35 West 45th St., New York City. Distribution plans are being handled by the motion picture section in cooperation with RKO sales officials.

It was reported that affiliated circuits were hesitating over offering deluxe playing time because of so-called advertising matter in the reels. In the first two issues, General Electric refrigerators, R. H. Macy and other institutions and furnishings come in for prominent mention. Several affiliated circuits identified with newsreel producing companies also are reported to be wary of the prominent use made of the Pathe name in the FHA releases.

The estimated total amount of modernization and repair work reported by field offices of the Federated Housing Administration in all parts of the country totaled $319,255,563 on March 23, an increase of $7,485,808 for the week.

Loew's Gets Three From Allied Owners

The Loew's, Inc., program of world wide theatre acquisition and building got under way this week with the outright sale by Allied Owners' Corporation of three Brooklyn houses for $12,875,000 and, at the same time, with the arrival in Chicago of Robert Lynch, MGM branch manager in Philadelphia, deals for a number of sites for Loew's in Chicago.

The deal between Loew's and Allied Owners was incorporated in a plan of reorganization for Allied, which was given tentative approval by Federal Judge Robert Inch in Brooklyn. The three houses were erected by Allied in 1928 under an agreement with Paramount, subsequently assumed by Loew's when the latter took over the houses. The agreement called for eventual purchase by Loew's, but when Allied became involved in financial difficulties Loew's discontinued payments, contending that Allied might be unable to deliver clear title.

The new agreement embodied in the Allied reorganization plan provides for payments of $500,000 annually for 10 years by Loew's, and $525,000 for the next 15 years. Provision also is made for Loew's to acquire title earlier by anticipating payments on a discount basis.

Robert Lynch has been active in the negotiations for theatres in Chicago since the start of Loew's planned invasion and has authority from the home office to close negotiations for several sites. A deal is reported to be on for a number of theatres, but investigation of mortgages and other details is holding up consummation. Thomas W. Lamb, theatre architect, is due in Chicago from Kansas City late this week. He will confer with Mr. Lynch and both will return to New York after the deals have been set.

Charles Vincent, Playwright, Dies

Charles T. Vincent, actor, playwright and antiquarian, died last week at his home in Glen Cove, Long Island, after an illness of several weeks. He was 76. In all he wrote 23 plays.

Mr. Vincent was born in Bristol, England, spent his boyhood in Australia and came to the United States at the age of 17. Playing in amateur theatricals on the west coast, Mr. Vincent was noticed by a New York producer, who brought him east after a professional debut in San Francisco. From that time Mr. Vincent spent 15 years on the stage, the while writing plays.

Mr. Vincent established a stock company at the Glen Cove Opera House in 1900, and was producer and actor. His book and curio shop, also in Glen Cove, was virtually a rendezvous for those in search of rare books, maps and hunting prints. Some of his most popular plays were written for William Collier, including "The Man from Mexico," which was made into a musical show for Eddie Foy. He wrote two plays for James J. Corbett.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Robert Benchley finds that the problem of supplying good, clean motion picture entertainment has been solved at last, and you'll never guess by whom—The United States Government!

Uncle Sam has announced the release of three absolutely inoffensive pictures: "Beavers at Home," "Why Save the Elk?" and "Porcupine Control in the Western States."

Their box office success is practically assured. The expression on the elks' faces when they are all being saved and somebody comes along and asks why would alone bring down the house.

Get your orders in now, exhibitors, for "Study Hour Among the Bison," "How Field Mice Sleep" and "Methods of Soothing Owls in the Central Mississippi Valley."

Personally, we think they've pulled a double cross on Frank Buck.

Hollywood producers might take a cue from the stunt employed by George H. Doran, noted book publisher and book seller, on how to unload a "big" personality under contract at a large salary and who is unwanted. Mr. Doran had signed Marie Corelli at a fee of $20,000 and shortly thereafter decided that he did not need the lady's services. He describes the incident, with gusto, in "The Chronicles of Barabbas," to be published in a few days.

At a small dinner in England, Mr. Doran had named various English authors who, he said, were held in great respect in America. Next day the English papers quoted him, and in defense against the subsequent clamor of authors whose names he had omitted, he gave out a second list—offering as an excuse that he had spoken informally and hastily at the dinner. But on neither list did he mention Marie Corelli. Miss Corelli's agent called up in a huff and threatened to cancel her agreement. Mr. Doran, with inward glee, took the agent at his word, got the contract canceled and thus saved the $20,000.

Outsiders everywhere are commending the successful efforts expended by virtually the whole industry to effect a higher moral standard in motion pictures. Yet, Miss Dorothy Wilson, a player, blabbered to the Scripps-Howard newspapers that she is forced to turn to the stage because she is "so tired of playing a 'wronged girl.' "

"Leaves Films to Escape 'Wronged Girl' Roles," said the bold headline in two columns over an interview in which this pretty miss boldly blubbered that "it would take only two more films to make audiences start looking for an illegitimate baby the moment I appeared on the screen."

We can picture Joe Breen, morals custodian of things cinematic, dusting his hardwood paddle.

One of Hollywood's extras had four days work last week because of the Santa Anita races, though he didn't appear before the cameras. His job was to place bets and check results for members of the cast and crew. The director found so many persons leaving his set to take care of these matters he figured it would be cheaper to give an extra a $5-a-day wage ticket and have his staff ready to work when he wanted them.

Eric Blore plays the waiter in Radio's "Gay Divorcee," and is seen working on the noon of one day; still on duty after midnight, and still juggling the tray early next morning.

Raymond McKay, of Alpine, Texas, wrote to RKO complaining that Blore was violating the NRA code for waiters.

Trade paper advertisements telling about the arrival of the new "George White's Scandals of 1935" say that "the entire production was CONCEIVED, PRODUCED and DIRECTED by George White." It was White did this and White did that. In fact there is so much White in this one that it has turned into a blackout for White—Mr. White will not be asked to return to the Fox studio.

And the while Mr. White admits to having so brilliantly "CONCEIVED, PRODUCED and DIRECTED" the production, we are reminded that Sam Hellman and Gladys Lehman wrote the story, and Jack Yellen and Patterson McNutt wrote the screen play, and Yellen and Cliff Reid and Joseph Meyer wrote the songs, and Herb Magidson wrote additional lyrics, and Louis de Francesco directed the music, and Gordon Wiles created the settings and otherwise acted as art director, and George Schneiderman photographed, and A. L. Von Kirbach controlled the sound, and Charles Le Maire created the costumes, and Alice Faye, James Dunn, Ned Sparks, Lyda Roberti, Cliff Edwards, Fuzzy Knight and many others acted the piece and danced and sang. Congratulations, Mr. White.

SIX years ago Jack Doyle, an Irish Corkonian lad of some 15 years, shoveled coal into freighters sailing out of Irish and English seaports and decorated the glory hole of a Finnish windjammer. He was a powerful Celt and his brawn got him a break in the ring. Knocking out nine of ten opponents, he then tackled theatricals, doing a bit of singing, dancing, acting, radio-crooning, movie-starring and so on, finally moving majestically into London's smart Mayfair society set to hobnob with Britain's aristocracy and royalty. The other day he arrived on our shores with ambitions to further his career.

Owned in part by Jack the Manassa Mauler Dempsey, young Doyle is finding it difficult to make up his mind as to his future pursuits here. "It is so hard when one has so many talents and sidelines," he drawled.

"Everyone is after me, you know," he youknowed, "Paramount, United Artists, the broadcasting companies. People think I am conceited. Of course I was a great hit in England on the stage. And my first picture should be a smash." Maybe he'll let us touch his coat—just once.

When the wives saw this message they began asking questions. To be exact, they propounded 18,467 interrogations, of which 18,442 were "Who is this Grace?' The Grace in question happened to be Grace Moore. Ernest Jackson, local tailor, a master of thoughtfulness, found one of the cards in a customer's pocket. He returned the suit to the residence and sent the card to the office.

Envious of the success of the Quigley Awards contests conducted by A-Mike Vogel in the Managers' Round Table department of Motion Picture Herald, we have decided to conduct a contest of our own on this page every week (Vogel's contest is put on only once a month), to determine the neatest piece of chiseling effected in the interests of free space, free tieups and the like during and on behalf of a motion picture exploitation campaign.

Eligible: Theatre exploiteers, press agents, janitors, managers, owners, landlords, receivers, trustees, sheriffs and whatnot.

Prizes: First, an autographed photograph of General Hugh Johnson embracing the Blue Eagle; Second, a copy of the first edition of "When It's Proper Time in the Soviet, Will You Propaganda Me?" by William Randolph Hearst; Third, a half interest with William Fox in Tri-Ergon.

Send in your Chisels! The first will be a chisel by Carter's Little Liver Pills.

Echoing our recent paragraph about the building managers at Radio City finding in the RCA towers a whole floor which had been "lost" for months, is the subterranean mystery that has come to light in the same building, home of Universal Pictures and hundreds of other commercial institutions. It seems that building contractors who wish to remove anything from the RCA Building must have their men fill out a pass with a description of the article. A bland little slip turned up in the files at the end of one day last week. "Kindly permit bearer, CEMENT CONTRACTOR, TO TAKE BASEMENT out of the building," it said.

The Christian Community, publication of the Community Church Workers of the U. S. A., Inc., reported the other day that the Goodman theatre in Chicago was the scene of the presentation of "Judas Iscariot," Ernest Temple Thurston's great dramatic spectacle. "The Chicago Church Federation sponsored the production," added the publication, "and, except for attendance, it was pronounced a success."

You must not chew tobacco on the screen if you hope to exhibit your histrionic proclivities in the town of Zion, Illinois, which is controlled by Wilbur Glenn Voliva, religious leader who holds that the earth is flat. Motion pictures had been banned for a long time at the White Dove theatre, owned by Mr. Voliva, until Will Rogers' "Judge Priest" was booked the other day. During the showing they observed that one of the actors was chewing tobacco. Hurriedly all children were herded out of the house and the exhibition stopped forthwith. Mr. Voliva promised that it will never happen again.

Twenty chorus girls were compelled to take showers in specially constructed baths at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. All because each was sprayed with a metallic substance containing pure gold particles. Each treatment cost $17—value of the gold—and the metal had to be recovered. Things are a lot different on the Paramount lot under the new business-like administration of Ernst Lubitsch.

BRANDT CALLS DRIVE ON DOUBLE BILLING

Affiliated and Independent Exhibitors, Producers and Distributors Called on N. Y. Issue

A concerted drive by affiliated circuit and independent exhibitors to eliminate double featuring in the Greater New York exchange territory—representing about 15 per cent of the industry's domestic distribution market—was called for last week by Harry Brandt. The president of the New York Independent Theatre Owners' Association issued a general invitation to discuss ways and means.

Mr. Brandt said his action followed repeated comment of many patrons attending ITOA member theatres that they are "much disgusted with considerable of the product offered them on double bills."

In inviting producers and distributors as well as exhibitors, Mr. Brandt said, "I am opposed to any plan looking toward the end of twin bills unless admission prices can be raised on some general plan and by the same juncture," to fortify the exhibitor against a discard of product.

Mr. Brandt declared he has no intention of attempting to increase admissions on a set plan. Instead, he would advance prices five and ten cents, entirely dependent upon zones and conditions in them.

Independent producers might be persuaded not to oppose the plan when they considered the cases of many worthwhile independent pictures playing on double bills, he said. He cited Monogram's "The Girl of the Limberlost," which, he said, rated five times its rental draw in many local situations but failed to get its worth because of the prevalence of double features.

Loew's to Cooperate

Official cooperation of Loew's, Inc., in Mr. Brandt's plan was assured Saturday by Charles C. Moskowitz, supervisor of the company's New York theatres, who said that while Loew's had received no official notice of the meeting, it would be "glad to join in" a constructive movement to eliminate duals.

The stand of RKO could not be determined, due to the absence from New York of Nate Blumberg, RKO theatres head. Major L. E. Thompson, representing the RKO metropolitan theatre division, was understood to be planning to sit in on discussions between Mr. Brandt and Mr. Moskowitz early this week.

George Skouras, of Skouras Theatres, said Tuesday that he would be glad to join in any constructive action to eliminate double featuring in the territory.

"So far," Mr. Skouras said, "New York exhibitors have done nothing but talk about doing away with double features. Talking about it is just a lot of baloney—which, in case they don't know it, is goose-liver—and it's about time there was some action."

"There's no question in my mind but that double bills are destroying the industry slowly but surely," he said. "Neither is there any doubt but what the only way to eliminate the practice is for somebody to go ahead and do it. The rest will follow quickly enough. Of course you can't expect every little theatre to cut out doubles, but if the big New York circuits like Loew's RKO, Randforce and Skouras, Springer & Cocalis, Century and the others would do it, there would be very few houses left continuing the practice, and those that did wouldn't matter much anyway."

Mr. Skouras agreed with Mr. Brandt that theatres in the metropolitan area should raise their prices at least five cents.

Some Independents Protest

Reactions to the Brandt proposal were reported to have been immediate and, in some instances, unfavorable, these from independent producers and distributors who pointed out that any curtailment such as he proposes would result in severe injury to them. Mr. Brandt's official reply was that the evil of double bills, as disclosed within the ITOA ranks, is the poor quality of product shown on the twin bill program.

Mr. Skouras said that if those independents opposing would attempt "to make good pictures once in a while," they could realize as appreciable profits as the rest of the industry.

Elimination of double bills is not aimed at any specific producing or distributing group, Mr. Brandt said, and seeks only the elimination of poor quality features, whether from independent or major producers.

Several months ago New York circuits, through Charles McDonald, a division head at RKO, planned to increase admissions at all New York theatres with the cooperation of the ITOA and Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. Nothing materialized, however.

The single feature agreement in Cleveland, which expires July 8th, will be renewed with modification possibly to once a week if it is renewed at all, it was reported. Half a dozen houses opened subsequent to the signing of the agreement and are not, therefore, bound by it. These are all running double bills. They are the Alhambra, Metropolitan, Temple, Family, Erie and Rex.

Double featuring is spreading throughout Ohio, the latest theatres to adopt the policy being the Strand in Akron, the Alhambra at Canton, and the University in Cleveland.

Hays Goes to Coast

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., left New York for Hollywood this week for conferences with production heads. Mr. Hays expects to remain on the Coast for about 10 days.

Monogram Votes Dividend

The executive committee of Monogram Pictures last week declared a dividend of six per cent on the capital stock, payable to stockholders of record May 1 in quarterly installments of 1½ per cent each on May 1, August 1, November 1 and February 1.

Western Electric Loss, $7,751,548 Gross, $91,807,000

Western Electric's total investment in Electrical Research Products, Inc., which it owns outright, stands today at $11,860,593, of which $6,460,593 represents stock and $5,400,000 advances. Erpi is Western Electric's second largest subsidiary; Teletype Corporation, likewise 100 per cent owned, stands as an investment representing some $27,828,875.

These observations were made in New York Monday in Western Electric's annual report, in which it was said that gross sales for 1934 amounted to $91,807,000, an increase of 32 per cent over the sales of $69,511,000 for 1933. Notwithstanding this increase, the company operated at less than 20 per cent capacity and showed a loss for the year of $7,751,548, which compares with a loss of $13,772,504 in 1933.

Sales made by Western Electric to the Bell Telephone Companies in 1934 were $84,698,000, and to others, including Erpi, $7,109,000; the total sales compared with previous years as follows:

YEAR	GROSS SALES
1925	$239,531,000
1926	263.105.000
1927	253.724.000
1928	287.931.000
1929	410.950.000
1930	361.478.000
1931	228.956.000
1932	117.850.000
1933	69.511.000
1934	91.807.000

The net loss for the year after interest charges, $7,751,548, includes a profit of $849,941 from subsidiary and associated companies. After crediting profits of $2,036,073 on sales of marketable securities and other surplus adjustments (net) of $11,093, the balance in surplus at December 31, 1934 was $12,579,222, a decrease of $5,704,382 for the year.

Additions to plant amounted to $1,634,000, while obsolete, worn-out and excess plant written off or retired from service totaled $24,667,000, resulting in a net decrease in plant investment in 1934 of $23,033,000. This had no effect on the year's results as plant written off or retired was charged to the depreciation reserve which has been built up over a long period of years to provide for such charges.

Marketable securities at the end of the year amounted to $25,568,000 of which $24,211,000 are United States Government obligations. All marketable securities including those held by subsidiary companies were valued at the lower of cost or market at Dec. 31, 1934.

Interest-bearing indebtedness was reduced $2,858,000 and at Dec. 31, 1934 amounted to $69,475,000 as follows:

Debenture 5% bonds due May 1, 1944	$35,000,000
Notes sold to Trustee of Pension Fund	33,642,000
	$69,475,000

Western Electric spent in 1934 some $34,682,970 on payrolls, had total assets of $296,834,739 and working assets of $97,229,432, against current liabilities of only $7,872,973. There was $6,722,086 cash on hand.

Exhibitors Ask More Westerns

Exhibitors throughout the country are demanding a greater number of western pictures, it was revealed this week when several of the major companies announced they will increase the number of features of this type in the 1935-36 season.

Columbia, it is understood, is planning to distribute eight Ken Maynards in the new season and may reissue eight Tim McCoy westerns. During the current season 16 outdoor action films were scheduled, eight of which were Tim McCoys and eight Buck Jones reissues.

Paramount released only five westerns in the present season, but is now contemplating increasing the number to nine or 10, with three or four of the new series to be based on Zane Grey novels.

Universal has six Buck Jones westerns currently and will probably increase the series to at least eight.

William Conklin, Screen Actor, Dies

William Conklin, head of the actor-producer relations committee on arbitration of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast, died last week at his Hollywood home of a stroke of apoplexy. He was 63 years old.

Born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Mr. Conklin was educated in New York. He had 20 years experience as a leading man on the New York stage, where he began in 1895. He went to Hollywood in 1915 to work for the pioneer Balboa Pictures Company.

U. S. Suit Against ASCAP May Be Delayed Until Fall

The United States government's anti-trust action against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers will probably be put over until next autumn, it was indicated this week by Federal Judge Knox in United States district court, New York. The Department of Justice announced it would ask for an immediate trial. Judge Knox directed that a substantial part of ASCAP's answer to the Government's bill of complaint be stricken out, on the grounds that much of the answer was improper and irrelevant. In Hollywood this week with the contract between the Songwriters' Protective Association and ASCAP due to expire shortly and with failure of several music publishers to sign a new agreement, L. Wolfe Gilbert, western chairman of the SPA, called a closed meeting of the organization on the issue. Mr. Wolfe said later a contract would be signed within ten days.

Theatres and allied amusement interests throughout Canada this week were disturbed over the action of the Canadian Performing Rights Society in filing a new schedule of fees with the Canadian government for performance privileges which is from two to three times greater than previous charges.

NATION IS RULED BY THE LAWYERS

Associated Press, under a Washington dateline, says the federal government still is run in large part by lawyers. Here's what the Senators and Representatives are, or have been in other times:

Lawyers, 327; legislators, 137; public officials, 114; governors, 20; newspaper men, 43; judges, 47; physicians and surgeons, 5; dentists, 3; pharmacist, 1; minister, 1; farmers and allied interests, 65; real estate, 13; insurance, 8; educators, 18; manufacturers, 9; bankers, 9; contractors and builders, 10; business men, 6; chemical engineers, 2; mining engineers, 2; publicity director, 1; radio announcer, 1; furniture, 1; jewelry, 1; clothing, 1; bonding business, 1; railway supplies, 1; theatrical profession, 1; theatrical manager, 1, and postmasters, 3. Those born on a farm total 56.

LaGuardia Asked To Award Plaques

Mayor LaGuardia of New York has been requested to present the Quigley award plaques for the month of February. The Winner of the silver plaque is R. E. Knight, manager of the Fairmount theatre, Fairmount, W. Va., and the bronze plaque was won by Ed Douglas, manager, Loew's Valencia, Brooklyn, N. Y. The presentation will be made at the Motion Picture Club on April 2, in connection with the "Show of Showmanship," which opens April 1 for four days.

Mr. Knight, whose winning campaign in the Round Table Department's monthly contest was on "Devil Dogs of the Air," will be present. The program will be broadcast over WHN and WMCA. The "Show of Showmanship," sponsored by the Motion Picture Club and MOTION PICTURE HERALD, will be an exhibition of publicity, advertising and exploitation campaigns submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club of the HERALD.

NRA Will Take No Action on 'Bank Nights'

The National Recovery Administration this week in Washington announced it has no intention of making an official interpretation of "bank nights," designed to place the practice under the premium clauses of the film code rather than the lottery clause, under which it now is a violation of the code. For several days the NRA's amusement division had received telegrams from various sections, some from exhibitors but mostly from persons in other businesses, in which the consensus was that "bank nights" were proving an impetus to business and should not be treated as a lottery but rather as a premium, thus giving exhibitors in each locality an opportunity to vote on continuance.

It was said at NRA headquarters that no recommendations to action have been received from the Code Authority and that, consequently, nothing would be done in the matter.

Editor Doubts An Exodus to Florida

Ellis Hollums, managing editor of the Miami Herald, believes the motion picture industry will not desert its "enormous realty and property investments in California just because they get mad at the legislature." In a letter to the New York Post, Mr. Hollums expressed the opinion this week that the talk of a wholesale exodus of the industry from the Coast is chiefly bluff.

"The people of Florida last November voted for a constitutional amendment exempting new units of the movie industry from all taxation for a period of 15 years," Mr. Hollums writes. "A committee of seven business men was organized for the purpose of taking some steps looking to interest the movie industry in this state. So far nothing has been done along that line."

Three other states, however, appear to be taking the threats of Joseph M. Schenck, Louis B. Mayer and others seriously. Virginia, Nevada and North Carolina have made overtures. A delegation from the Las Vegas, Nev., Chamber of Commerce, headed by Paul Balli, arrived in Hollywood Saturday for a conference with Nat Levine to try to induce independent producers to move to Nevada. Governor George Campbell Peery said last week Virginia is ready to cooperate in every way with producers desiring to locate in that state. In Raleigh, Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus offered the industry tax exemption if it decides to move. In California, meanwhile, legislators indicated belief tax proposals would be softened enough to mollify film interests.

St. Louis Action May Be Delayed Several Months

Doubt was expressed in New York this week that the St. Louis anti-trust hearings will get under way April 2, as scheduled, the consensus being that the trial will not come up for several months. Two weeks ago, Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation, pleaded "not guilty," and made a demurrer to the indictment on the ground that it does not state sufficient facts to indicate the commission of a crime. Paramount and Warner officials indicted will plead at the time of trial by arrangement with federal counsel.

Claiming acts in restraint of trade, Francis Reeh of the Shelby theatre, Shelby, Ohio, last week was granted a temporary injunction by Common Pleas Justice Homer G. Powell in Cleveland against members of the local grievance board, RKO Distributing Corporation, United Artists, Universal and GB Productions, restraining them from carrying out an order of the grievance board to discontinue film service to his theatre. No date was set for hearing. Robert Strange, head of the NRA legal department in Cleveland, has been appointed to defend the Code Authority.

The Paramount Publix trustees, E. M. Loew of Boston and A. B. Momand of Oklahoma, have until April 20 to file exceptions to the ruling of Special Master John E. Joyce of New York in connection with the Loew and Momand anti-trust suits against Paramount, Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe ruled in New York last week.

U. A. FILMS 1ST RUN FOR FOX METROPOLITAN

Reorganization Plan Is Filed; Creditors' Meeting Called for April 12 by Judge Mack

The long-awaited plan of reorganization for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses sponsored by Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists Corporation, and Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres Corporation, was filed late last week in federal court, New York, and a creditors' hearing on the plan was set for April 12 by Judge Julian W. Mack.

Fox Theatres Corporation is the sole stockholder of Fox Metropolitan and has filed a claim as unsecured creditor in the sum of $5,776,386. This figure is contested by the trustee. Other unsecured claims filed against Fox Metropolitan total $1,537,001. This is exclusive of any claims the noteholders may have against any unmortgaged assets.

First-Run United Artists Hinted

There is much incorporated in the plan of reorganization which tends to indicate that the circuit may obtain first-run United Artists and 20th Century product following reorganization. The submitted plan states that entry into Fox Metropolitan of Joseph M. Schenck, "reasonably fortifies the potential availability to the new company of product."

"This," it is explained, "will materially strengthen the company and the intangible worth of the securities issued by it. One of the elements of strength, if not necessity, in successful theatre operation is access on fair terms to an adequate supply of pictures. By 'fair terms' is meant not only cost, but also such other vital trade points as right of selection, playing time and dates, particularly in relation to supply, selection and dates of competing theatres."

Follows Loew's Now

Under present operations, Fox Metropolitan follows Loew's in all competitive situations with United Artists and 20th Century product. Under the plan of reorganization Fox Metropolitan will continue to have the Fox Film franchise held by Skouras and Randforce, who receive new 10-year operating contracts under the plan.

The plan specifically exempts all United Artists and 20th Century contracts made by Skouras and Randforce from subjection to a veto power reserved for the board of the new company in relation to all other Fox Metropolitan film contracts.

The plan provides that Joseph M. Schenck assume the presidency of the new company. Capitalization is provided in the issuance of $6,853,385 of secured 5 per cent debentures which will be issued to the present holders of the old $12,458,200 of debentures. Authorized capital stock will be in 10,000 shares, one-half of which will be issued to Fox Theatres Corporation, the other half to United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., of which Mr. Schenck is president and a substantial stockholder. There will be no securities issued or authorized in the reorganization which will rank ahead of the securities to be issued to noteholders.

Schenck Chairman of Board

Mr. Schenck will be chairman of the initial board of nine members, which includes Harry Buckley, vice-president of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.; William P. Phillips, a director of United Artists Theatre Circuit; Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres; Samuel S. Allan, law partner of Mr. Weisman; William Rhinelander Stewart, member of the investment house of John C. Paige & Co. The three remaining members will be elected by the holders of the $6,853,385 of new 5 per cent debentures.

The holders of the new debentures are to receive a minimum of $2,400,000 cash, approximately $1,700,000 of which will be from the Fox Metropolitan cash on hand. An additional $700,000 is being paid in by United Artists Theatre Circuit for the 50 per cent stock holding in the new company. The other 50 per cent holding to be acquired by Fox Theatres is in exchange for its withdrawal of the $5,776,386 claim.

It is pointed out that the 44 Skouras-operated Fox Metropolitan theatres showed a profit of $121,101 in 1934, and the 36 Randforce-operated houses a profit of $48,536. Skouras Bros. will receive $52,000 annually and Randforce $39,780 under the terms of their new 10-year operating contracts.

Wilbert Shallenberger Is Dead in Chicago

Dr. Wilbert Shallenberger, who for more than 35 years was a Chicago physician, died at his home there on Sunday. Funeral services were held Tuesday. Dr. Shallenberger is survived by his widow, a son, Frederic, and a daughter, Mrs. Robert R. Keath.

Dr. Shallenberger was known to the motion picture industry as a brother of Dr. W. A. Shallenberger, who operated the old Arrow Film, and also was an investor in Thanhouser about 1915. Many years ago, W. A. Shallenberger invested in serial products and participated financially in "The Million Dollar Mystery."

Screen Amateur Films

Outstanding amateur films were screened and discussed last week at the Washington Square branch of New York University in New York by Colonel Roy W. Winton, managing director of the Amateur Cinema League, Inc., international group of amateurs, before the National Board of Review.

To Publish "Man of Aran"

The story of the filming of "Man of Aran," GB production directed by Robert Flaherty, will be published in book form by E. P. Dutton & Company in April. It was written by Pat Mullen, a native of the Island of Aran, who assisted Mr. Flaherty in the production.

Gallup Again Heads Columbia Ad Department

George Bruce Gallup on April 8th will return to the position of director of advertising, publicity and exploitation of Columbia Pictures, at the home office in New York, which he left to become account executive and vice-president of Donahue and Coe.

Herschel Stuart tendered his resignation as Columbia advertising director recently.

Mr. Gallup, New York born, 1890, served an apprenticeship with Cosmopolitan Magazine, Street Railway Advertising Company and was advertising director at the home offices of Fox, First National and United Artists. He has been handling New York and national advertising at Donahue and Coe for motion picture accounts, including MGM, Loew Theatres, United Artists. At the agency Lynn Farnol is handling United Artists and Charles Curran the Rivoli.

Mr. Stuart had been a theatre executive, acting at one time as division manager for Fox New England Theatres, and Poli Theatres, general manager of Hulsey Theatres, division manager of Paramount theatres in the southeast, and for eight years was Harold B. Franklin's chief of staff at Fox West Coast, becoming general manager of all RKO theatres in 1933.

1934 Eastman Net Is $14,503,247

Eastman Kodak Corporation and subsidiaries, manufacturing cameras and amateur and motion picture film, earned net profits of $14,503,247 during 1934, an increase of $3,394,243 over the $11,119,004 net of 1933. Earnings last year were equivalent to $6.28 per share, compared with $4.75 per share in 1933.

Frank W. Lovejoy, president, told stockholders that sales are gaining steadily in both domestic and foreign markets, and that earned surplus at the end of 1934 was $80,600,102, compared with $76,595,941 at the close of 1933. Current and working assets total $91,522,874.

Roxy Business Up 18 Per Cent

Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey in New York last week received from Howard Cullman, trustee for the Broadway Roxy, an independent audit which indicated that business at the bankrupt property had increased 18 per cent in eight months, and receipts showed a net profit of $120,169.

Seek School Cooperation

Educators and librarians are being asked by RKO Radio for suggestions on the exploitation of pictures which have been adapted from books of unusual popularity. In the current press book on "Laddie," from the Gene Stratton-Porter novel, Bess W. Timmerman, of the Queens Borough Public Library, has contributed suggestions.

"DECENCY LUCKIEST THING THAT EVER HAPPENED TO YOU"—BRADY

William A. Brady, a Survivor of American Stage's Last Generation, Reminisces Before Motion Picture Club Forum

Once upon a time Mr. William A. Brady of Broadway, today the sole survivor of the last great generation of the American stage, speaking in Chicago, said: "I have been on page one more than any other man in the world, except Theodore Roosevelt." For many and many a year, now, Mr. Brady has been less prevalent.

But Tuesday last, philosphic and laden with memories, many of them mellowed considerably and some more poignant, Mr. Brady appeared at the forum of the Motion Picture Club in New York, with an address made of rememberings and judgments of today. He found the motion picture business "lucky," deplored the plight of his only real love, the stage, and commended the influences of the Legion of Decency.

Has Changed His Views

Proclaiming the motion picture as the world's greatest instrument in the public good, Mr. Brady gave evidence of a change of heart since that day in 1912 when he said: "We (the stage) have the movies on the run." He cited the record of the motion picture industry in the American propaganda of the World War, a period in which Mr. Brady was the president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, successors to the Motion Picture Board of Trade and predecessor of the Associated Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. Mr. Brady suggested that he was not precisely rewarded by the industry in those days.

"As a theatre man," said Mr. Brady, coming to the current period, "I regret the decay of the American theatre. It would be a great misfortune for these United States, if the spoken theatre should become extinct.

"It would be a great misfortune for you movie men if the theatre should pass out, as it is gradually doing. Just think, that in almost 30 or 40 states, or 48 states in our Union, that the theatre, the spoken theatre, is finished—in Texas, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico, no longer is the theatre heard.

"As I said to the blind senator from Oklahoma once in an argument before the Finance Committee about taxes, I said, 'Senator Gore, do you realize that in Oklahoma, there has not been a spoken drama presented in five years? Do you realize that the great works of Shakespeare are no longer shown to your youths?' He didn't realize it.

"Washington is neglectful of the theatre. The theatre is one of the great institutions of a country. In Europe they subsidize it.

"I happen to have been fortunate enough or lucky enough to have been in Europe very shortly after the World War finished. Woodrow Wilson was in Paris at the Peace Conference. I went into Germany. I saw the mark fade away from 300 marks to a dollar to a half million marks for the dollar; and after all, I have had a lot of experience in the world of young people and have covered a lot of ground in all lines, and I say to you gentlemen who control the pictures of America that it is the most important method of propaganda in the world. I say to you as a man with a lot of experience, beware of inflation. The same thing that happened in Germany can happen here.

BRADY PIONEER OF THE THEATRE

William A. Brady is one of the last of the American theatre's pioneers, having been active since 1882 when he made his first appearance as an actor in San Francisco. He was born in San Francisco in 1863. In 1888, Mr. Brady started a repertory company, which proved highly successful and subsequently he became a producer.

Mr. Brady was of the nation's biggest fight impressarios a generation ago, as the senior partner of the firm of Brady & O'Rourke.

One of his early day productions famed in tradition was Dion Bouccicault's "After Dark, or Neither Wife, Maid nor Widow," an over mellow melodrama, which a few years ago again became a hit in revival by the flaring exploitation of Morley, Throckmorton & Gribble, producers, on the beery waterfront of Hoboken, in prohibition days.

Mr. Brady always has been fond of acting and occasionally stepped out of his role as producer to assume a part on the stage.

"As to the theatre in Germany, when the people were starving, when you could not get any milk, when you went to the bank with a suit case to draw out your money, when you paid your hotel bills the money weighed three or four pounds—throughout that period, the theatre and the motion picture did more to preserve the morale of those unfortunates in Europe than did religion or any other institution in the country.

"The luckiest thing that ever happened to you people is the so-called Legion of Decency.

"When it came in sight, I saw an opportunity and I packed up about 150 plays in a trunk, two trunks, about August 1 last, and I jumped to Hollywood, figuring that you'd need clean plays. I had produced many clean plays, and so I saw an opportunity. Well, I succeeded in one instance, I sold 'Way Down Eeast,' which ran 21 years consecutively in the American theatre, but I could not stay there long enough to sell more, which I regret; but I came in contact with pictures for the first time in just about 16 years as the managing director of the World Film, which both produced and distributed, so I was pretty well acquainted with the 'ins and outs' of pictures, and I had read in the newspapers and the columnists the fun that was poked at the people in Hollywood, particularly at Sam Goldwyn, a fine guy, and when I went to Hollywood and in some of the studios, what I saw there, young men and women, amazed me, and I can talk authoritatively of it—the method of production, the completeness of detail, the knowledge of literature and drama of the past amazed me.

Change of Heart Visible in Lauding of Films, Which He Calls the World's Greatest Instrument for Public Good

"Poke no fun, you columnists, at Hollywood. Rather get on your knees and regard them as a great industry. An elder in the theatre said that he has never in his long experience seen such knowledge, such thoroughness, such complete perfection of detail as he saw on that visit to Hollywood. I congratulate you, Hollywood.

"I want to go on record right now that I consider the competency and the intelligence of Hollywood far, far, far, beyond the intelligence of the present American theatre.

"I am not coming here demanding. You can do nothing for me. You had a chance to do it, to pay me back for the service I rendered you over in 1916 to 1920. I wasn't paid $120,000 a year. I wasn't paid anything, and I paid $10,000 a year out of my own pocket in the World War to lead you.

"You're a lucky industry, very lucky. You don't know your own luck—delinquent, when you were outraging decency; some of you, not all of you. What a grand thing it is for you people to think that David Copperfield could run five weeks on Broadway. Who would ever thought it possible? I played in David Copperfield as a boy. Concerning 'Little Women' I was less fortunate—I did not play any part in it. Let us put that on the record. RKO had my manuscript for six months, and I suggested 'Little Women' to RKO.'

"I thought I was down and out when a couple of the Warner Brothers produced 'Three Men on a Horse' at the Playhouse, and they made me comfortable for the next three months, six months or twelve months, and I say 'God Bless the Warner Brothers.'

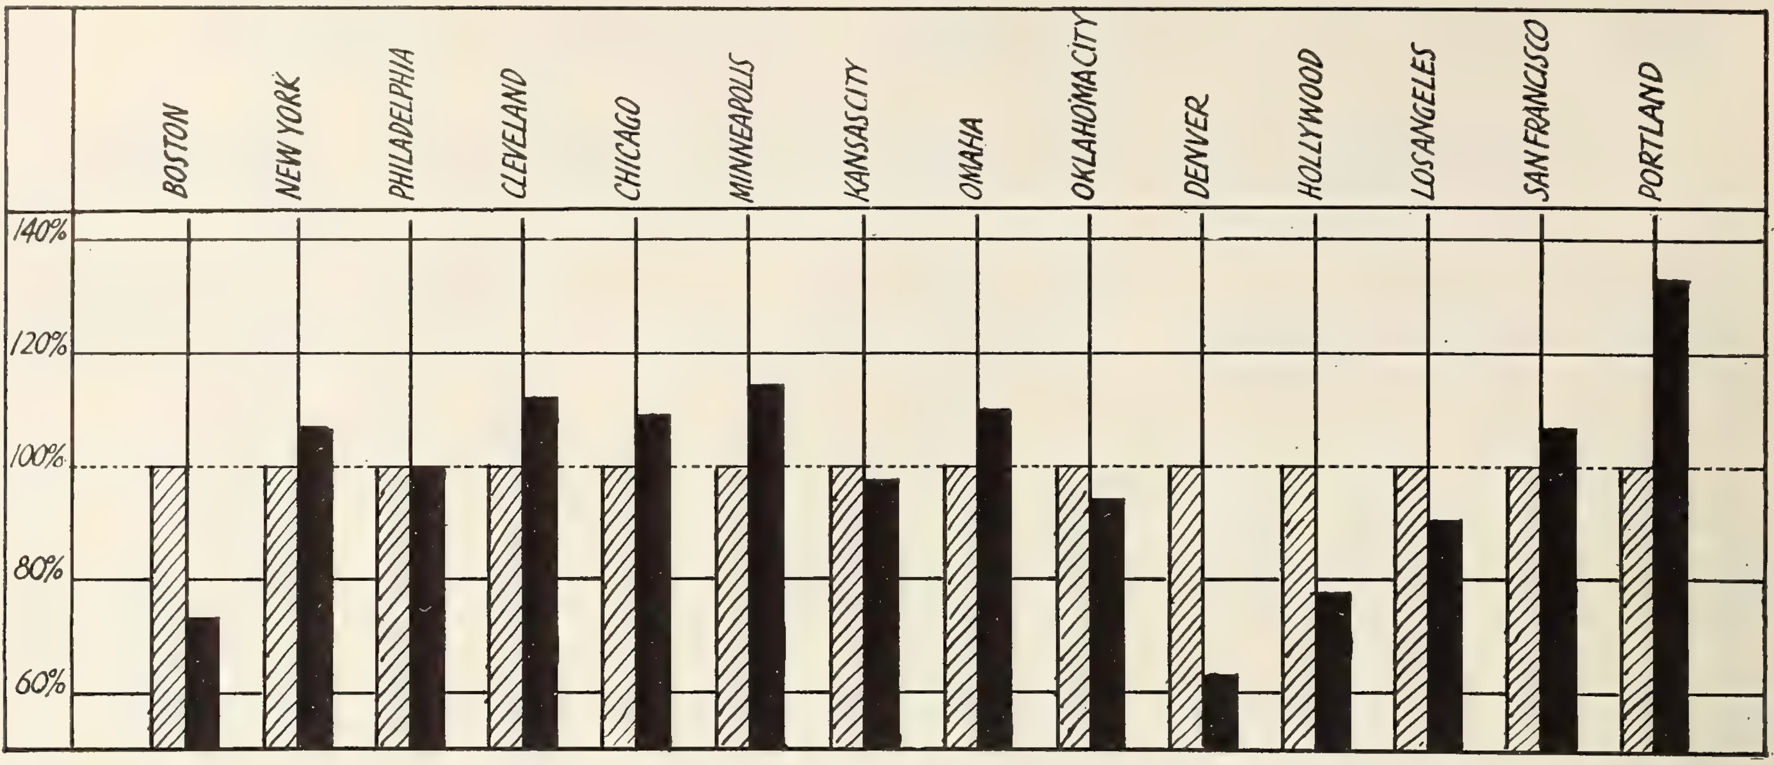
"Censorship — censorship is un-American. What sent me to 46 states out of 48 in 1919 to fight censorship? I never lost a state. The governor of Nebraska vetoed the censorship bill after the legislature had passed it. The powers to be at that time handled New York state, as far as censorship was concerned, and I think they paid Paul Cravath $15,000 to go to Albany for 24 hours, and so censorship became a law."

Other speakers at the Forum included Faith Baldwin, novelist; Rita Weiman, magazine writer, and Magistrate Anna Kross, one of New York City's two women magistrates.

Magistrate Kross discussed censorship of motion pictures, which she termed an attack on American democracy.

"I believe that censorship in every phase of life is of very little value," she said. "I think the industry itself should be relied upon to produce the type of film that will really bring to the community the things they need."

Faith Baldwin humorously described her experiences in Hollywood, while Miss Weiman made a plea for producers to engage writers and playwrights to adapt their own works to the screen.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of fourteen key cities during the seven weeks from February 2 to March 16, 1935, with the receipts from the same cities in the same interval in 1934. The grosses for the 1935 period are indicated by the black bars. The figures for the 1934 period are taken as 100 per cent for each city and are represented by the shaded bars.

Justice Department Denies Film Report

The Department of Justice at Washington late last week officially denied a report said to have been published in a "motion picture newspaper" to the effect that the department had officially approved a motion picture to be produced on the Coast depicting the activity of department agents, and that a former agent had been designated by the department to act as technical adviser in the production.

The department had earlier refused to endorse one of several scenarios which were submitted to Attorney General Cummings for approval by an unnamed producer, according to William Stanley, assistant to the attorney general.

Mr. Stanley said, "We informed the producer during his visit (to Washington) that we would be glad to furnish a technical adviser in order that a true portrayal of the activities of Department of Justice agents might be assured. His group decided not to accept our offer. He asked us to suggest someone outside the service who could act as adviser and we refused to do that."

An official statement of denial was issued by the department, which concludes: "The department has approved no motion picture scenario or production purporting to deal with its work."

Photographic Group to Meet

The Photographic Society of America, developed from the Associated Camera Clubs, has prepared a bulletin at the beginning of its second year. The society plans a national meeting in April, 1935, in conjunction with the Pittsburgh Salon of Photography at Pittsburgh. The secretary of the association is B. H. Chatto, 1300 Milton avenue, Pittsburgh.

Finney Named Chief Nominator of AMPA

Ed Finney, advertising and publicity director of Monogram Pictures, on Tuesday in New York was selected as chairman of the nominating committee of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. The committee includes Edward McNamee, Tom Hamlin, Charles Atwell and Jack Harrower.

The regular weekly luncheon of the AMPA on Thursday was scheduled to be a closed meeting, to be devoted to committee reports on the annual Naked Truth dinner.

Vitaphone Completes Program, Closes Studio for Five Weeks

The Warner Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn, N. Y., producer of Warner short product, completed its current schedule last week and closed for five weeks. The remainder of the short product is in work at the Coast plant. The writing staff, supervised by Herman Ruby, will be engaged in preparing next season's scripts during the shutdown. The studio will reopen in April.

The studio's permanent chorus of 16 girls, who appear in musical subjects, will undertake a four-week stage tour. They will appear at the Earle in Philadelphia and the Earle in Washington. Allan K. Foster directs the group.

RKO Opens Fourth Office in Spain

A branch sales office of RKO has been opened at Seville, Spain, making the fourth now doing business in that country. The others, in charge of Robert Trillo, are at Barcelona, Spanish headquarters, and Madrid and Valencia. Mr. Trillo is now en route to Bilboa, where a fifth branch will be opened.

Metropolitan Film Exchange is distributing Liberty features in the Northwest.

NRA Cites Gains In Amusement Field

Amusement enterprises which during the first nine months of last year showed a profit of $2,500,000, compared with a deficit of $10,700,000 during the same period in 1932, and other industries which have jumped from the red into the black during the past two years are cited by the planning and research division of the NRA at Washington as showing the tremendous improvement brought about by the recovery movement.

In a 60-odd page report replete with charts, graphs and tabulations, the division, without actually so stating, links business improvement to NRA, asserting that some 490,000 workers are receiving the benefits of the amusement codes.

The report was not generally distributed. Apparently it was prepared for use during the Congressional investigation of the NRA. The figures cited are not government statistics but are part of a large amount of data secured from all sorts of outside sources to bolster up the contention that business is better because of the New Deal.

Publisher Has Film Office

Doubleday, Doran and Company has inaugurated a new department to assist authors in marketing the film rights to their works. The department is headed by Leda Bauer, formerly scenario editor at United Artists and later with Paramount.

Washington Circuit Formed

H. D. R. McBride and L. L. Francis of Spokane, Wash., have incorporated Howard Amusement Company at Portland, to operate a circuit in the state.

38 FEATURES IN WORK AS STUDIOS SPEED UP

Plans for 1935-36 Expanded by Producers and Distributors; Paramount Drops 2-Reelers

Producers and distributors this week expanded their plans for 1935-36.

Production in Hollywood last week registered a decided increase over the preceding week with a total of 38 features and eight short subjects in work as compared with 33 and seven for the previous period.

A recapitulation of company plans announced in the past week follows:

Atlantic Pictures

The company has taken over distribution of "Silver Lining," a Patrician picture.

Commodore Pictures

Commodore will distribute 24 seven-reel features starring Lon Chaney, Jr., to be produced over a three-year period by Ray Kirkwood.

Educational

Educational's program will be completely set in a week or so and will approximate 110 short subjects, E. W. Hammons, president, said.

First Division

Basil Dean, head of Associated Talking Pictures, Ltd., will visit Hollywood in September to complete arrangements for joint production with First Division. Associated British Film Distributors, distributing link of ATP, which is handling First Division product in England on a reciprocal basis giving ATP product the First Division release in the United States, also is distributing 20 features from Mascot in England. Directors in the new season will include Alfred Hitchcock and Monty Banks. Hitchcock will direct "London Symphony," first of two features to star Clive Brook. ATP is planning to produce one or two in this country.

ATP has closed with First Division to distribute "The March of Time" in England. Reginald Baker, financial head and joint managing director of ATP, said in New York en route to England that no contracts had been signed, but that no contracts would be necessary. March of Time Distributing Corp., the new company which will handle exploitation of the "March of Time" reel, has been formed in Dover, Del., to deal in pictures of all kinds, listing a capital of $100,000. Incorporators are Russell A. Smith, Keith T. Middleton and Henry G. Walters, Jr. Under a deal now ready for signatures, Regal Films will take over distribution of "The March of Time" in Canada.

Fox

Sidney R. Kent left on a two-week visit to the studios.

MGM

Approximately $20,000,000 will be expended on the 52 features and undetermined number of shorts for the new season, the company announced. Fred Quimby, short subject sales manager, currently is in Hollywood, and Felix F. Feist, general sales manager, is expected to join him there soon.

Paramount

Paramount announced it will sell 100 single-reel subjects next season and will drop production of two-reelers. The company's shipments of features, shorts and Paramount News for the week ended March 16 "exceeded any week on record in Paramount," and indications for the two following weeks were even better, Neil F. Agnew, general sales manager, said. William Rowland arrived in New York to negotiate with Paramount for release of four musicals. The first two will be written by Herbert Fields and will have Rodgers and Hart music. King Vidor's one-picture deal with Paramount has been extended to two years. He will be directly under Ernst Lubitsch. Mr. Vidor's first film will be "So Red the Rose."

United Artists

"The Diamond Horseshoe," an original by Bess Meredyth and George Marion, Jr., will be Lawrence Tibbett's first picture under his contract with 20th Century. It goes into production early in July. "Sing Governor, Sing," originally scheduled for Tibbett, has been revised for the use of Paul Whiteman and his band. Lou Schreiber, 20th Century casting director, arrived in New York on a quest for acting talent.

With "The Legion of Valor" now in production at the studios of Reliance Pictures, Edward Small announced two others to start soon. "The Melody Lingers On" and "Amateur Lady." Harry Goetz, Reliance president, arrived in New York after seven weeks on the Coast.

Warner - First National

Al Jolson, associated with Warner Bros. for six years, was signed to a new contract before he left Hollywood for New York. Leon Schlesinger is planning an animated cartoon opera in color for next season in addition to his "Looney Tunes" and "Merrie Melodies." The producer is considering "Carmen."

Warner expects to produce 20 features at its Teddington studios in England next season for release in that country.

Parents Urged to Back New York Admission Bill

Ernest K. Coulter, general manager of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, has urged parents to support a bill now before the New York state legislature at Albany, which would amend the present law providing for the admission of children under 16 at theatres. He declared he thought the bill would be the answer to "the present most intolerable conditions."

The measure, according to Mr. Coulter, was drawn by a commitee of the society following a study of conditions. The present penal law makes it a misdemeanor for a film house to admit children under 16 unaccompanied by an adult. The measure would amend that law to admit unaccompanied children subject to certain conditions.

Postpone Somerbee Dinner to April 8

The dinner in honor of Al Somerbee, manager for the Lathrop Theatre Corporation, Boston, and an exhibitor for 35 years, has been postponed to April 8 at the Copley Plaza Hotel. The affair will be formal, instead of a "Gay Nineties" party, as originally planned. Louis Boas and Stanley Sumner are treasurer and secretary, respectively, of the committee. Joe Brennan, executive secretary of the local MPTO, is chairman.

Rabbi Asks Public To Preserve Gains Of Motion Picture

The Rev. Dr. William Fineshriber, last week in Philadelphia, called for a militant public opinion to insure the preservation of artistic and social gains which have become evident in the motion picture, and to encourage the industry to make continued advances. He contended that "the menace of mediocrity is as great as the menace to morals in screen entertainment."

Dr. Fineshriber, rabbi of the Reform Congregation Keneseth Israel of Philadelphia, was appointed by the Central Conference of American Rabbis last year to study the social and moral problems presented by the motion picture. His report was made public last week, following an intensive study of the film industry's problems and the results of its program of self-regulation.

Notes "Fine Films" Now

He credited religious leadership, which "crystallized public opinion" against "socially deplorable" films, with having "performed a great service to the American home and the American child."

"The parade of fine films now featured from the theatre screens of the nation," his report continued, "testifies to the power of public opinion, effectively organized. At the same time these pictures have made needless the fears voiced that the creative impulse would be destroyed and true artistry would be fettered by the productions that would result from a moral crusade against objectionable features of screen entertainment."

Urges Public Support

Dr. Fineshriber listed the problem of film betterment from the social standpoint as fourfold, namely:

"Better pictures must be made. Higher standards of appreciation must be developed for pictures of the better kind. Public leadership must support the honest efforts of the industry to produce honest entertainment. And films that disregard the accepted standards of decency and of wholesome popular appeal must be driven from the screen."

Dr. Fineshriber warned that the problem could not be solved "by any spasm of virtue enforced upon the industry." Instead, he said, it was necessary to "organize public sentiment for clean pictures, to encourage selectivity that will make itself felt at the box office and to make public opinion articulate in its demands upon the industry."

Oriental Film Company Is Formed in China

Oriental Film Productions has been formed in Hong Kong as the newest Chinese producing organization. Men now engaged in Hollywood are to form the operating staff, while the executive personnel is made up of Chinese who are university graduates and American born. The main studios and executive offices are located at Macao. It is the intention of the company as well to bring to China at least one wellknown scenarist.

FIXED MINIMUM PENALTY DROPPED IN ADMINISTRATION COPYRIGHT BILL

Excessive Penalties Doubted Due to Greater Discretion Left to Courts and Granting of Right of Appeal

Broadly modified in some of its most important provisions, as a result of conferences last month with representatives of the motion picture industry and others, a new copyright bill has been drafted by the State Department at Washington for introduction in Congress as the first step toward making the United States a member of the international copyright union.

A major change in the bill was the elimination of a fixed minimum penalty for infringement, sought by exhibitors, although the maximum assessment is raised to $10,000.

While it was considered in film circles that the provision still left room for excessively high penalties, this likelihood was lessened by the greater discretion vested in the courts, together with the giving of the right of appeal, which does not now exist.

Aid Against Racketeering

The penalty provision as amended does not provide for payment of proven damages and profits but for such sums not exceeding $10,000 "as shall, in the opinion of the court, be sufficient to prevent their operation as a license to infringe and as shall be just, proper and adequate in view of the circumstances of the case."

Representations of the film industry resulted in a number of changes designed to protect the exhibitor from racketeering and other evils. One provision is that the right to use copyrighted material in production shall carry with it the right to exhibit the film.

The bill classifies motion pictures separately in the category of material entitled to copyright, but drops the previous attempt to distinguish between filmed plays and other types of pictures.

To obtain registration under the proposed law it would be necessary to deposit five prints from scenes of the film, and no action or proceedings for infringement might be maintained until the plantiff complied with all requirements for deposit of copies and registration.

Special attention is paid to newsreels in the revised draft, placing them in the same class as newspapers and prohibiting the issuance of injunctions which would prevent exhibition of a newsreel or the reproduction therein of copyrighted photographs. It also is provided that no civil or criminal liability shall be incurred by newsreels for the incidental reproduction of a copyrighted work depicting current events.

The department has retained its provisions reserving to authors the right to prevent mutilation of their works, but has modified the protection by giving picture producers the right to make necessary changes in conformity with their customary standards and requirements.

Of considerable importance, in view of the fact that the proposed extension of the copyright period to 50 years will remove many works from the public domain, is a provision in the bill protecting users of material now free. Under this clause, after a work is withdrawn from the public domain and placed under copyright, no damages may be collected for its use while in the former category.

Legislatures Active

Legislative tussles were at their height in a number of states. In Ohio was passed the Waldvogel bill banning designated playdates.

ARKANSAS: A two per cent sales tax was passed by the legislature.

CALIFORNIA: The Lyons sales tax bill was amended by the Assembly to eliminate a $250,000 annual tax levy on motion pictures. The Legislature approved the Townsend old age pension plan. A bill calling for state income tax equal to the Federal rate was expected to be passed by the Assembly.

CONNECTICUT: A bill to sanction pari-mutuel betting needed only the Governor's signature. A general fight was being organized against a 5 per cent admission tax bill pending.

INDIANA: Exhibitors were satisfied with the results of the legislative session, but the forthcoming special session to raise additional revenue is causing worry. A 10 per cent admission tax bill has been indefinitely postponed, a bill increasing penalties for discrimination has been killed, as have bills for pari-mutuel betting and lightening carnival license fees.

IOWA: Repeal of the Sunday blue laws was passed in the House, 61-38, and the measure is now up to the Senate.

MARYLAND: A bill to permit Sunday shows in Alleghany county passed the House at Annapolis.

Industry Control Bill Fails

MASSACHUSETTS: Decisive defeat was handed to the House bill calling for an Economic Council to form a central point of control for all phases of every industry. The state public safety committee discussed the petition, House 1648, that would put the licensing of stagehands under the commissioner of public safety. The bill, opposed by the theatres, provides that no one may be given a license until he "has passed an examination . . . and shall have at least five years' experience."

MINNESOTA: A bill for a 10 per cent ticket tax has been introduced.

MISSOURI: Passage of the state administration's 2 per cent sales tax bill appeared probable. It specifically mentions admissions.

Inclusion of theatres in the two per cent sales tax bill in the Missouri legislature was assured when the House defeated an amendment exempting theatre admissions.

Nebraska Tax Killed

NEBRASKA: The legislature killed a bill imposing a 10 per cent tax on all film rentals.

NEW HAMPSHIRE: Pari-mutuel betting was legalized for another six years.

OHIO: Senator Edward N. Waldvogel's bill prohibiting designated playdates passed the House after previously passing the Senate.

PENNSYLVANIA: Action proposed in the Assembly to legalize Sunday shows has drawn numerous protests in Scranton from religious and civic organizations. A 10 per cent amusement tax, passed in the House, was expected to fail in the Senate is predicted.

Ohio Measure Barring Designation of Playdates Passes Both Houses; Indiana Exhibitors Awaiting a Special Session

TEXAS: A bill calling for a 10 per cent admission was killed in the House.

WASHINGTON: The Senate is redrafting the sales tax bill, taxing admissions of 20 cents or more.

WEST VIRGINIA: The gross sales tax was reduced from $2.25 to 65 cents per $100, a dog-racing bill was defeated and efforts to reduce carnival license fees came to nothing.

WISCONSIN: The Carow bill calling for a 4 per cent tax on grosses and an annual license fee of $5 was introduced in the House.

NRA to Discuss Reopening of Code

The question of whether or not anything can be gained by a reopening of the motion picture code was scheduled for discussion sometime this week between NRA Compliance Director Sol A. Rosenblatt and members of the National Industrial Recovery Board, which recently refused to reopen the shoe manufacturing industry's code pending action by Congress on extension of the Recovery Act. It was said in official circles in Washington last week that there is considerable doubt in Mr. Rosenblatt's mind as to whether it would not also be best to defer consideration of the film code.

The legislation extending the Recovery Act undoubtedly will make some important changes in the law as now written, possibly to the extent of requiring the revision of all codes and if this is the case, as has been pointed out, changes recommended by the MPTOA would be considered at that time.

John C. Flinn's report on Los Angeles clearance and zoning, which he has been studying as a result of a protest by Fox West Coast over 11 situations in the sector, was sent to the Code Authority's committee on clearance and zoning in New York on Monday. The Los Angeles schedule is expected to become effective March 31.

Dissatisfied with the failure of the Code Authority to act on clearance and zoning complaints in New Haven involving what they believe to be excessive clearance for Loew's College, exhibitors of the Connecticut city have consulted attorneys with reference to instituting an action in the federal court.

Another 30-day extension of the period in which delinquent exhibitors can pay their 1934 code assessments was to be considered by the Code Authority at its meeting on Thursday. The deadline for the first extended period ended Monday. Following breakdown of the 1935 budget, as requested by the NRA, the Code Authority has submitted it to its finance committee, which is expected to approve it for presentation to the Code Authority.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

The Mystery of Edwin Drood

(Universal)

Mystery

From the unfinished novel of murder, mystery and horror, written by Charles Dickens, and uncompleted when he died, Universal has woven an attention-gripping picture, characterized by able execution and excellent performances.

In its combination of mystery murder, romance, highly complicated, and deftly inserted comedy moments, there is inherently something for the exhibitor to sell. The perennial interest of the public in the mystery picture, when strongly played, well cast, should draw patronage. And when the patronage is told that this is the notable, unfinished Dickens story, for which Universal's writers have supplied their own conclusion, the interest should achieve a sharper edge, with the exhibitor handling the grindstone.

It is true that there is rather less mystery than might be supposed, since, although the murderer is not specifically pointed out, it becomes very obvious to the audience, comparatively early in the story, just who the murderer must be. The interest then is in the manner in which he is brought to book, his own undoing and his reactions to approaching doom, and his own occasional moments of remorse.

The cast is reasonably strong in drawing names, and definitely strong in ability. In the role of the murderer (and that gives away no secret) is Claude Rains, who has made for himself a reputation for strongly dramatic portrayals. With him are Douglass Montgomery, Heather Angel and David Manners in particular, while the performance of Forrester Harvey as the drunken caretaker of the ancient English cathedral is a high spot in the picture. The exhibitor obviously has plenty with which to work in the selling.

Rains, choir master in the old cathedral which dominates the English town, is secretly and passionately, in his embittered manner, in love with Miss Angel, who since childhood, so to speak, has been engaged to Rains' nephew and ward, Manners. Miss Angel is no more in love with Manners than he is with her, although both maintain a pretense for appearance's sake. To the town come Montgomery and his sister, from India, and Miss Angel and Montgomery find an immediate mutual attraction. But Montgomery's quick temper gets him into trouble with Manners and the two quarrel violently, chiefly over Miss Angel. Rains arranges that they shall make peace at his home.

The next morning Manners (Edwin Drood) is missing, after a violent storm, and Montgomery, who just then went on a walking tour, is accused by Rains. Montgomery is brought back, held for evidence, but leaves. The day before the disappearance, Miss Angel and Manners agreed to be friends, but not an engaged couple. Montgomery returns in the disguise of an old man (which is a triumph of makeup) and sets to work to trap Rains, whom he suspects, with the aid of Miss Angel's elderly bachelor-guardian.

Harvey, who one night before the disappearance led Rains through the cathedral, again comes into the picture when Montgomery enlists his aid. Discovered in a formerly unused tomb is what is left of the quick-lime-eaten body of Manners, identified by an unusual ring. Rains has followed, finds himself trapped, and flees to the cathedral belfry, pursued by Montgomery and the town's officials. Rains jumps from the belfry, and Montgomery is left free to marry Miss Angel. Rains made away with the unsuspecting rival for the hand of Miss Angel.

Strong, dramatic material, it is excellently done, but perhaps too weighty for children.—AARONSON, New York.

Comedy

This is a straight-away farce comedy of average values with added burlesque gangsterism. The picture, while lacking the advantage of marquise names, makes up for this shortcoming in its exploitation possibilities. Hokum being the element that motivates the story, its action and situations, here isn't a serious moment throughout the short running time. After the start, which is comparatively slow, and the semi-prologue which establishes the character and personality of the hero, there are about three reels of exciting action in which there is a laugh a minute.

Willie is a poor worm clerk continually being urged by his much younger wife, Millicent, to be a man among men. A flop as a parlor entertainer, fired from his job when he dares ask for a raise, and losing his insurance money with which he intends to pay off the mortgage, Willie suddenly changes when he robs Skinner of $2,000 which he believes that shrewd real estate promoter has stolen from him.

In sequences that are full of fun, Willie becomes the talked about man his wife had hoped he would be when he is arrested and thrown into jail after bad man Rocky Bannister robs him of his own money, which he had found, and the roll he stole from Skinner. Cellmate of mobster Mullens, he is delivered from durance vile by Gangster Glynn.

Through a desire of New York papers to create a sensation, meek Willie becomes Baby Face Harrington, the brains behind the Rocky Bannister gang. Taken to the gangster hideout, he and Rocky meet again and that worthy's attention is to put Willie on the spot. Amazed at his own headline importance, Willie basks in glory until he reads that his wife, inspired by Georgie, intends to divorce him. However, learning that the gang intends to rob a bank he contrives to put a note in the bandit car's gas tank and then, with his world shattered, he contemplates suicide by hanging. As the robbers are captured, Willie is interrupted in his deadly plan by Rocky, who hates to see a guy quit under fire. As it turns out, they discover that they both at one time belonged to the same Young Woodman troupe of scouts. As they reminisce and demonstrate their knot tying knowledge, Rocky becomes securely fastened to Willie. The cops arrive and Rocky scrams, dragging the frightened helpless Willie behind him over hill and dale until the officers catch up.

Willie is credited with the capture and is made a grand hero, idolized by those who scoffed at him, and with the rewards he gets for the mobsters' capture he can more than give Millicent everything.

Presented to the patrons as a laugh fest for old and young, adaptable exploitation is limited only by the lengths one cares to go.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Produced by Edgar Selwyn. Directed by Raoul Walsh. Assistant director, Horace Hough. Screen play by Nunnally Johnson and Edwin H. Knopf. Hold 'Em Yale

(Paramount-Rogers)

Comedy

Even though it winds up with quite a bit of football furore and the title has a very definite football significance, "Hold 'Em Yale" is not a football picture. Primarily the production is comedy, dolled up with hectic romance and embellished with great gobs of that hilarious mug menace that Damon Runyon has helped make famous in stories and on the screen.

Clarice Van Cleve is quite a problem to her father as her romantic inclinations continually carry her away from the young man, Hector Wilmot, who the senior Van Cleve fondly hopes will set the girl's heart afire. But Hector is of the Gene Tunney type and would rather read and study than play football, so when along comes the gaudily uniformed aviator, Georgie, Clarice falls head over heels in love with him. But Georgie is a mug, pal and cohort of Sunshine Joe, Liverlips, Sam the Gonoph and Bennie South Street, gents who delve in any racket but now are busily engaged in doing a little ticket scalping on the forthcoming Harvard-Yale game.

Though Georgie likes the idea of Clarice making a fuss over him, the gang thinks she would be more profitable otherwise and frames a kidnaping. The father things it's swell that at last someone has come along who can tame the wilful girl and as she in turn kidnaps the kidnappers, treating them in such manner that they are glad to make a deal with Van Cleve to make a football player out of Hector. Done in unique mobster fashion on the Yale bench, Hector is inserted at a crucial moment, proves a demon on wheels, and Clarice, glad to have a real hero at last, promises to marry him at once, much to the relief of her father and the mugs.

There being plenty of novelty to the show and all of it well done, the picture legitimately permits billing as a laugh-fun fest with patrons assured that it will be possible for them to do everything from smile to laugh heartily and loud. Likewise, patron familiarity with the Runyon brand of entertainment is automatically suggestive of the type of exploitation.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Cardinal Richelieu

(20th Century)

Action Drama

Given half the showmanship it deserves there is no need worrying about "Cardinal Richelieu's" possibilities. Its worth as screen merchandise is unquestioned. George Arliss is the star. Essentially the picture is a thrilling action drama. At the same time it possesses an educational value, which, without intruding upon the primary entertainment purpose, is revealing and inspiring. Thus to understand fully and appreciate its theatric quality, it is not necessary that one should be familiar with the political history background. Although the time is the early 17th century and the locale France, and consequently a costume picture, the story told is as fresh and new as today's news headlines.

The picture is the story of its central character. Richelieu, churchman first but also an amazing political and military genius. In graphic fashion, with no necessary detail ignored as it uniquely balances dialogue with action, it tells the story of the great Cardinal's mighty struggle to create a unified France, with Louis XIII on the throne but with himself the real power, and to hold the country for the Church.

As it unfolds, it runs the full range of entertainment. There is gripping drama, tender romance, laugh provoking comedy, fine acting by star and supporting players, great production value in settings and mass groupings, suspense, colorful, thrilling excitement and even a wild and woolly chase. Direction has so expertly welded each element that for both the intelligentsia and the masses the picture's entertainment carries beyond the former limits of the screen into a world of new drama.

The picture is an intelligent blending of entertainment assets that have continually demonstrated their value, and it is by no means an ordinary picture. It is big in every sense of that word's application to picture quality. It should not be sold in hackneyed style. To get all the money that the attraction demands, it will be necessary to step out of the beaten path. At that, nothing extraordinary is required. The picture itself places everything that is necessary at hand. There are names to sell; a powerful, elevating story; the prestige of a company that has made many successful pictures to serve as a guarantee, novelty in the way in which the straight commercial values are blended, and what is probably most important—understandable human interest entertainment.

No matter what the competition, an aggressive advance campaign that capitalizes the entertainment and exploitation potentialities that are in the show should be ample assurance.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Princess O'Hara

(Universal)

Romantic Drama

Not a story of royalty, this pleasing, sympathetic romance drama is the kind of entertainment that makes many hearts glad. Essentially it's a typical Damon Runyon story of the ten, twenty and thirty hokum variety. But as it is put together with expert blending in romance, drama, comedy, bits of villainy, little dabs of flim-flam, action, excitement and suspense, it has the ingredients for mass appeal. Although the comedy and romantic phases predominate, it presents a lot of heart-touching sorrow, then with a sort of magic wand wave it brings just as much sunshine.

King O'Hara is the last of that royal line of New York hack drivers. His daughter, the Princess, is first seen as a night club dancer and object of affections of taxicab magnate Vic Toledo. In a taxi war, wherein Toledo's two henchmen Louie and Fingers do everything wrong perfectly right, King is killed and his horse, Goldberg, pretty much banged up. Believing that Toledo is responsible for her father's death, Princess, first bringing the horse back to some state of efficiency, takes the reins herself. Toledo, with his henchmen again functioning, see that she has plenty of business, but the Princess will have nothing to do with him personally.

With trouble enough, Vic starts going places with another horse owner, Alberta; who is unaccountably jealous of the Princess. Each has a horse entered in a big race. As both are favorites, he knows it will look bad for him with the gamblers no matter which wins. Goldberg finally giving up the ghost, he orders his cohorts to provide another plug. They steal Alberta's horse and with the aid of Veterinary Spidoni paint him up and give him to the Princess. There's naturally a great hue and cry about the missing thoroughbred and when an accident reveals him in the Princess' possession, things look bad for the girl. However, Miss Van Courtland gets the judge to parole her in her care, as Alberta agrees not to prosecute in case her horse wins the handicap. The race is on and though tired from his cab pulling activities, the horse puts up a great battle against Toledo's entry. Finally Toledo's horse wins, but when he proves that he had legally turned the horse over to Alberta before the race started, the winner is hers and Princess cannot be prosecuted according to the agreement.

Naturally Princess finally understands that Toledo has always been helping her because he loves her and the happy ending has them both driving away in the jehu's old cab.

There's a full quality of good, saleable merchandise in the attraction. Only a little analysis should be necessary to pick out the angles which will have the most local appeal. It may be the production itself or it may be the lead of any of the supporting personalities.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Woman in Red

(First National)

Drama

Wallace Irwin's novel, "North Shore," which has received some attention from the reading public, has been adapted to the screen with the result a better than average story of society, blue bloods and complicated romance, woven about an atmosphere of polo, horse shows and horse training.

It appears basically a film of greatest appeal to the women, toward whom the exhibitor might well direct the major selling emphasis. There is no reason why men should not find the picture entertaining, but it appears one of these cases where the women will be initially attracted and will bring the men to the theatre with them.

The strong name of Barbara Stanwyck in the lead may be found a selling asset. In support are featured Gene Raymond, Genevieve Tobin, John Eldredge. The story's theme may be said to revolve about a conflict between blue blood and red, with red blood—and romance—winning at the end. Involved are difficulties engendered from in-law snobbishness, the backbiting of a jealous woman, an accidental death and a resulting courtroom scene, and the sacrifice of a woman, who risks her future happiness to save an innocent man.

From those ingredients the exhibitor should have little difficulty in the preparation of that type of campaign which should attract women especially, making full use of the origin of the picture, its star and the story's major elements.

Miss Stanwyck, riding show horses in the employ of Miss Tobin, meets Raymond, scion of a once wealthy but financially embarrassed Long Island family, who goes about the country playing polo for wealthy friends to keep their strings of horses in action. They are married, despite the efforts of Miss Tobin, who is in love with Raymond. Eldredge, wealthy, has long pursued Miss Stanwyck.

At the ancestral home, Miss Stanwyck is treated frigidly. She and Raymond start handling the horses of wealthy neighbors, a move which is frowned upon by Raymond's family. Miss Stanwyck borrows the money from Eldredge without telling her husband. Miss Tobin arrives on the scene and begins a campaign of gossip directed at Miss Stanwyck and designed to estrange Raymond. When he is away Miss Stanwyck is invited aboard Eldredge's yacht to help him entertain an important customer. She tries to reach Raymond, fails, and accepts the invitation. The customer shows up intoxicated and with a ne'er-do-well girl companion. Her own clumsiness causes her to topple overboard, she is drowned, and Eldredge, keeping Miss Stanwyck out of it, is held for murder. The case looks bad until Miss Stanwyck, the missing "woman in red," appears in court and saves Eldredge. The family stand by, only to save their good name, but Raymond comes through for his wife, and what she considered to be a complete sacrifice of everything turns out to be a better and firmer understanding between them.

Society drama, it nevertheless moves at a rapid pace, with a touch of polo for action and considerable live drama moving through the story.—Aaronson, New York.

Strangers All

(Radio)

Comedy

Domestic comedy, along the lines made familiar by "Three Cornered Moon," it is distinctly possible that this fast moving interesting attraction may find unusual popularity. The picture is all fun; written, acted and directed to accentuate that entertainment quality. Clean and undoubtedly of interesting familiarity to the vast majority of rank and file audiences, it deals entirely with legitimate and understandable conditions and situations.

The Carter family, as the title indicates, are practically strangers to one another. Mom's sole hope and aim in life is that each one of her weird brood shall succeed in the things he wants. Murray, clothing store proprietor, is the good fellow fall guy. He'll do anything Mom asks him, but his great dream, marriage to Frances, is denied as he must care for the others. Dick (William Bakewell, in a role similar to that he occupied in "Three Cornored Moon"), wants to be an actor and is sure that the only thing that prevents him from being a great screen star is the fact that he's not in Hollywood. Lewis, a speech-making radical, has dedicated his life to rescuing the common man from the clutches of the capitalists. Daughter Lily, away at school, never writes home.

Anyway, the picture strikes its climax when Lily arrives home with a husband. That's a tough blow for Murray, but when he learns that Mom has given Dick $1,000 to go to Hollywood, when the money would just stave off his creditors, he blows up. Funny as it is at home, the radical meeting which Lewis is addressing breaks up in a riot and the young revolutionary is arrested.

In court, with Lily's husband Pat acting as attorney, the family rally to the defense of Lewis. In turn, each gives the boy a grand character with Dick acting his testimony in grand fashion. It remains for Mom to deliver an oration which frees the boy.

Then, as she finally consents to the pleadings of her persistent swain, Mr. Green, the whole gang attend a picture show to see Dick in his first picture where he appears as the meekest of extras.

Fun is the thing to sell in this one, as that element, embellished by light drama, predominates, and love interest is almost completely ignored. A large audience in to see the opening performances should produce word-of-mouth advertising.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

In a Monastery Garden

(R. & S. Corporation)

Drama

An English importation, this picture was produced by Julius Hagen. Its story, told in flashback, is heavily dramatic, unrelieved by lighter moments and lacking in action. The players characteristically employ a pronounced British accent.

The cast is entirely unknown in this country, consequently offering no sales opportunity for the exhibitor. The film acquires its title from that circumstance which finds a player recounting to the abbot in a courtyard of the monastery the events which have caused his brother to enter the institution and from which they seek to induce him to go with them.

Two young English musicians, brothers, the elder possessing the genius, the younger the appearance, visit an old friend of their late father, an Italian count. They both fall in love with the count's attractive daughter, although she is engaged to a trigger-tempered Italian noble and soldier. Her father refuses to permit him to marry his daughter unless he drops an affair he is having with a dancer. The brothers, although they hide their feeling from each other, are bitter.

One night, after a particularly violent quarrel with the dancer, the soldier finds the elder of the English brothers with his fiancee in the garden, and confronts him. At that moment the soldier is shot, by some one unknown. The Englishman is sentenced to life imprisonment. The younger brother and the girl leave for London, where the couple are shortly to be married. Meanwhile, her father makes every effort to have the prisoner freed, and writes him of the engagement of his daughter and the younger brother, who has been composing loudly acclaimed music but which is actually material he has stolen from old compositions of his more gifted brother. Freed, the elder enters the convent, and his brother insists on going to him, his fiancee with him. His story is told to the abbot, but the elder brother, hearing of the stolen music, and of the final clearing of his name by the authorities, realizes the girl loves his brother, and elects to remain in the convent, forcing his brother to promise he never will tell the girl of the theft of the music.

The production itself is technically not of the best, showing the weaknesses of what apparently was hasty work in the studio.—Aaronson, New York.

Distributed by R. & S. Corporation. A Julius Hagen production. Directed by Maurice Elvey. Story by H. Fowler Mear. Adaptation, Michael Barringer. Running time, 77 minutes. Release date, March 12, 1935. Adult audience classification.

Motive for Revenge

(Majestic-Darmour)

Drama

It is quite likely that this picture will surprise those who play it. It is not a big picture; there probably won't be any cycle of similarly based themes following its presentation, but it amply provides the necessary essentials in entertainment worth and merchandising requirements. Built upon a unique but understandable premise, it is an aptly titled action drama; one in which the elements of love interest, comedy, mystery, tragedy, suspense and thrill are deftly combined in support of the motivating idea, as well as a vein of sympathy inspiring human interest.

Bank Clerk Webster, whose salary doesn't permit his purchasing for his wife every little luxurious knick-knack, is goaded into turning thief by his mother-in-law, Mrs. Fleming. Sentenced to jail, graphic prison sequences show how a man's character breaks down. When Webster learns that the wife who has promised to wait for him has divorced him and married William King, he lives only for revenge upon his ex-wife and mother-in-law and successor-husband.

As scenes show him working a vivid mental revenge upon Muriel, he is in her home to be confronted by husband King when the latter is shot. Though both Webster and Muriel have pistols in their hands neither has been fired. Suspicion being attached to Muriel, Webster experiences a change of character and writes a note confessing the crime. Hiding away on a deserted gambling boat, he is joined by Muriel, and in sequences marked by hilariously dumb detective comedy, the pair in a stirring motor boat and auto chase manage to elude the police. In the meantime, Kenilworthy, maid in the King house, has confessed the crime and gives her motive. The finale has the lovers planning to pick up their broken life and getting rid of the interfering mother-in-law by a clever ruse.

"Motive for Revenge" is just what the title implies, plus the added elements of swift moving keep-'em-guessing melodramatic mystery situations, cheerily broken by clever comedy and exciting action. It's not a lavish production, yet there is plenty of production value, all of which aids materially in keeping the show going at an active pace. With that to take care of the appetites of the action-thrill fans, there's plenty of heart-ache and heart-break to enthuse feminine interest. With it all being built around the interfering mother-in-law angle, there's plenty of opportunity to create a campaign to arouse maximum interest in the picture's entertainment value.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced by Larry Darmour. Distributed by Majestic Pictures. Directed by Burt Lynwood. Screen play by Stuart Anthony. Photographed by Herbert Kirkpatrick. Settings by Frank Dexter. Sound recording by Thomas Lambert. Edited by Dwight Caldwell. Music by Lee Zahler. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 65 minutes. Release date not yet set. General audience classification.

be classified as particularly for children, although there is nothing in the film which can be considered objectionable for them. It is merely that in all probability they will be unable to understand or appreciate the story. Vivian Tobin, Russell Hopton and Mary Carr are the cast's adults who will be familiar.

The precocious remarks of little Cora Collins provide the greater portion of the picture's lighter moments, the film for the most part being rather heavily dramatic. The theme secondary to that of the legally abused child is one of marital strife as a result of mother-in-law interference in what was otherwise a happy marriage, an interference through which the child suffers in one way while his mother suffers equally in being deprived of her son.

Miss Tobin quarrels with husband Paul Fix only because of the meddling of his mother. Patching their quarrel, they visit a night club, where Fix is killed in a brawl. Through the efforts of the mother-in-law, Miss Tobin is deprived of her infant son, who is given to Fix's mother. Miss Tobin is given employment by Miss Carr, matron of a day nursery. Five years elapse and Dickie Moore is miserable at his grandmother's home, while his mother is holding annual birthday parties at the nursery for the son she cannot find. When the grandmother dies, Dickie is transferred by the doctor to the nursery under an assumed name, Miss Tobin being unaware it is her son.

Hopton, widower, is the father of Cora, the nursery's star boarder, and most precocious charge. Hopton is in love with Miss Tobin, who refuses to marry him because of her past difficulties. The story reaches its lively climax when the man who killed her husband and whom she previously had known, escapes from the penitentiary, presents himself at the nursery and demands she hide him on threat of revealing her past to the authorities.

The two children, in a playful moment, invade the attic hideout of the criminal and are held by him as hostages, pending his own escape. The children try to get away by crawling across the sloping roof, the criminal brings them back, and a pursuing policeman finishes his career. The child's identity is revealed to his mother and Cora. Sue bestows her blessing on her father and Miss Tobin.

It appears to be in the nature of a midweek attraction.—Aaronson, New York.

La Crise Est Finie

The Depression Is Over

(European Film Corp.)

Musical

Nero Films of France, the producer, and Robert Siodmak, the director, have gone after optimism in a large and hearty musical fashion in this operetta-like picture, which is somewhat different from the run of importations from France to reach this country. It is, for the most part, entertaining material. In so far as exhibition in this country is concerned, it suffers from the natural handicap of a foreign language. However, there are plenty of superimposed translations of dialogue to assist those not understanding the language, which makes for ready understanding of the story.

The music is tuneful, there are numerous comedy situations, and although the picture cannot quite match the American productions in spectacle concoction for musical films, it is well paced and lively. Its story is simple and of no special significance, merely affording an opportunity to bring out the engaging optimism of its title. There is no name in the cast which will be familiar in this country.

It appears that the most logical location for exhibition of the film would be in those metropolitan situations where the showman can count on a number of potential patrons who either are interested in foreign importations or are familiar with the French language.

The story has Nicole, young actress in a revue, hoping for an opportunity to take the star's place, and losing out when the star puts in a belated appearance. A trick is played on the star and Nicole is fired. When her sweetheart, Marcel, the orchestra leader, is about to quit with her, the others of the cast join him. They are all discharged, and, penniless, set off for Paris. They find no jobs, but at the old theatre, now closed, where the troupe's elderly player, once a star, had triumphed, the caretaker is attracted to the leading man, and they are permitted to make the abandoned theatre their home and headquarters.

Marcel composes the music for a new show, titled "The Depression Is Over." The difficulty is finding the wherewithal to put on the revue. Exercising all their ingenuity, members of the cast scour the city, bring in equipment and costumes. When Nicole puts her charm to work, she gets a grand piano from a dealer, but when she is only pleasant, he rents the theatre and would evict the players. A trick locks him in the basement, the word spreads about the town, the opening night is a sell-out, and the play is a success, as is the romance between Nicole and Marcel.—Aaronson, New York.

Tit for Tat

(MGM)

Good Comedy

The generally high comedy standard of the team of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy is maintained in this latest subject, in which the two are the not too intelligent proprietors of an electrical store. Built considerably of slapstick, the comedy has numerous laugh-provoking situations, as the two engage in a bitter tit for tat feud with the owner of a neighboring grocery store, after Hardy, in his own estimation, is insulted. And while the three march back and forth, wrecking havoc on the contents of each store with the goods therein, a potential patron casually enters the electrical shop and finally removes all the stock. Slapstick, but amusing. —Running time, 20 minutes.

Once Over Lightly

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

There are more than a few laughs in this comedy, in which Roscoe Ates of the stuttering tongue is the extremely unfortunate barber. He and his assistant conduct their shop more in the nature of a butcher than barber shop, as witness the faces of their "victims," and when Ates starts a "double or nothing" game with a patron he loses up to and including the cash register. He uses his wife's fur-coat money for a poker game, the plan being that she should call him when he stamps on the floor from above. She falls asleep when he wins, but when he is snowed under, the other boys all get foot ailments, and his wife takes him from the game, with disastrous results—for him. It is an entertaining comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Several Unusual Turns

Something to interest each of several kinds of patron interest is found in this issue. There's the choking of miles of forest by shifting sand (in Douglas county, Oregon), a 24-compartment trailer pullman for pedigreed dogs (Cincinnati), a carwheel tombstone of a railroad messenger boy (Nashville), a fire-walking by the Schingon sect in Japan, the coffin that won't stay put under the dirt floor of a mission church in New Mexico, a traveling dentist, a midget and her 6 ft. 2 partner in a shoe store (Kansas City), a gander that stands sentinel over a Negro boy statue on a hitching post (Prospect, Ky.), Cleveland's oxygen hotel, and the cartoning of baby alligators.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Lively Comedy

The Three Stooges in another of their nonsense concoctions, in which, as usual, they maltreat each other to the best of their considerable ability in maltreatment. The result is for the most part amusing comedy, as comedies go, with especial entertainment for those who particularly enjoy this insane trio of knock-down-and-drag-out comedians. In this case, they are knights of old, who volunteer to guard the queen of a neighboring kingdom from the designs of the prime minister and his men. They guard her, rescue her when she is kidnapped, but in so doing succeed chiefly in knocking out each other, and finally the queen herself.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Mickey's Service Station

(United Artists)

Excellent

The Disney Mickey Mouse standard has hit its high standard in this new subject, in which Mickey, the cow, and Donald, the Duck, operate an automobile service station with the result an entirely enjoyable cartoon comedy subject. The big, peg-legged brute brings his fine car to Mickey, demands that squeaks be elimited in 10 minutes—or else. They go to work, with consequences which must be seen to be appreciated. It cannot fail to draw innumerable laughs. —Running time, nine minutes.

Rainbow Canyon

(MGM-FitzPatrick)

Excellent

As are all of this FitzPatrick Travel Talk series in color, this is excellent and should be of general appeal. The Grand Canyon of the Colorado and Brice Canyon in Utah are pictured in all their amazing color and all the beauty of their strange rock formations. Scenically, as well, the subject is of unusual quality, with incidental vocalization and instrumental music, added to the running commentary, adding considerable to the effectiveness of the short. It appears worth special attention. —Running time, 8 minutes.

Buddy's Theatre

(Vitaphone)

Good Cartoon

One of the Looney Tune cartoon series, this is really entertaining and amusing, as Buddy is manager, ticket taker and projectionist at his picture house. There is real novelty and laugh provocation in Buddy's newsreel, and the feature starring his friend Cookie, whom Buddy rescues from the pursuit of a gorilla. A wholly engaging cartoon short.—Running time, seven minutes.

"BUSTER KEATON IS LEADING THE COMEDY FIELD"

says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, whose veteran critic, W. Ward Marsh, writes:

"Visits to Warner Brother's Hippodrome and the RKO Keith's 105th Street Theaters this week will convince you that Buster Keaton has fairly discovered the true secret for making talkies.

"He is miles ahead of the feature producers today...he has discovered the way to use detail so that it becomes action and his picture 'flows' steadily without interruption by or very much help from dialog.

"I felt that perhaps Buster had blundered into a happy accident when he made 'Palooka from Paducah'...Telling his story of 'Palooka' in pantomime was no mere accident for Keaton. He proves that with 'One Run Elmer'. This is his second feature in his new two-reel series...Keaton is back where he belongs, and at the moment leading the comedy field!

"There is even less dialog in 'One Run Elmer' than in 'Palooka', proving that Keaton does know how to make pictures.

"Here is Buster on the rebound. In fact he's now leading the pack."

Thank You, Mr. Marsh... AND DON'T MISS BUSTER'S THIRD. WE BELIEVE IT PACKS MORE LAUGHS THAN ANY OTHER SHORT SUBJECT HE EVER MADE !

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

No. 111—AUGUST 23, 1933, IS DATE APPLYING TO WAGE SCALES

QUESTION—We are in doubt as to what rule to follow in regards to the operators (projectionists) of our theatre. We have one understanding, while others seem to believe that it is quite different. Therefore, we are forwarding the following question hoping that you can set our mind straight as to what to do:

During June, July and August, 1933, our operators had taken a reduction of 5 per cent in their wages. At this time the code was settled, with the clause of "Wages in effect August, 1933, are to be the standard wage of said operators," etc. How does this, then, affect us. Are we right in believing that the wages they then received (with the five per cent cut) during August is the right wage, or does the code mean that since this was only a temporary reduction we must again pay the wage the operators were receiving before the cut? In other words, do we obey the code by keeping the wages as they were in August, 1933, with the 5 per cent reduction, or must this reduction be brought back again?—PENNSYLVANIA.

ANSWER—The clause says very plainly that projectionists who are directly and regularly employed by exhibitors shall receive not less than the minimum wage and work no longer than the maximum number of hours per week which were in force as of August 23, 1933, in a particular community, but in no event shall the maximum number of working hours exceed 40 per week. In other words, the minimum wages that were in force on August 23, 1933, are the minimum wages to be paid under the motion picture code. The fact that there was in effect a salary reduction at that time has no bearing on the matter.

No. 112—"BANK STUNT", THE CODE AND INFRINGEMENTS

QUESTION—Not being familiar with the legal technicality of copyrights on "Bank Night," I will thank you to kindly advise me in regards to same; also, if the following plan I aim to carry out will be an infringement on copyright of such "Bank Night":

I intend to have cards printed as follows:

Member of
BLANK THEATRE
Cash Club
Meeting Friday and Saturday Nights
Cash Awards Each Night
No. .... Member's Name..............
Address...................

I may use any name for the name of the club, and each ticket or membership card will be numbered and dropped in a box and these same cards used in drawings. I will keep a record book of all members and their numbers so as not to have any duplicate membership cards issued. On Fridays of each week I will draw out one number, and if a winner is not drawn I will add to the "pot" for Saturday night with another drawing of one ticket, and so on.—ILLINOIS.

ANSWER—The inquirer's own lawyer would have to advise him as to whether the "Cash Club" plan described by him, as outlined above, would be an infringement on the copyrighted plan of "Bank Night." (A copy of the "Bank Night" procedure as outlined in the Code Question Box, page 60, January 26, was forwarded to the inquirer for study by him and his lawyer for the purpose of comparison). Affiliated Enterprises, which sells the copyrighted "Bank Night" plan to exhibitors, could take action on any infringement.

We assume that the inquiring exhibitor is aware that lotteries and stage drawings for prizes are a violation of the motion picture code, Part 3, Section 1, Article V-E, when the patron is compelled to purchase a ticket in order to participate.

No. 113—STATUS OF "FIRST RUNS"; RIGHTS IN CLEARANCE

QUESTION—Kindly give me the exact definition of "First Run."

I signed most of my film contracts with a clause: "RUN: FIRST." I belong to the San Francisco zone, located on the Pacific Highway, which runs from San Francisco to Portland. Ten miles south there is a theatre belonging to a circuit of about 65 theatres. Ten miles north there is a theatre belonging to another circuit of about 16 theatres and is served from Portland exchanges (an overlapping zone). Ten miles southeast is a lumber town, and that theatre buys everything selective. I am an independent. We all have the same admission prices.

On account of the big buying power of my competitors most of the exchanges are clearing against me at least seven days, with the excuse that they get a bigger revenue from my competitors, and telling me that the clause "First Run" is understood as first run in my town, and does not mean the first run in the competitive area, as I understood when buying the films. There is not another theatre in my town. I complained to the San Francisco Clearance Board against this arbitrary clearance,and they told me that this matter is up to the "bargains" between distributors and exhibitors.

Please kindly advise me what to do. Shall I try the Grievance Board, or shall I go straight to Mr. Flinn in New York, or maybe to the U. S. courts, charging these corporations with "conspiracy" and practicing of trust unlawfully.—CALIFORNIA.

ANSWER—The term: "First Run" means the initial exhibition of a motoin picture within an area defined by and in the distribution license contract. If the contract merely says: "Run: First," then that means that the exhibitor is given the right to the initial exhibition of the pictures under that conract in the town in which that exhibitor's theatre is located. It would not give him first run clearance over any other competitive area unless such competitive area is specifically defined in the contract.

The Grievance Board apparently was correct in replying that the matter of obtaining clearance over theatres in a competitive area is one involving the economics of bargaining with the exchange when the product was purchased and the contract signed. The exchanges likewise indicated this when they told the inquiring exhibitor that they are giving the circuits at least seven days' clearance over him because "they get a bigger revenue" from his competitors.

The exhibitor was following the correct procedure when he presented his complaint to the Clearance and Zoning Board. The Grievance Board has no connection with or control over clearance and zoning. These are matters intended for the attention of Clearance Boards alone.

Appeals from local board decisions are not made to John C. Flinn in New York, but are made to the Code Authority of the Motion Picture Industry, at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York.

Regarding the question: "Shall I go to the U. S. courts, charging these corporations with 'conspiracy' and practicing of trust unlawfully." To this we can only answer that a competent lawyer is the person to advise in such matters.

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Moissi, Famed As Tragic Actor, Dies

Alexander Moissi, famous European tragic actor, died last week in Vienna, Austria, of congestion of the lungs at the age of 53. An Italian, Moissi gained his greatest fame in Germany, and was long known as the "John Barrymore of Berlin." It was generally agreed that his remarkable voice and diction in three languages were among the most accomplished on the dramatic stage.

He came to New York in 1927 with the group headed by Max Reinhardt, and was held over in his performances in "Everyman," "The Living Corpse," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "The Death of Danton" and "Ghosts." He returned the following season under Morris Gest, later toured South America, and returned to make a talking picture of "The Royal Box," in German, for foreign distribution. The picture was termed a failure by critics, but because of mechanical rather than dramatic faults. Moissi perfected his German that he might make other German films for distribution here, but never accepted the offers that were made later.

Born in Trieste of a poor peasant family, Moissi went to Vienna to cultivate his voice for an operatic career. Penniless, he obtained a theatre job. He was noticed, and advised to study German. Finally he was seen by Reinhardt and taken under his wing, from which time his advance in the theatre was rapid.

Kentucky Theatre Is Sold; Essanoe Continues Operation

The Vernon theatre building at Mount Vernon, Ky., has been sold by the Commonwealth Life Insurance Company of Louisville to Lewis Miller of Mount Vernon for $30,000. The theatre will continue in operation under the direction of the Essanoe Amusement Company. The present lease, not yet expired, was transferred to the new owner, and a new lease is to be drawn.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA

Warner

For many reasons this is the type of entertainment production that showmen should welcome. It is adapted from a sensationally best selling novel, one of the most widely discussed in recent years. It has been adapted to the screen by a writer who numbers many successful screen plays such as "The Key," "British Agent" and "Bordertown" among his credits. "The director, Mervyn LeRoy, is credited recently with "Hi' Nellie," "Happiness Ahead" and "Sweet Adeline," as well as being remembered for "Five Star Final."

Where names, regardless of any other asset, are the dominating interest-creating quality, "Oil for the Lamps of China" has them in plenty. Pat O'Brien, lately in "Here Comes the Navy," "I Sell Anything" and "Devil Dogs of the Air," is starred. Among the featured players are Josephine Hutchinson, who scored in "Happiness Ahead"; Jean Muir, who made her debut in "As the Earth Turns" and later was seen in "Gentlemen Are Born"; Lyle Talbot, John Eldredge, young Ronnie Cosby, Henry O'Neill, Donald Crisp, Arthur Byron, Christian Rub, George Meeker, Florence Fair, John Hyams and Olive Jones. Orientals appear in oriental characters; Willie Fung, Tetsu Komai and Key Luke, seen in "Charlie Chan in Paris," are included.

The locale is China. It portrays strange life in that land and tells the story of a young American, agent of an oil company, who invents a lamp and brings lights to the Chinese and millions to his company. As it tells his romantic dramatic story, it concerns itself with proved entertainment elements. The guiding hand of a woman, wife of the hero, exerts an influence on his life that not only saves him for himself and the company, but for the benefit of the natives who idolize him.

The production has the earmarks of a potential big picture. In dealing with real life in a little known country and actually making that life real and true, it gives promise of being a showmanship feature that will give all who care ample opportunity to exercise their exploitation ingenuity.

SECRET LIVES

Fox

In this production are combined such proved standby entertainment and exploitation assets as love interest, tricky mystery, comedy, murder melodrama, action, suspense. Given glamorous production in personnel and settings, with all the values fulfilling their proper functions, it's the story of a young playwright whose apartment is invaded by an exotic, thinly clad creature one moment after a murder has been committed next door. Flipping a coin to decide whether he shall call the police or make her tell the truth about herself, the writer follows the dictates of romance, and together the pair become involved in an intriguing love affair and a couple of sensational murders.

The feature is based on a story by Ilya Zorn, adapted by Robert Ellis and Helen Logan, with screen play by Samson Raphaelson. Direction is by Bruce Humberstone.

The team of Gilbert Roland and Mona Barrie, that apparently made a favorable patron impression in "Mystery Woman," again are featured. Name value of the principal supporting players is of more than ordinary worth. Included are Adrienne Ames, Herbert Mundin, Donald Cook, Nick Foran and Hardie Albright. Others of lesser note are Marion Clayton, Ray Walker, Akim Tamiroff, Russell Hicks, Rita Rozelle, Paul McVey and Snowflake.

Situations in the story and its atmosphere being of the caliber that on many occasions has demonstrated their mass appeal value, there is also a novelty of basic idea which quite effectively lifts the production out of the formula class. As it permits the selling of many qualities, it also allows concentration upon any one of them and thus provides a wide latitude in adapting its commercial value so that local conditions can be satisfactorily met.

AIR FURY

Columbia

As the title indicates, this is an action, thrill melodrama of the air. Not a war story, it does, however, treat of a very real kind of war, the attempt of a big commercial flying company to put a little rival express-mail line out of business and the diabolical methods used. Highly imaginative in content, it builds its thrill around the use of a new kind of destructive electric ray which shatters planes in the clouds.

The story and screen play are originals by J. Griffin Ray and Grace Neville. Direction is by Al Rogell, recent maker of "Among the Missing" and "Name the Woman."

Fantastic story content, which is, nevertheless not without definite realism, looms as the most outstanding selling quality. With inclusion of two noted fliers in the cast, Wiley Post and Roscoe Turner, there is a certain topicalness that should be productive of unique exploitation. Post's attempt to make a transcontinental stratosphere flight not only was a subject of national news head lines, but the manner in which his effort was mysteriously frustrated was equally publicized. Also his latest unsuccessful effort to span the country has made him the subject of intense interest.

Straight dramatic and romantic roles are occupied by both known and new names. Ralph Bellamy and Tala Birell are teamed in the leads, and while Bellamy is the focal point of the story's drama, both share the comparatively meager romance which supports the dramatic elements. In the part of the man possessing the death ray secret Douglas Dumbrille will be seen. Included among the better known supporting names are Billie Seward, Robert Allen, Geneva Mitchell, Ed Van Sloan and Joe Sauers. Lesser known are the newcomer, Victor Kilian, Robert Middlemass and Wyrley Birch.

MGM

This is a "G-Man" story. With sensational drama, action and thrill, it reveals authentically, if in theatricalized fashion, the fights which men in the service of the Department of Justice are waging in their war against organized crime and criminals. Headline stuff, about which pages have and are being written, it is by no means a gangster story. The department puts one of its own men on the inside, having him become a jailbird and a member of the mob after an exciting jailbreak, in a story that is graphically topical and thereby familiar to almost everyone. Mingling fact with fiction, it picturizes a notorious case in which the "G-Men" spot their quarry, and, though harried on all sides, hound him until his death.

The story and screen play are originals by Wells Root, former newspaperman, whose screen credits include participation in "Black Moon" and "Paris Interlude," and by J. Walter Ruben. Ruben, who during his career at Radio specialized in action thrill pictures, is also directing.

While the cast interpreting the story is large, most of the action is confined to a few principals. Chester Morris, currently in "Society Doctor" and "Princess O'Hara," is starred. A newcomer from the New York stage, Joseph Calleia, makes his screen debut. Romantic interest with Morris is carried by Jean Arthur, currently in "The Whole Town's Talking." Others who are prominent are Paul Hurst, Lewis Stone, Lawrence Wheat and John Hale.

An apparent natural for contact with newspaper and law enforcement agency support, this picture is one of the several now in production dealing with the activities of Department of Justice men. A new subject, it calls for use of the most effective and startling ways possible to create maximum audience interest.

THE CRUSADES

Paramount

As a producer-director of authentically based religious-historical entertainment presented against lavish production backgrounds and scenic values, Cecil B. DeMille stands without rivals. From "The Ten Commandments" and "King of Kings" to "Cleopatra" that has been demonstrated. In this effort, a great spectacle as well as promising romantic, dramatic and thrilling entertainment, he deals with one of history's greatest events.

"The Crusades" is based upon the famous Harold Lamb stories of the stirring events of the days when the armed forces of Christian Europe united to recover Jerusalem and the Holy Lands from the grasp of the infidels. The screen play is by Lamb, Dudley Nichols and Waldemar Young.

Actually it is the romantic love story of King Richard of England, the Lion Hearted, and Berengaria, daughter of the King of Navarre. Although the enmity of the Christians and infidels was great, the King of France feared Richard of England more than any other thing.

No agreement made, both lead their hosts to the Holy Land. Richard is stranded in Navarre. The king of that domain offers his daughter Berengaria in marriage to Richard if he will leave the country. Without seeing the girl, he consents. She joins him and they proceed on. As the conflict of the holy war rages, the girl is captured by Saladin. Still not knowing her, but definitely in love, Richard makes truce with Saladin and breaks his vow to place his sword on the Holy Sepulchre by breaking it in two. Berengaria, taking a piece of the sword, places it there herself, thus enabling Richard to keep his vow. They accept each other for life.

An appealing story related against stirring backgrounds, the cast which will play it is composed of accomplished artists. Loretta Young is Berengaria. Henry Wilcoxen, seen in

IN THE STUDIO CUTTING ROOM

"Cleopatra," is Richard. Ian Keith, noted on stage and screen, plays the role of Saladin. C. Henry Gordon is the King of France and Katherine DeMille his daughter. C. Aubrey Smith is the Hermit and Joseph Schildkraut is Conrad of Montferrat, Richard's enemy. George Barbier is the King of Navarre. In the roles of various other historical figures of the time and occasion will be seen Alan Hale, Montagu Love, Hobart Bosworth, Lumsden Hare, Ramsay Hill, Paul Satoff and the old star of the silent days, Pedro de Cordoba.

NIT WITS

Radio

The combination of Wheeler and Woolsey, plus the title, readily establishes this production's comedy entertainment character. Unlike many of the previous attractions starring this pair, "Nit Wits" is a comedy mystery thriller. It's the kind of show in which the comedians, inventors of a lie-detecting machine, get themselves mixed up with a terrorizing murderer. As love, fun, foolishness, menacing drama and suspense fulfill their allotted functions, the two stumble into a solution that makes them big shot crime detectors.

The yarn is an original by Stuart Palmer, whose specialty is comedy mystery stories, as attested by such pictures as "Murder on the Blackboard" and the current "Murder on a Honeymoon." The screen play is by Al Boasberg, whose adaptability to comedy is well known, his flair for combining it with mystery and thrill is demonstrated by his screen play of "Murder in the Private Car," and Fred Guiol, who collaborated on "Kentucky Kernels." Direction is by George Stevens, who also made "Kentucky Kernels," the latest W & W picture.

Straight comedy romance, plus mystery, the production completely ignores the music and dancing which marked the early Wheeler and Woolsey pictures. Production values which contrast the theme motivation are such as should cause the creation of much unique exploitation, particularly the prominence which is given the "lie-detector."

The support includes Fred Keating, seen in "The Captain Hates the Sea"; Betty Grable, Erik Rhodes, Evelyn Brent, Sleep 'n' Eat, Hale Hamilton and Williams Wells.

MEN ON HER MIND

Warner

This production, adapted from the stage play "Outcast," is a gripping and powerful dramatic romance. It seems to be made to order for its star, Bette Davis, whose work in the similarly atmosphered "Of Human Bondage" made her one of 1934's most talked about artists. The story is that of an ordinary girl who becomes associated with a disappointed-in-marriage socialite, and marries him. When circumstances beyond her control threatens to separate them she fights to save him from the gutter. The story promises tense drama, embellished with sharp irony that accents its humanness yet balances its motivating quality with bright comedy.

The screen play is by Charles Kenyon, whose adaptability to this kind of dramatic entertainment is demonstrated by "Doctor Monica" and "The Firebird." It is directed by Alfred E. Green, maker of "Sweet Music," but also experienced in handling more serious dramatic material, as is evidenced by "Housewife," which also starred Miss Davis; "A Lost Lady" and "Side Streets."

Ian Hunter, noted on both stage and screen, is the man for whom Miss Davis fights not only to hold him for herself, but to regenerate him. The supporting cast presents Katherine Alexander in the role of the jilting woman, who, after her unsuccessful marriage to Colin Clive, tries to win Hunter again. John Eldredge and Philip Reed, both of whom have been seen in several recent Warner productions, are club men friends of Hunters. While the drama of the story evolves around this group, its comedy features Alison Skipworth.

The nature of the story and the personality it heroizes loom as the dominating selling angles. Naturally sophisticated in tenor, it is potentially an adult attraction which calls for the type of publicity essential to a seriously toned problem play.

AGE OF INDISCRETION

MGM

Although the title naturally suggests a flaming youth or otherwise sophisticated entertainment, this producion is acually a drama. Its story is built upon a unique situation and relative reaction. A man, whose wife divorced him that she might marry another who could provide greater luxuries, is found by his ex-mother-in-law in a secluded mountain cabin in the company of his own son and his very appealing secretary. The elderly lady, using that situation to prove that her grandson is not being brought up under the proper surroundings, uses it to evolve all the romance, drama and human interest appeal attached to gaining custody of the child.

The story and screen play are originals by Leon Gordon, who collaborated on "Transatlantic Merry Go Round," and "Tarzan and His Mate" and supplied the dialogue for "Sequoia." Direction is by Emil Ludwig, who made "Man Who Reclaimed His Head" and "Friends of Mr. Sweeney."

In the story, May Robson, currently in "Vanessa" and "Strangers All," will be seen as the grandmother who is the cause of all the excitement. Paul Lukas, now in "The Casino Murder Case," is the man and David Jack Holt is his son. The roles of the secretary is played by Madge Evans, currently in "David Copperfield," and Helen Vinson, now in "Private Worlds, is the luxury-craving ex-wife. Supporting roles are filled by Ralph Forbes, Beryl Mercer, Shirley Ross, Minor Watson, Walter Walker, Christian Rub, Catherine Doucet and Paul Stanton. Also included is the little white-haired dog, Flush, seen in many pictures.

Naturally serious in tone, situations in the story are potentially promising of comedy. This element is not to be overlooked, as in the exploitation of so-termed problem plays it is quite often difficult to create a campaign calculated to interest the greatest number of patrons when the more dramatic elements are concentrated upon solely.

DOUBTING THOMAS

Fox

This feature is adapted from the stage success, "Torch Bearers." It is essentially novel comedy. Mainly it deals with the Little Theatre movement and through Will Rogers and Billie Burke as his wife, the hilarious events that cause women who participate to believe they are the artists for whom the whole world is waiting. It also treats of the troubles that come to a husband who not only has to endure such a domestic condition, but must attend the shows and then find a way to blast them out of his life.

The screen play is by William Conselman, whose most recent credit is the adaptation of "The Little Colonel." Direction is by David Butler, previously associated with Rogers as director of "Handy Andy," and maker of the last two Shirley Temple pictures, "Bright Eyes" and "Little Colonel."

Supporting Rogers in the cast, Billie Burke will be seen as the stage-struck wife. Her known acting technique should enable her to fill the role with plenty to spare. There are many familiar screen names in the cast, and there are also quite a few who are new to motion picture theatre goers. Among the new names are Andrew Tombes, noted stage actor, and Helen Flint, who are making their screen debuts. Among the more familiar personalities are Alison Skipworth, Sterling Holloway, with Rogers in "Life Begins at 40"; Frank Patrick, currently in "Mississippi"; Frank Albertson, Francis Grant, another newcomer; George E. Cooper, Helen Freeman, seen in "Nana" and "Count of Monte Cristo"; Ruth Warren, Johnny Arthur, T. Roy Barnes, John Qualen, Fred Wallace and William Benedict.

As every town has its Little Theatre movement, the show brings a novel premise for comedy exploitation that in many instances may prove a more efficient business builder than cast names, even though Rogers is starred. At this time, it looks as if it should inspire much new showmanship.

THE GLASS KEY

Paramount

As the production pendulum gradually swings back towards the gangster atmosphered brand of entertainment, this production is one of the few to revive all the qualities that made the original gangster films so popular. This story is vivid drama and romance. It was written by Dashiell Hammett, author of "The Thin Man." The screen play is by Kathryn Scola and Kubec Glasmon. It is being directed by Frank Tuttle, who did "Here Is My Heart," "All the King's Horses" and many other successful attractions.

George Raft is featured in the lead in a role that should be glove fitting. As a gambler and first lieutenant of the city's political boss and chief racketeer, he is called upon to solve a murder for which his boss, Edward Arnold, has been framed. The situation, charged with menace and dynamite, is complicated by the fact that the framed man is in love with the dead man's sister and dares not name the killer. Only Raft's ingenuity and ability to fight gangsters with their own weapons enables him to exonerate his boss and pal.

Though romantic interest is not of very great importance, the girl who appears as the woman in the case, Rosaline Culli, is new to picture audiences and seems to possess in looks and personality those qualities which make for popularity. All others are familiar names. Included are Charles Richman, Claire Dodd, Robert Gleckler, Gwinn Williams, Tammany Young, Ray Milland (one of the trio in "Gilded Lily"), Harry Tyler, Dean Jagger, Emma Dunn, Frank Marlowe, Pat Moriarty and Herbert Evans.

With the type of story and lead names providing a basis for graphic exploitation completely identifying the picture's character, the title appears to be of unique value as an exploitation asset.

Paramount Names Six Potential Screen Stars

The Paramount studio on the Coast has named six young feminine players who are adjudged most likely to achieve stardom on the screen. They were chosen by vote of 280 stars, executives, directors and writers. The six are Grace Bradley, Ann Sheridan, Gertrude Michael, Wendy Barrie, Gail Patrick and Katherine DeMille.

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

AFTER the production lull of the last few weeks, big pictures, films of real magnitude, are being prepared by all studios for spring, late summer and early fall release.

Executives here, having been apprised of the box-office results of the public relations campaign, are applying their showmanship to meet the demand, as evidenced by the response to "David Copperfield" and "One Night of Love," and are inclining their output toward classics on the one hand and varied musicals on the other.

Satisfied in its own composite mind that decency can be made to pay, and that the Legion campaign has acted as a leverage on producers, directors and writers, to be more thoughtful and resourceful in their screen expressions, Hollywood has buckled down with renewed fervor to the exigencies of the situation. The following list of forthcoming films attests what is in store for showmen:

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER

"Mutiny on the Bounty"—Clark Gable, Charles Laughton and Robert Montgomery.
"China Seas"—Wallace Beery, Clark Gable and Jean Harlow.
"Anna Karenina" (Leo Tolstoy story)—Greta Garbo and Fredric March.
"Broadway Melody 1935"—Jack Benny.
"The Great Ziegfeld"—Cast to be determined.
"Rise and Shine" (Jerome Kern music)—Ted Lewis and Pinky Tomlin.

FOX FILM

"In Old Kentucky"—Will Rogers.
"Farewell to Fifth Avenue," by Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr.
"George White's 1935 Scandals"—Cast to be announced.
"Way Down East"—Janet Gaynor.
"Curly Top"—Shirley Temple.
"Dante's Inferno"—Spencer Tracey and Claire Trevor.

WARNER BROS.-FIRST NATIONAL

"Captain Blood" (Rafael Sabatini story)—Robert Donat and Jean Muir.
"Black Fury"—Paul Muni.
"Napoleon"—Edward G. Robinson and Bette Davis.
"Oil for the Lamps of China"—Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson.
"A Midsummer Night's Dream" (Shakespeare-Max Reinhardt)—All-star cast.

PARAMOUNT

"So Red the Rose"—Pauline Lord.
"The Crusades" (Cecil B. DeMille)—Loretta Young and Henry Wilcoxon.
"Big Broadcast of 1935"—Jack Oakie.
"Milky Way"—Harold Lloyd.
"Paris in Spring"—Mary Ellis, Tullio Carminati, Ida Lupino.
"Two for Tonight"—Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett.
"Accent on Youth"—Sylvia Sidney and Herbert Marshall.

3 Features, 10 Acts for a Dime

While nothing in the code prevents an exhibitor from running triple bills, Hollywood neighborhod houses, like the Vermont, periodically break forth with a gesture of philanthropy and give their customers fifteen or eighteen reels of feature productions, a newsreel, travelogue and a cartoon.

In down town Los Angeles, many of the Main Street honky-tonks are even more generous. For ten cents, three features and ten vaudeville acts are donated, with many park-bench sleepers taking advantage of a soft seat to sleep in—all for a dime.

Cartoon "Sprouting"

The cartoon is "just starting to sprout in a manner like that of the motion picture itself in the past 20 years," says Leon Schlesinger, who produces "Looney Tunes" and "Merrie Melodies" for distribution by Warner Brothers.

Mr. Schlesinger, who produces thirteen black and white cartoons and thirteen color animateds each year, is definitely switching to the tricolor process for next year's program. There is also a possibility that he will eliminate the black and white entirely.

One-reel operas may also make their debut in animated form from the Schlesinger studios next year. The producer is now working on several ideas using "Carmen" as his trial horse. He is considering three musical cartoon specials. In addition, he is closing a deal for a well-known comic strip.

News Flashes

First Division Productions is soon to embark on a program of feature production, with a quiet lining up of a roster of personalities of the higher bracket to break into the first string houses.

J. J. McCarthy has returned to his home office after spending three weeks on the Coast conferring with studio publicity executives to clean up publicity emanating from Hollywood correspondents. Many of the sensation seeking writers have been called for an accounting and warned that a continuance of such practice would mean elimination from the Hays office credential lists.

To assure the maximum of authenticity in the present cycle of films depicting the activities of federal operatives against crime, the Motion Picture Producers Association has obtained the services of Thomas F. Cullen to act as an advisor on all technical matters concerning these operations. Mr. Cullen is special agent in charge of the New York Division of the Department of Justice and at present is on leave of absence.

The week's production schedule balanced. Seven new pictures went in and seven were completed. With three, MGM dominated in the new work group. Both Radio and Warner finished two pictures.

All the MGM quota are potentially big pictures, because of story or cast values and topical interest. In two of them many of the company's foremost stars will appear. The third is one of the current cycle dealing with the activities of the Department of Justice in its war against crime.

In "Anna Karenina," the several times filmed classic by Count Leo Tolstoy, which Clarence Brown will direct, the cast is headed by Greta Garbo and Fredric March. In support are Basil Rathbone, Maureen O'Sullivan, Freddie Bartholomew, May Robson, Reginald Denny, Reginald Owen and Phoebe Foster. Long in preparation, actual shooting started on "China Seas." An Irving Thalberg production, Wallace Beery, Clark Gable and Jean Harlow are teamed in the leads. Others who will be seen are Lewis Stone, Rosalind Russell, Dudley Digges, William Henry, Edward Brophy, Lillian Bond, Akim Tamiroff and Robert Benchley. Tay Garnett directs. The third of the new trio, "Public Hero No. 1," a "G man" story, will present Chester Morris, Joseph Calleia, Jean Arthur, Paul Hurst, Bert Roach, Lewis Stone.

The new Columbia, "Love Me Forever," is a musical drama romance starring Grace Moore. The cast includes Leo Carrillo, Robert Allen.

Radio began work on "Hooray for Love." A romantic comedy with music, which Walter Lang is directing, the cast will feature Gene Raymond, Pert Kelton, Arthur Byron.

With Sally Eilers starred, Universal started "Alias Mary Dow." Kurt Neumann is directing.

At Mascot, camera work started on "One Frightened Night," a dramatic thriller.

"Becky Sharp" Completed

After many weeks in production, Pioneer Pictures (Radio) completed "Becky Sharp." Entirely in Technicolor, the William Thackeray classic, directed by Rouben Mamoulian, will feature a large cast. Among the more important principals are Miriam Hopkins, Frances Dee, Cedric Hardwicke, Billie Burke, Alison Skipworth, Allen Mowbray, Nigel Bruce, Colin Tapley, G. P. Huntley, Jr., William Ravensham, Charles Richman and William Stack. Also completed was "Village Tale," a drama of small town folk, directed by John Cromwell.

Warner finished shooting on "Oil for the Lamps of China." The story is a best seller by Alice Hobart and was directed by Mervyn LeRoy. Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson are starred. "Dinky" was also moved to the cutting rooms.

"Party Wire" was completed at Columbia. A drama directed by Erle Kenton, the cast features Jean Arthur, Victor Jory, Helen Lowell.

First Division completed the second Hoot Gibson, "Rainbow's End," a western. The cast lists June Gale, Charles Hill, Stanley Blystone.

Paramount completed "Paris in Spring," a comedy romance drama with music, directed by Lewis Milestone.

TALKS WITH MANAGERS ON PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

We have already talked about the necessity for managers being able to determine whether or no there is a competent man in charge of projection in the theatre. Let us now talk about screens.

The selection of screens is a matter demanding expert knowledge. One should examine carefully into the matter of support for the screen surface. Is it of a kind that seems likely to remain in good condition over a considerable period of time? Is it of a kind that can be stretched tightly and perfectly flat? Is it a backing that will not harden quickly so that it cannot be re-stretched in case it becomes necessary. Is it sufficiently heavy to "stand the gaff" of re-stretching after a period of use.

What percentage of the total surface is removed in the process of perforation? If much surface is cut out by perforation, sound will be the gainer, but there will be excessive loss of light. If the contrary, then the loss and gain will be reversed. There must be a happy medium. Here are two letters which I advise you to consider carefully. One is from RCA, through Mr. J. E. Volkmann, who says, "The amount of sound a perforated screen will transmit is very largely governed by the thickness of the screen itself, as well as by the size or aggregate area of its perforations or openings; the thinner the screen and the greater the perforated area per unit area, the greater will be the percentage of sound transmitted. In general, the diameter of the openings should be several times the thickness of the screen.

"Of the screens we have tested in accordance with S. M. P. E. standards, and have approved for use with our equipment, we find them to have a minimum percentage of open area of six to 12 per cent, and a variable thickness of 0.012 to 0.024 of an inch, the smaller values of thickness obtaining for the smaller values of percentage open area."

The other statement comes from Erpi, through Mr. S. K. Wolf, acoustics engineer and former chairman of the screens committee of the S. M. P. E. He says:

"The sound transmitting properties of perforated screens are interdependent upon both the number and size of the perforations and the thickness of the screen itself. In general, the thicker the screen the greater must be the perforated area. The exact optimum percentage of open space is therefore indefinite, being as before stated, dependent upon the thickness of the screen.

"For example, a screen the thickness of which is 0.013 of an inch, having an aggregate open area of five per cent, is quite satisfactory, whereas a screen 0.030 of an inch thick and the same percentage of open area would probably be found unsatisfactory.

"Measurements made some while ago on one commercial screen indicated that an open area of about eight and one half per cent not only was satisfactory with regard to its acoustic performance, but also did not cause too much loss of light. On the other hand the same screen material having perforations amounting, in total, to six per cent, was acoustically unsatisfactory. Smaller open areas are possible on certain types of screens. On the other hand, larger areas will be found necessary for screens of other types. Commercial screens vary from about six per cent to as much as 15 per cent open area. The latter figure seems extreme and probably might, with more careful design be materially reduced without seriously damaging the acoustical performance."

From this it will be observed that care should be exercised in the matter of perforated area. You may observe that thin screens are more efficient in the matter of light (electric power) than thick ones. However, there must be sufficient thickness to insure stability, which of course means in general that small screens may be thinner than large ones—another argument in favor of projecting the smallest picture compatible with seating space dimensions.

And now let us examine into another important phase of screen performance, namely reflection power when new as compared with reflection power after a more or less extended period of use. How often do you test the reflection power of your screen and how do you do it?

There is always a drop-off in reflection power, but its rapidity of course varies with the impurity of the air. It is very rapid in cities where the air is laden with smoke, dust and other impurities. It is quite slow, by comparison, where the air is pure. It occurs much more rapidly in theatres where smoking is permitted and indulged in to a considerable extent. However, regardless of everything, there always is a drop-off in reflection power as time passes.

There is no practical way in which theatre men can make periodical tests that will determine the matter exactly. However, it is quite possible to make very inexpensive tests, in two different ways, that will determine the matter with quite sufficient accuracy for all practical purposes.

First, when a new screen is purchased, oblige the manufacturer to provide you with a strip of the same surface, preferably one foot wide by two feet long though half the width can be made to serve. On the reflection surface of this strip lay a sheet of ordinary blotting paper and wrap the whole in several yards of cheap black cloth, storing the whole on a shelf in a dry, dark closet. If this be carefully done, this strip should suffer no appreciable change in at least one year.

When you wish to test the screen, suspend the sample on the screen, project the white light and note the result. Whatever difference there may be in brilliance as between the screen surface and sample represents loss in reflection power and therefore wasted light—wasted electric power.

The other way is even less trouble. Instead of a sample of the screen surface, a sheet of plain white paper of good quality, such as may be had for a few cents at most any stationer's, is employed, a fresh sheet being obtained for each test. The only fault with this is that it may show considerably higher reflection power than will the new screen surface. This may be tested immediately after the screen is installed, at which time a kind of paper that will most nearly match the screen surface brilliancy may be selected.

Pittsburgh Variety Club To Hold Annual Benefit

The Pittsburgh Variety Club will hold its sixth annual benefit show on the evening of March 31 at the Stanely theatre. It is reported by George D. Tyson, chairman of the publicity committee, that there are comparatively few tickets still unsold. Mike Cullen is general chairman of the affair.

The talent for the stage show is being arranged by John H. Harris and his entertainment committee. Among the personalities scheduled to appear are Bob Crosby, brother of Bing Crosby; Dorsey Brothers, NBC orchestra; Dave Appolon and his orchestra and revue and other acts brought in from New York and Chicago.

Erpi Transfers Hodges and Hickson to Coast Staffs

A. J. Hodges, operating superintendent of the northeast division for Electrical Research Products, was promoted this week to chief technical and commercial contact with the major studio licensees at Hollywood.

D. C. Hickson, who has held a similar position in the southeast division, left New York with Mr. Hodges Wednesday by plane for the coast to become an executive with the company's General Service Studios.

Vonderschmitt Circuit Opens New Indiana House

Vonderschmitt Amusement Enterprises, Indiana circuit, last week opened its seventh theatre in the state, the Vanity at Crawfordsville, where the circuit also operates the Strand. The new theatre, modernistic in design, seats 500. The walls have been covered with acoustically treated board. Guy Hammit, manager of the Strand, will manage the Vanity as well.

FOSTER ATTENDANCE

FILM COUNCILS IN 20 SCHOOLS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Perhaps it will be of interest to you to know what is being done in New Haven to promote greater appreciation of good films as well as greater patronage of the better kind of entertainment.

Last fall at the invitation of the Better Films Council we organized about twenty school motion picture councils in as many schools throughout the city. These councils are composed of pupils of the schools interested in moving pictures. Each council elected a leader and requested the appointment by the principal of a faculty adviser. These councils have weekly meetings at which they read papers, discuss current motion picture values, and study motion pictures production and direction. Outlines published by the National Council of Teachers of English are used in council meetings and in regular class work.

Another phase of the work covers the preview of coming pictures. Each week on Thursday afternoon a picture is shown at one of our junior high schools. This picture has been selected from all the showings to appear the following week in our local theatres as being the best available. Motion picture council leaders, faculty advisers, leaders of all the civic, social, recreational, school, and church groups of the city are invited to attend these previews. Instructions are given to the group of previewers that if they approve of the picture, it is their duty to report back to the group which they represent that it is a good picture and should be patronized by the group. In this way we reach practically every group in the city. We feel certain that this method of advertising good pictures has been highly effective. At least we are certain that practically every member of our better social groups is made to realize that our theatres are presenting worth while entertainment.

We do not set ourselves up as censorship bodies. We encourage attendance at the better shows without saying anything about the others.

As a result of our efforts thus far we know that an increasing number of people are attending our local theatres, who have not been regular patrons of the pictures in the past. Parents who have not attended picture shows in the past and have not allowed their children to attend are now attending the pictures we sponsor and are sending their children to these selected pictures.

I hope this information will be of interest to you.—A. F. Mayhew, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, The Board of Education, New Haven, Conn.

EXHIBITOR WARNS OF TRAILER SCHEME

To the Editor of the Herald:

In order to warn other exhibitors, may I give you the following experience.

Two men called on me several weks ago, and put up a proposition to make a merchant's advertising trailer. Each merchant interested was to pay $3.75 for his name and a ten-word slogan to appear on the film. There were to be two merchants on a frame—in other words, two appearing on the screen at the same time, one in the upper half of the frame, and the other in the lower half. A ghost voice was to give a talk about patronizing home merchants, etc. All money collected by these men was to be turned over to me and when checks were used they were to be made payable to the theatre or me. Then I was to divide up the money in this way: $20 to the film company making the print, one-third the remainder to the theatre for screening costs, and two-thirds to the salesmen. I agreed and signed the screening agreement. Being busy those days when they were canvassing, and unable to contact them, I found that they had collected the money, and left town with all of it. I received a letter from the nearest town that they had not done so well, that the trailer would be on time, that they would see me the following Saturday, and that I would have to pass my profits up this time. I immediately went to all the merchants and had them stop payments on the checks, and found when the checks started coming back in, that my name had been used for endorsement, and that all receipts had been signed with my name.

"I wrote to the company making their film and found they had not turned the order in, nor did they know the weheabouts of the men. So it looks like they saw a chance to be dishonest, and took it.—R. M. Thomason, Crystal Theatre, Ellis, Kan.

FOUND HERALD BEST TEACHER

Twenty years ago I operated a picture theatre after the doctor told me to get out of the newspaper game for a time. The smell of ink, however, proved too much and I drifted back and have remained there ever since. Recently the opportunity presented itself to purchase the local theatre, and I found I had to learn the motion picture language over again. In this, the Herald has been my most valued instructor, with the exhibitor comments being particularly valuable.

Having profited to such an extent from your magazine, I feel that I should add my mite on "What the Picture Did for Me". I will make it a point to contribute to this department in the future.—ROY C. IRVINE, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash.

India's Need Is Technical Skill

Actors, directors and studio equipment in India are the equal of those to be found in Western Europe, but the Indian studios are lacking in technicians who are capable of making the most, in results, of the high grade of equipment at the disposal of the studios, in the opinion of Abdulla Fazalbhoy, founder of India's first major studio, Film City, Bombay, on his return to Bombay recently from a tour of Europe and the United States.

He expressed the belief that there is a wide field for 16 mm. apparatus in India, especially for the education of the country's mass population, and foresaw the adoption of the method by the educational and governmental authorities of the country. There has been a gratifying expansion in the Indian film industry, said Mr. Fazalbhoy, and most of the major studios have installed or are installing the most modern technical equipment. The result is the improvement of the quality of Indian productions, and the opening of a vast new employment field.

Mr. Fazalbhoy noted an unusual increase recently in the number of film houses showing Indian talking films. In Bombay several which previously showed English pictures have turned to the domestic product. When Indian films were first produced only one theatre in Bombay exhibited them, but in the ensuing four years 22 theatres have taken Indian films, with plans set for three more. A new development, said Mr. Fazalbhoy, permits the recording of music on film, which may later be broadcast over the radio through reproducers.

A writer in a recent article in The Illustrated Weekly contends that in the important development of the Indian motion picture, it is necessary that the producers strike out in the direction of pictures which will carry the distinctive mark of Indian tradition and thought. They may borrow all the technical achievement possible from western producers, says this writer, but in the intangibles, they must make their own way, in the production of distinctively Indian films.

Sees Musical Sequences In Color in the Future

Harold Hecht, New York dance director, who collaborated with Josef Berne in the direction of "Gypsy Night," produced by Harry Rapf in Technicolor for MGM, believes that all "musical sequences" will be filmed in natural color within the next few years. The true mood of music can be brought to the audience more effectively by blending with color, the director declared. In the short "Gypsy Night," various sequences were filmed with emphasis on the particular color which most effectively carried out the mood of the music in each instance.

Paramount, MGM Move Offices

Paramount has leased the Samuels Building in Atlanta, a three-story structure, which it will occupy some time in June. MGM's branch office, has moved into new quarters located at 153 Spring Street.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Add signs of Spring: the hustle and bustle along the Row as exhibitors are remodeling and improving their houses. Essaness has just announced a complete remodeling job for the Keystone to cost $40,000. It will be renamed the Mode. The new Beverly theatre for James Coston of Warner circuit is being pushed for opening May 15. Manny Silverman, who operates houses in Kenosha and Milwaukee, has completed construction of the Valencia at Waukegan—a theatre converted from a former dance hall. These are only a few instances in what is undoubtedly the biggest activity in theatre remodeling since 1929.

Paramount Plans Wide Campaign on West Film

A nationwide day and date release schedule in more than 100 key cities has been arranged for May 1 by Paramount in connection with Mae West's new picture, "Goin' to Town." Cash prizes of $1,500 for the best advertising, publicity and exploitation campaigns on the picture are a feature of the release campaign for exhibitors playing the film between May 1 and May 10.

The plan was developed by Neil Agnew, sales manager; Robert Gillham, director of advertising and publicity, and Alec Moss, exploitation manager. A special press book supplement will be issued. Campaigns must be in the mail by May 31 to be eligible. Judges are Oscar Doob, Loew's; Mort Blumenstock, Warner Theatres; John Dowd, RKO Theatres; Milton Feld, president of Monarch Theatres, and Mr. Moss.

McCormick to Coast After Circle Opening

S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising and publicity for RKO Radio, has gone to the Coast studio for conferences on advertising and publicity problems in connection with forthcoming product, following his "guest management" of the Indianapolis Circle for one evening. J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Alamo, Texas

Dear Herald:

We drove down to Brownsville yesterday on purpose to see J. C. Fanning, who operates the Capitol theatre, and when we got there we found out that J. C. was sick and could not see us. If you will remember, he romped all over us in a recent HERALD because we did not stop and call on him when we went through Brownsville over to Matamorros, Mexico, but that was because we had a party with us who were anxious to get back home and wouldn't stop long enough for us to call on him. We are sorry J. C.; we merit all you want to say about us, but we hope you soon get well.

Since we couldn't visit J. C. and since we had one gentleman with us who was 92 years old and who had never seen salt water, we drove down to Boca Chica so he could see the Gulf of Mexico.

Named After 'Em Both

If you have never seen Boca Chica you have never lost a great deal. J. C. King, who operates both theatres in Harlingen, gave us a full history of the city, and J. C. is the recognized historian of Southeast Texas. He says that the town was founded by an Indian chief by the name of Boca and that he married a Mexican squaw by the name of Chica and that he put the two names together and named the town Boca Chica.

He says that Chief Boca founded the town soon after they put water in the Gulf and that he built the place right down close to the edge of the water so he could wade out and catch a mess of perch for breakfast while Chica was taking little Fifi out for his morning airing (his name was Fifi).

In the business section of the city we found one shack which was occupied by a couple of fellows and these two, together with the shack, composed the entire population and the entire business and residential section of the city. One young fellow said he was the alderman from the fourth ward and the other one was the chief of police. The alderman said he came from Tennessee and the chief of police looked like he came from Grindstone, South Dakota.

The town has no north and no south but it is bounded on the east by the Gulf of Mexico and on the west by some sand dunes and the state of Texas. In telling us the history of the place J. C. didn't give us the politics of the town but we presume it went unanimous. If you want to know any more about Boca Chica just write to J. C. King of Harlingen.

What makes us pretty doggone sore is when the leaders of both political parties are hunting for a candidate to run on their ticket for the presidency they always overlook the radio crooners and leaders of jazz orchestras. There's no darn sense in acting that way.

Last night we went down to McAllen to see "David Copperfield," a picture based on a story that was written by a guy named Dickinson, or Jones, we don't remember which, but they put it on the screen and put Maureen O'Sullivan in it to play the part of David's wife. Maureen has always been one of our favorite screen players, but when she held a bench-legged, pug-nosed, poodle pothound in her arms, with a blue ribbon around its neck, and fondled and kissed it and handed it to her husband to kiss, it was rather more than Shine Mason's pass allowed us to see, so we got up and went out to a drug store and got a dose of castor oil and six pink pills for pale people.

Just Too Much

Whenever we see a girl or woman fondling and kissing a cur pup it makes us wonder if the white race has really risen above the level of the monkey family. We are sorry that Maureen did this for hereafter, whenever we see her on the screen, we will be reminded of the scene in David Copperfield wherein the director required her to kiss a ki-yi pup. This picture will most likely be given four stars by critics who know good pictures, which will be perfectly all right with us, but we want to thank Shine Mason for sending us passes to his theatre. It was very nice of him and we shall always remember his kindness. The question is: if it wasn't for Shine and his two theatres, where would McAllen be?

As for the Sharks—

You remember we promised to tell you about catching some sharks. Well, the other day Bob Smith of the Mission theatre at Mission drove up here with his wife and son and they stopped and grabbed onto us to go down fishing with them at Red Fish bay. We went down there and Bob hired a motor boat to take us out about five miles out in the bay and we would have caught seven or eight big sharks but they wouldn't bite because there were none there.

After we found that the sharks were all gone we changed our bait and caught a lot of red fish, trout, croakers (whatever that is) and Bob caught a drum that looked a lot like a sea bass, and Mrs. Smith yanked out several red fish that she had to throw back because of their size. (The law of Texas won't allow people to keep them over seven feet long.) And then that evening she cooked some fish for dinner, and listen, Elmer, if you ever have her cook fish for you once you will never call for huckleberry pie after that.

That man Townsend from California ought to be ashamed of himself for going down to Washington and busting into Congress with his Old Age Pension plan right at a time when the boys are busy in a draw poker game. It always made us sore, when we pick up a queen full, for someone to come and call us out to try and borrow a quarter.

When we were eating dinner in a cafe down at Point Isabel the other day we called the waitress over to us and said, "Say Gertie, do you know the best way to put salt in a salt shaker?" and she replied, "No, I don't know as I do. How do you do it?" And we said, "Well, just take the shaker in your left hand and unscrew the lid and pour the salt in at the top." She turned around to leave and said, "Oh, you think you are smart, don't you."

If it weren't for the six gray hairs that stand straight up on our gourd we'd be as bald as Shine Mason who runs the Palace and Queen theatres in McAllen. Shine was playing Shirley Temple in "Little Colonel" last night and he invited us down to see the pictures.

We saw Shirley not long ago in "Bright Eyes" and it was our opinion that she never would do a better thing in her life than "Bright Eyes," but now she's got us out on a limb. "The Little Colonel" is plenty good enough for anybody.

We are leaving the valley for Corpus Christi next Saturday. We dislike to leave the valley, mainly on account of Shine Mason, and Bob Smith of Mission, but then, we expect to find some more.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Capitol

A WALTZ BY STRAUSS: Gustav Froelich, Maria Paudler—This is a picture all in German and it was a great picture. The life of the master composer Strauss and all of his beautiful waltzes. The picture has an appeal to three types of audiences. First, the German language; second, the idea of seeing a foreign made picture; third, the students of music and music lovers who like the music from the masters. This is a truly great picture and we did a good business on it considering the times, etc. Of course, it is nothing like the business that we did in foreign two years ago like the French picture "A Nous La Liberte," but the German picture will go down as a success even if it does not do such a big business, because we have the satisfaction of playing a beautiful picture and giving our patrons a chance to see a picture which New York, Chicago and other large cities have had. Also, it is good to know that everybody who saw it enjoyed it to the fullest extent. The recording was very well done considering it was produced in Germany. The print was in good condition. It held good audiences for the entire four days. Running time, 89 minutes. Played March 13-16.—Albert Heffernan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

Columbia

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—The most thrilling race picture I have ever shown. My audience very near jerked my seats loose from the floor. It is just one of those pictures that you could see over and over again and never get tired of it. Thanks to Columbia. I think they are showing the major companies how to make good pictures. Running time, 102 minutes. Played February 10-12.—E. J. Pennell, Berrien Theatre, Berrien Springs, Mich. General patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Fay Wray, Victor Jory—Strictly a program picture that I consider only fair. It did well enough, however, on a double bill.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Fay Wray, Victor Jory—Mostly an action drama with very little comedy but it moves along rapidly enough to hold the patrons' interest and leave them quite well satisfied. May Robson possibly does not quite equal her work in "Lady By Choice," but even so, she is good. Running time, seven reels. Played March 8-9. —G. A. Van Fradenburg, The Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

SPEED WINGS: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—An old one full of action that pleased. Played March 20-21.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

THAT'S GRATITUDE: Frank Craven, Sheila Mannors, Charles Sabin, Mary Carlisle—Played this on a double bill Saturday and Friday and pleased a good crowd. A very good comedy and clean. No smut but good comedy. The star and all the cast good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

WESTERNER, THE: Tim McCoy, Marian Shilling—The best Tim McCoy yet. Don't pass it up. Running time, six reels. Played March 8-9.—E. J. Pennell, Berrien Theatre, Berrien Springs, Mich. General patronage.

First Division

GUNFIRE: Rex Bell—Good enough for a Western but the print was so dark it ruined the picture. played March 5.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

First National

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell—A nice picture, one that will please most any kind of an audience, although our box office was off. Played January 27-28.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck, Lyle Talbot —We showed this picture on "Bank Night" and our patrons came because of "Bank Night" and expected to be disappointed in the picture. Instead, they were fooled and were well entertained. Running time, 61 minutes. Played Feb. 28.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck—Rather a weak story in which Barbara Stanwyck falls in and out of love with considerable speed. Good acting but not much else to recommend it. Not many favorable comments on this one. Running time, 61 minutes. Played February 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

MAYBE IT'S LOVE: Gloria Stuart, Ross Alexander—This is a surprise picture. Pleased better than a lot of the much advertised specials. The cast means very little to my patrons and the title was not much at the box office but it sure pleased those who came. Joseph Cawthorn is great while Ruth Donnelly and Frank McHugh give an excellent performance. Just an all round good show that will please. Running time, 62 minutes. Played March 16-17.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Warner Baxter, Janet Gayner—Rather entertaining despite a fantastic story. It pleased, although a few expected something better. Comedy predominates and picture is an obvious attempt at a high moral tone to offset the inconsistency of girl's living with two men. Ending occurs on Easter Sunday and picture is designed for Lenten season.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: A very clever comedy drama—wouldn't call it musical comedy—that seemed to please, and box office receipts were very satisfactory. Played February 3-4.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—This picture is just as fine as Mr. Charles S. Edwards, veteran exhibitor, reports it to be. Our audiences were enthusiastic in their praise. It is beautifully produced and the acting is thoroughly human. By all means give this picture the wholehearted exploitation it deserves.—J. N. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Fox

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tow Brown, Anita Louise —A dandy little college picture that will fully satisfy the younger set. Played February 16.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Brought people into the theatre whom we had never seen before, and how they raved. The biggest little star is right. That little Jane Withers turned in a great performance that threatened to steal the show at times. Business fine and audience re-action just about 100%-plus. Running time, 83 minutes. Played March 3-5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town. and rural patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—This little lady is nothing less than sensational. She draws people to the theatre who seldom come. She is a favorite with every class of patronage and a tonic to the box office. "Bright Eyes" received perfect audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—The best Shirley Temple yet. If we could only exhibit more pictures like this, I think our patrons would soon realize that there is such a thing as good clean pictures. Running time, 83 minutes. Played February 24-25.—E. J. Pennell, Berrien Theatre, Berrien Springs, Mich. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—Wonderful. Turned 'em away. Outdrew anything I ever ran. If they had only let me have some of this average to apply on my losses on "Love Time," "Pursued," "Marie Galante," and a few others, I would have been even. Played March 7-8.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

COMING OUT PARTY: Gene Raymond—Ran this rather late but younger set liked it and box office receipts satisfactory. Played February 26-27—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper City, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—The critics have not been as favorable to this as they were to the several Rogers vehicles previous, but for some reason we did more business than on any other of this star's pictures with the exception of "David Harum." It pleased, too, besides drawing many into the theatre who had never been here before. Running time, 80 minutes. Played March 10-11-12.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—This, like all other Will Rogers pictures, received fine audience response. It is a good picture, entertatining from start to finish.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Stepin Fetchit very good. You can really understand him in this picture. Will Rogers, of course, is always good, no difference what character he may take. But I wish Fox would quit making him support so many other stars. After all, we have only got one Will Rogers, so cut him loose. There is no one going to get tired of hearing him talk. Running time, nine reels. Played March 17-19.—E. J. Pennell, Berrien Theatre, Berrien Springs, Mich. General patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—This kind of story is right down Will's alley and his best to date. Like all Rogers it drew and pleased. Played February 14-15.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DUDE RANGER: George O'Brien—A very good western with beautiful scenery, cattle rustling, broncho busting, romance and mystery enough to hold the interest to the last reel. Westerns are liked here. Running time, 65 minutes. Played March 13-14.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Just a little draggy in spots but with that exception will rate as an average programer. Business only average. Played February 2.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter—Nearest nothing I ever ran that was supposed to be a good picture. Business away off. Played March 9th.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers, Henry B. Walthall. —The best Will Rogers show I have exhibited. Henry B. Walthall steals the show. His speech on the witness stand is the high light of the show. This has all the romance and pathos of the days following the war. No complaints about this one. Had been shown in three adjoining towns and this did not help the box office. Running time, 70 minutes. Played February 27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: Lew Ayres—A very clever comedy but failed miserably at box office. Played February 24-25—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper City, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper—This program picture pleased our patrons. It was a part of what we called our "five feature show" with a Popeye cartoon, Joe Penner short, color cartoon, "The Brave Tin Soldier," and Bing Crosby in "I Surrender Dear." —J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal theatres, Fort Forth, Texas. General patronage.

GB Pictures

EVERGREEN: Jessie Matthews—This is a pleasant though not important picture which has a great deal of dancing and singing. Jessie Matthews, the feminine lead, is not very beautiful but she is versatile. At the preview, the audience reaction was satisfactory.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Invincible

GHOST WALKS, THE: John Miljan, June Collyer—Average picture, not too bad. More comedy than terror.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Majestic

SCARLET LETTER, THE: Colleen Moore—Did a nice business on this picture account of so many having read the book and to these who had read the book, the picture satisfied. To the others, it was a disappointment. Recording poor. Played January 31-February 1.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard—Best one yet from Ken and drew extra business on Saturday. Played January 26.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—A great drawing card for children, and many grown-ups didn't come, thinking it was entirely a child's picture. The men and women who did come were surprised. This is entertaining for all who come to see it. Running time, 76 minutes. Played March 1-2.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Robert Young, Betty Furness, Stuart Erwin—A splendid football story. Action, comedy and clean entertainment by a very able cast of characters. Played March 13.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET, THE: Norma Shearer, Frederic March—This is truly a wonderful show but no draw in a small town. Played January 20-21.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: Freddie Bartholomew, W. C. Fields—Unquestionably a high class picture that will add tremendously to goodwill toward the theatre. It may not draw the "rough and readys" but will get the ones who come only once a year. Played February 10.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—William Powell and Myrna Loy are always good. But this picture did very poor business. I think the title could have been changed and it would have helped a lot. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 27-28.—E. J. Pennell, Berrien Theatre, Berrien Springs, Mich. General patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: Myrna Loy, William Powell—This is a swell show but due to severe storm, was only able to play picture one night as power lines were all down. However, would advise exhibitors to step on it because picture is sure to please. Both stars turn in splendid performance and Isabel Jewell is still being talked about. Running time, 80 minutes. Played March 3.—Esther Schaber, Senator Theatre, Ashley, N. D. Small city and rural patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Not as good as "Thin Man" but so much better than the average, we won't kick. Business was below average. Why we are unable to say, as it was no fault of the picture. Played March 10-11.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—A superb piece of dramatic art which will perfectly satisfy anyone who likes a well-balanced thrilling drama. Running time, 80 minutes. Played March 15-16.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, The Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Clark Gable—With all due respect to these stars and telling what was the reaction of most of the audience that I contacted, most of them thought that it was half-witted direction. Montgomery had gone all way and lost his. Outside of the intelligentsia, it was disliked, and Metro and Crawford may as well know it. A lot of it was plain silly. Butterworth saved the picture if that was possible.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery—This picture being so highly advertised was partly disappointing to our patrons. Their expectations were too high and therefore weren't so well pleased. The rest of our customers who didn't expect so much were well pleased and congratulated on the picture. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Feb. 10-11.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery—Very good, plenty of comedy, good cast and a fair story. Pleased everyone and has plenty of names to get them in. Did better than average business here. Running time, 81 minutes. Played March 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—This is one of the best pictures we've had the pleasure of running in our theatre for years. The three stars absolutely wonderful. I just can't rave enough and our crowd say they just went wild. Many came back the second night. My advice is to play on very best days. Spend a little extra on advertising and pay your back taxes. Running time, 85 minutes. Played February 3.—Esther Schaber, Senator Theatre, Ashley, N. D. Small city and rural patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—A splendid entertaining picture. Fine story and clean, great acting by all three of the stars. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction here. Played March 3-4.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—A natural if there ever was one for the large or small town. If more like this were made picture show business would be a pleasure. Business above average. Played February 17-18.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper City, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable—A good picture and business very satisfactory. Played January 24-25.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Personally thought Jeanette MacDonald very good. I think she has a marvellous voice. But had plenty of "kicks" that the picture was too "sexie." Running time, 100 minutes. Played February 3-4.—E. J. Pennell, Berrien Theatre, Berrien Springs, Mich. General patronage.

SOCIETY DOCTOR: Chester Morris, Virginia Bruce—A good hospital story. These hospital shows seem to go over. Billie Burke and Robert Taylor are especially good. This one holds the interest to the last dramatic act when Morris directs a dangerous operation on himself. Advertise this plenty. Running time, 68 minutes. Played March 9-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley, May Robson, Gladys George—This I call a mighty good entertaining program picture. Story good and a fine cast of characters.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller—A wonderful picture. Every minute enjoyed here. Old but that didn't keep them away. Running time, 105 minutes. Played March 14-15.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

Monogram

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney—Very good picture. Very poor recording. Played March 16.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney—An average program picture to below average business. No drawing card in the names. Played February 12-13.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker—Average program one day picture. Drew fair. Running time, 69 minutes. Played March 13.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MEN: Frankie Darro—This picture netted us $9.00 more than "Bright Eyes," which we ran on same days of week. If the independent producers will make enough pictures like this and continue to sell them at a live and let live price, our worries will be over. Any time the major companies have a picture that will really get the money, they fix it so that they will come in for their share with a percentage agreement tied to it. That would be ok if they would be willing to share the losses we take on all the lemons that are forced down our throat. Played March 14-15.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

LOST IN THE STRATOSPHERE: June Collyer, William Cagney—This picture gave us as near 100 per cent satisfaction as any picture we have run in some time. It had nice, clear photography, splendid sound, plenty of action, comedy, beautiful shots of the balloon inflation in the hills. And Jimmy, your little brother Willie is better looking than you are. All in all, this is a very satisfactory program picture. Running time, 64 minutes. Played March 1-2.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

LOST IN THE STRATOSPHERE: A very good picture for Saturday showing. Played February 23—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper City, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

NUT FARM, THE: Wallace Ford—This is a swell picture. It had excellent photography, excellent story, well directed, but lacked the cast to draw the patrons. Heard many compliments from those who saw it. Played February 3-5.—Al Johnston, Rialto Theatre, Jacksonville, Texas. Small town patronage.

REDHEAD: Bruce Cabot, Grace Bradley—This is another splendid picture from Monogram and done a nice business on it. It is way above the average run of program pictures. This picture sure pleased my patrons and they were not backward in telling me so. A number compared this picture with Columbia's "It Happened One Night" and we all know this was plenty good. Running time, 76 minutes. Played March 15-16.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

WEST OF THE DIVIDE: John Wayne—Good western for one day. Fair drawing power. Running time, 60 minutes. Played March 16.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Mary Ellis, Carl Brison—Very good singing. Better than Paramount's specials. Better than "Here Is My Heart." Played March 13-14.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—Raymond and Sidney proved to be a great team and was a good drawing card. All patrons were well pleased and told us so. Many customers had been looking forward to seeing this picture and they weren't disappointed. Running time, 79 minutes. Played February 3-4.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—Mae West all washed up in our town. Why didn't some exhibitor put me wise to this one? I'm still in hiding and don't know when I dare come out. Had so many walkouts almost ran the picture for myself and the staff. Played to lowest gross since in business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 10.—Esther Schaber, Senator Theatre, Ashley, N. D. Small city and rural patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie—This has what it takes to bring them in and send them out happy. Not for the sophisticated trade, but right up the alley for a ten-strike with the small town trade. Lots of pep, good music and of course Joe and Goo-Goo. Put 'em all together and what do you get? Box office. Running time, 84 minutes. Played March 1-2.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross—We played this picture on Sunday and Monday and had a nice crowd. It pleased all and proved to be a good box office attraction. Running time, 83 minutes. Played February 24-25.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross—This proved the best drawing card in some time. This is a worthy successor to "College Humor." It seems as if Paramount could profitably adopt the making of a college picture annually, similar to Warner's "Gold Diggers." Paramount is on the right track with the "Big Broadcast of 1935." The annual college picture could either be called College Humor of 1935 or 1936 or College Rhythm of the different years. How much Joe Penner was responsible for the drawing power of this can better be told in his next picture, but I assume he had considerable to do with it for without him a big part of the entertainment would be lacking.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle—Not as good as "All the King's Horses." Kitty has a nice voice but she wouldn't do in a beauty show. Is Bing getting tiresome or am I getting old? At any rate he wasn't an extra draw in this picture. Played March 16-17.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby—About on par with other Crosby pictures. Did average business here with no audible complaints. So it must be passable. Played March 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—There's magic in the name of Zane Grey as far as small town patrons are concerned. Then too they apparently remember Jackie Coogan and the combination of the two worked to a decided advantage. Business plenty good and audience reaction most favorable. Running time, 58 minutes. Played March 8-9.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—Did something I never did before. Ran this on Sunday and Monday, and in a downpour of rain did the best Sunday business for some time. And the picture pleased the customers, so everybody was happy. Played February 10-11.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—Good comedy but away below average draw. Played March 9-10.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields—Take a two-reel comedy, stretch it out to seven reels and what do you get, me maties? First you get a bill for a feature, then you get the royal razz from the patrons, and then you get mad. Sure it's funny but you can't stretch two reels of laughs into seven without spreading them pretty thin. No business and audience reaction mildly favorable. Running time, 68 minutes. Played March 6-7.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—We made the mistake in booking this for three days only. It's good for solid week in any size theatre. Even now it has greater box office value than anything we, have shown excepting "Broadway Bill." Tell 'em about it and sit back and take in the money.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord—Wonderful picture but a great disappointment at box office. The work of Pauline Lord cannot be excelled. Why they did not turn out to see it is beyond me, but they didn't. Played March 3-4.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple—If you have not shown this one as yet, do, as it almost topped my best Sunday's business, which goes to show this little star is still at her peak. Used 2 days, Sunday and Monday.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett—This picture was shown on Bargain Night and our customers expected to be greatly disappointed because of it being a Colonial picture. Everyone came out smiling and were greatly pleased. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Feb. 12-13.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie—Rather a weak sister. Didn't draw and didn't please. Played February 21-22.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper City, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Pathe

KING OF KINGS: H. B. Warner—I booked this one for two days and did 40 per cent above average business. This picture is in sound but draws as good as it did when it was first made. Sunday classes attended the show in groups of 30, and saw many strange faces in the audience. All who saw it said it was the best picture of that type they had ever seen. Hung out SRO sign th esecond day of the picture.—Al Johnston, Rialto Theatre, Jacksonville, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Somewhat disappointed in this. Not as good as I expected from these stars. Business only average. Played January 22-23.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley—Very good picture but not enough action to suit most patrons. Did just average business here. Played February 23.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GIGOLETTE: Adrienne Ames—This one lets you down at the end like a load of brick. Has some mighty clever lines and shows signs at times of going to town but something I cannot explain makes it a very poor picture, poor from entertainment, poor from box office angle. It is my opinion you could spend all the money in the world trying to put this across and fail.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—A nutty comedy but the cash customers liked it so that's all that's necessary. Very good business here. Played February 28.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn—A very good picture of its kind but we're getting too many of the same type. The public is getting tired of these socalled nice pictures. I don't mean that we must have a lot of smut but something with a little pep and good clean comedy. However, this is a better picture than "Little Women" and will please better. Done a fair business. Running time, 102 minutes. Played February 24.—Esther Schaber, Senator Theatre, Ashley, N. D. Small city and rural patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—Story value in this seems worthy of the effort and Lederer, who has one of the most fascinating voices heard in a long time, does remarkably well. Ginger Rogers, as you must know, handles a part like she has here as well as she does the musical ones. The picture to me at times reaches the very heights, but the weak spots tear it down, so that you have a poor picture which will not do average business for you unless you can think up something better than I did to put it over. Played 4 days first part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—This picture was shown on bargain night and our customers were well pleased with it. Rogers being well known needed no introduction to the public but Lederer made a great hit and is becoming popular. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Feb. 5-6.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Ginger Gogers, Francis Lederer—This is a·mighty good picture and satisfied all we got in to see it. But it did not draw any business as a special. If I had played as a program picture, would have done better. Story very interesting and both stars and balance of cast fine. Us guys out in the sticks have no chance to preview these pictures and the reports from the big towns are no good to us. Played March 10-11.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and town patronage.

HELP FOR EXHIBITORS PLAYING "SPOT" FILMS

"I have always read these items in the Herald but never took time out to write you," reports Ted Siler of the Dickinson Theatre at Hiawatha, Kan. "They seem to be too far behind to do me much good as I am playing the picture 'Hot'.

"Maybe some of the rest of the exhibitors can derive a little help from me."

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix—A very good action picture. Dix always draws well here. This is different from the ordinary westerns and was very well liked. Played to a good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 7.—Esther Schaber, Senator Theatre, Ashley, N. D. Small city and rural patronage.

WOMAN IN THE DARK: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—A very good program picture that did not draw film rental. Good but not strong enough to draw any business. Satisfied the few we got in.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

United Artists

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—This picture being United Artists' master production, pleased everyone who came to see it. If well advertised this picture will prove to be one of the greatest box office attractions of the year and no one will be disappointed with it. Running time, 113 minutes. Played March 3-4.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou—Just fair. Not a big draw. Up to this picture Beery was one of the best draws we ever had. Played March 6-7.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

SCARLET PIMPERNEL, THE: Leslie Howard—Very good costume picture but no draw at box office. Running time, 95 minutes. Played March 11-12.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND: Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Jack Benny—A mighty fine piece of entertainment. The story is held together better than most "Grand Hotel" type of story. The musical and spectacular numbers are well worth while. I hadn't seen Jack Benny in quite some time and I hope he will be seen in pictures more frequently. Mitzi Green shows real possibilities and in time may occupy top place if properly cast. Business above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

CRIMSON TRAIL, THE: Buck Jones—To date this is the best picture Buck Jones ever played in. Hung out SRO sign the two days that I played it here. If your Western fans like action pictures, dont' fail to book this one.—Al Johnston, Rialto Theatre, Jacksonville, Texas. Small town patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—As clever a comedy drama as you could wish for, yet it had no drawing power. Pleased all those we could get out to see it. Played March 12-13.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—With all the opportunity and stars that Universal had in this one, it should have been a "wow" at the box office. It seems all Universal did on this one was "sluff" off lots of dough on the actors but didn't think about the story. Did fair at the box office the first two days but on the third day "flopped." Played December 17-18.—Al Johnston, Rialto Theatre, Jacksonville, Texas. Small town patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blaine—A fair program picture which our patrons enjoyed.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

I GIVE MY LOVE: Wynne Gibson—A nice program picture. Wynne Gibson extra good in the role she portrays. Business below average but no fault of picture. Played February 28, March 1—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper City, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—This picture is one of the finest I have ever seen. It is original, marvellously acted and superbly produced. It has both class and mass appeal and went over 100 per cent with our patrons.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—"A masterpiece" describes it fully and it is a drawing card at the box office.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LET'S TALK IT OVER: Chester Morris, Mae Clark—A nice little program picture that failed at the box-office. Played January 29-30.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

NOTORIOUS GENTLEMAN, A: Charles Bickford, Helen Vinson—Used as a surprise preview feature, this filled the bill nicely. It's a murder mystery with the audience in on the secret all the time. Cleverly worked out plot that held the interest. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 9.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RENDEZVOUS AT MIDNIGHT: Ralph Bellamy—This one is just another picture. The actors did the best they could with the story they had. Universal could make a better picture than this one with little effort.—Al Johnston, Rialto Theatre, Jacksonville, Texas. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—Above average program picture. Didn't draw but no fault of picture. Those that came liked it. Played February 19-20.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper City, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

STRANGE WIVES: June Clayworth, Roger Pryor—Good program comedy type offering, used as a preview and getting by nicely as such. Farce in character. This started out slowly, but gained speed, and laughs came thick and fast. Well liked by our patrons. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 2.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—Wonderful acting and pleased. Muni is great and Bette Davis gives a fine performance. A rather depressing story but the good acting saves it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 6-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DESIRABLE: George Brent, Jean Muir—A dandy program picture but somehow it failed to register at the box office. Played February 5-6.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

FIRE BIRD: Warner Brothers may know why they made this but I don't. Nothing to it. Played March 2.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper City, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell.—They will like these "gold digging blondes" and will turn out to see 'em. Business very satisfactory and picture good. Played Mar. 5-6.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

RIGHT TO LIVE, THE: George Brent, Colin Clive, Josephine Hutchinson—Mighty good acting and seemed to please the patrons. Colin Clive is the real star of this one. Played March 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck—Good entertainment. Complicated plot and counter plots that held the interest of patrons. Stanwyck deserves better opportunities for her talents but she does a nice job in this one. Business good and audience reaction very favorable. Running time, 64 minutes. Played February 27-28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID: James Cagney. Allen Jenkins—This is a wow of a picture for this size town. Action and lots of it. This team works well together in this type of picture. Lots of laughs and no smut. More like it what we need. Comedy is what they want. without smut.—Bert Silver. Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and town patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID: James Cagney, Allen Jenkins—A knockout for midweek where you want action and comedy. Business above average. Played February 7-8.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Donald Woods—A very good picture of the time of the Gay Nineties. Not a special but pleased those who came. Struck the worst storm of the year Sunday night and only five patrons came. Running time, 82 minutes. Played February 23-24.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHITE COCKATOO, THE: Jean Muir, Ricardo Cortez—A bang-up good mystery. It has a lot of suspense, is well directed, and Jean Muir was very good. Metro might as well know it, the audience went for it and liked it better than their high-priced percentage picture, "Forsaking All Others."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

WYOMING WHIRLWIND: Lane Chandler—Ridin' and shootin' and then some more ridin' and shootin' and so on for six reels. Played February 9.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

CONCERT KID: Scrappy Cartoons—Good cartoon for the youngsters.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Educational

SHE'S MY LILLY: Musical comedies—A darn good comedy that will get the laughs.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SLOW BUT SURE: Terry-Toons—This was a very fine cartoon and was truly done in a very fine fashion. Recording good. Running time, six minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

WAY DOWN YONDER: Song Hit Stories—Went over big with our patrons. Negro songs with a little story to carry it along and a group of pickaninnies who can sing like veterans.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

First Division

MEXICAN IDYL: Color short—A beautiful one-reeler in color. No talking but very good music. I didn't think it would go over so good but they applauded it, which is unusual here.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small time patronage.

OLD FAITHFUL SPEAKS: Color short—Good of its kind.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Fox

FOX NEWS: This is far the best newsreel on the market. I and my patrons like it very much, indeed. It is edited and made so very dignified; other sound news can't be compared with Fox because it seems that Fox has the right idea of presenting the news in the right way. Fox, you have given us a newsreel to be proud of. Running time, 10 minutes.—Albert Refferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

MGM

BALLAD OF PADUCAH JAIL: Irvin S. Cobb—Another excellent comedy featuring Irvin S. Cobb. These shorts go over good here. And don't forget the dog. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Own Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BUM VOYAGE: Todd-Kelly—A ridiculous plot but kept them laughing and that is what we want. This team pleases most of the patrons. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Own Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DONE IN OIL: Todd-Kelly—Another goofy Todd-Kelly that seemed to please. Running time, two reels. —Gladys E. McArdle, Own Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DONKEY BASEBALL: Oddities—Very good single of the game of donkey baseball with comedy added. Your audience should get a "kick" out of it. (Apologies to Peter Smith)—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

OPENED BY MISTAKE: Todd-Kelly—This is a wow. Best from this pair for a long time.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SHRIMPS FOR A DAY: Our Gang—Just average comedy with Spanky McFarlane drawing the laughs—as he always does here, be the comedy what it may.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

STAR NIGHT AT THE COCOANUT GROVE: Musical Revue—This shown being a color was entertaining and many customers came back to see it again.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

TIT FOR TAT: Laurel and Hardy—This is one of Laurel and Hardy's best comedies. It kept our patrons laughing from start to finish.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Tex. General patronage.

TOYLAND BROADCAST: Happy Harmonies—These colored cartoons are sure good. This one got as many favorable comments as the feature. They please the adults almost as much as the kiddies. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Paramount

HOLLYWOOD RHYTHM: Headliner Series—Some left over footage from "College Rhythm" which makes a good trailer if used just before the showing of that feature. Otherwise, not much to it. Running time, ten minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

MILES PER HOUR: Grantland Rice Sportslights—Very good sport reel with plenty of action. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

OLD KENTUCKY HOUNDS: Paramount Varieties—Dog-gone clever short that got the laughs. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS: No. 1—Interesting and funny.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

RKO Radio

HENRY THE APE: Bert Lahr—A very severe pain.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

AT THE MIKE: Mentone No. 3-A—Plenty good. These Mentone productions are a bright spot on any program.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

Vitaphone

ALL SEALED UP: Ben Blue—Personally, I thought this one a waste of film but judging from the laughs the patrons did not agree with me. A trained seal helps to put this one over. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ANIMATED PUPPET NOVELTY: Pepper Pot—An average cartoon.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

BUDDY OF THE LEGION: Looney Tunes—Just another cartoon.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

BUDDY THE DENTIST: Looney Tunes—A clever little cartoon.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DON REDMAN AND HIS BAND: Melody Masters—A good musical number. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FLAME SONG, THE: Bernice Claire—Pretty poor musical fare. Looks like a rehash of "The Song of the Flame," made several years ago. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

GOOD BADMINTON: Pepper Pot—A very unique one-reel subject.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HEAR YE! HEAR YE!: Broadway Brevity—Read where some exhibitor gave this a boost but he and I can't agree on this one.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MR. AND MRS. IS THE NAME: Merrie Melodies—All these colored cartoons are good. This one has some beautiful undersea effects. Coloring is beautiful. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MR. AND MRS. JESSE CRAWFORD: Pepper Pot Series—A lot of good pipe organ music which was appreciated by audience.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

MY MUMMY'S ARMS: Harry Gribbon—Screened this in advance of showing and didn't run. Would advise you to lay off this one. Running time, two reels.—Harry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

PAREE, PAREE: Dorothy Stone, Bob Hpoe—An excellent two-reel short featuring Dorothy Stone. Comedy, dancing and music that pleased. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

A PEACH OF A PAIR: Daphne Pollard—Rough-house slapstick but it got some laughs.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

PILGRIM DAYS: See America First, E. M. Newman—Another of the "See America First" series with some very interesting views. This series would be great with a good announcer.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RADIO SCOUT: El Brendel—How the patrons roared at this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and general patronage.

RICHARD HIMBER AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A swell musical number. "Melody Masters" are a credit to any program. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SEE, SEE, SENORITA: Broadway Brevities—Warner's Broadway Brevities not as good as they used to be. This one will barely get by.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

SOFT DRINKS AND SWEET MUSIC: George Price, Sylvia Froos—A good Broadway Brevity that will add to your program. Running time, two reels.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

VAUDEVILLE REEL: No. 3—These Vaudeville reels are all to the good. They give a varied program that pleases. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

LAW OF THE WILD: Rex, Rin Tin Tin, Jr., Ben Turpin, Bob Custer—I have run the fourth episode of this interesting chapter play and it seems to get "hotter." The human actors in this serial are all O. K and the animal act is in a class by themselves. Nearly everyone likes a good dog or horse so that makes this an a No. 1 serial, none better. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

LOST JUNGLE, THE: Clyde Beatty—Have run three chapters and it seems to be going over good. This pleases a lot of the adults that do not usually like serials on account of the wild animal acts. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

NOT TO BE PENALIZED

To be expected following our recent bargain-manager editorial, there has been discussion, and among the queries propounded is: "what particular virtues go into the makeup of the successful theatreman?" There are many points to be considered in determining a manager's capabilities but in the final analysis, it needs no genius to discover whether or not a man is capable of holding down the job he is hired to do.

If he is rated sufficiently able then by all means the manager is entitled to considerations such as a reasonable working day, regular day off, salary sufficient to maintain himself and family in comfort.

However, if he is not doing the very best kind of a job, the lack of ability or effort should not penalize the manager at least so far as the number of hours he works. Yes, good men should be compensated proportionately. The worker who returns the most in ability and effort should receive the most. But these differences should not be carried further as concerns the time put in on the job.

Too many exhibitors work on the theory that the lack of savvy obligates the less fortunate theatreman to make up his deficiencies by a longer stretch at the machine. It does not follow that a manager who accomplishes less in 10 hours than his abler brother will do as much by laboring 12 hours or more. Showmanship is not to be measured by the length of a working day.

AUDIENCES SHOULD APPLAUD

The sweetest music in the world to an artist's ears, brought forth by the rapid and energetic impact of palm upon palm, has long been denied the screen. No matter how excellent the entertainment or skilled the portrayal of any characterization, motion picture audiences are not inclined to express their approval of what the screen offers in the manner usual in the legitimate theatre.

Thus Sid Dannenberg's trailer suggestion on "Roberta" in which patrons are invited to "express themselves as they do when viewing a stage play" is ingenious and constructive, for not only does it enhance the entertainment value of this particular production but in general is excellent propaganda to restore to the cinema the glamor with which the theatre has long been identified.

The primary purpose of the screen is to entertain. Pictures score best when audiences are relaxed, at ease. It follows then that emotional release will induce this desired relaxation and thus patrons invited to let themselves go by beating their palms should make the problem of satisfactory entertainment easier to solve.

Sid thinks he has struck an advance idea that will help in letting down the bars. We agree.

TOO IMPORTANT TO IGNORE

Managers who can speak on their feet, from the stage, before club meetings and on the radio are securing for their theatres a lot of valuable publicity and good will. The opportunity of spreading the good word is a distinct advantage, not to be sneezed at, and among those who do not "sneeze" we list such Round Tablers as Ken Grimes, John McManus, Gene Curtis, Harry Botwick, John Trewhela, among others, who rarely pass up a chance to "say a few words" regarding the motion picture, their theatres or attractions.

While everyone of course is not endowed with a ready command of words or facility of expression, the ability to address an audience when called upon is too important to ignore. The business of the theatre is such that the manager cannot afford to shrink from such openings, for in so doing he displays a timidity that reacts against his best interests.

AN INDUSTRY "SHOW"

In view of the spontaneous approval from every quarter that greets the announcement of the coming of the "Show of Showmanship," we wonder slightly why industry leaders have not given consideration before to a national exposition. Other industries set great store by the prestige and good will obtained by such events and go to great effort in setting their wares before the public.

The film business would do itself a great service by presenting its own story directly in this fashion. There is too much bad publicity turned loose from uncontrolled sources, much of which is accepted as gospel by the man on the street—our best customer.

Undoubtedly there is room for an annual motion picture exposition and it may be that the first "Show of Showmanship" will give the necessary impetus to such a movement.

Audience Hears Hunter Talk With Johnsons

Taking full advantage of the fact that Chanute, Kansas, was the former residence of the Martin Johnsons, G. I. Hunter, Peoples Theatre, arranged for a personal appearance via telephone for his opening of "Baboona." Hunter had long distance telephone connected to his sound system and audience listened in on conversation with the Johnsons, who were in Rochester, N. Y., at the time. Stunt drew plenty of newspaper breaks.

Another break for Hunter was personal appearance of the local resident who was pilot for the Johnsons in Africa during filming of picture. In addition the flyer put on some stunt stuff during which he dropped heralds and free tickets.

FREDDY JABLONS WINS SILVER CITATION

It has been decided to bestow Quigley Award recognition upon theatre publicity men cooperating with managers winning Silver or Bronze plaques, and to Freddy Jablons, therefore, goes the first Silver Citation Certificate on Manager Harry Crull's January campaign at Loew's Valencia.

Where managers win a Bronze, the publicity man—if any—will be given a Bronze Citation, only, however, if his name is included in the credits, and, further, if he is attached only to the one theatre. This goes for divisional publicity men as well as those attached to only one theatre.

Henderson Stages Clue Hunt For "President Vanishes"

A Clue Hunt was engineered by Leo Henderson, Idaho, Twin Falls, Idaho, for his "President Vanishes" date with cards made up from discarded wallpaper books and distributed to merchants. Leo scattered sentences on the card, underlining one letter in each sentence; underscored letters when properly assembled would spell Craig Stanley, star's name. The sentences he used were: Something for Spring; The latest styles; Ask for easy money; New styles and fabrics; Look at these values; Everything for the home; Your new spring suit is here; Compare our prices with others; Real values are our rule; Always the latest styles; If it isn't right bring it back; and Gifts for all occasions. Twenty passes were awarded.

Another stunt Leo used was to place cards in various restaurants where pin games were installed reading: "Notice, the president has vanished and authorities believe he is being held prisoner at 6000 Riverside Boulevard. Any person playing this game and equaling the number in above address will receive guest ticket to see, etc., etc." The address being that of the theatre.

Keene's "Folies" Parade

Lionel Keene, Loew district manager, State Theatre, Houston, Texas, on "Folies Bergere" arranged a parade of Chevvies to tour town with group of girls and theatre ushers all wearing miniature straw hats and carrying huge reproduction of hat Chevalier wears in picture.

For street bally, mechanical man dressed to look like Maurice with black trousers, mess jacket and hat was placed in five and ten window. Later man paraded streets dropping cards with theatre billing.

Smith Spreads Nine Bucks Very Widely

What $9 in cash can do to put over a Quigley First Mention campaign is capably illustrated by Manager Cress Smith, Jr., Palace, Pittsburgh, Pa., on the last local run of "Flirtation Walk" at this 350-seat double-feature downtown house, a rubber stamp being about the most expensive item.

With this, Cress stamped outgoing mail, checked pages, restaurant napkins, beer coasters in cafes and reverse side of meal checks at all food and drink spots in his area. Such as, for instance, a nearby cafe with small orchestra and singing waiters who in exchange for passes, plugged the song hits. Smith also printed up personal endorsements distributed by restaurant cashiers, hotels and posted on bulletin boards. He also used the "summons" throwaway placed under windshield-wipers of parked cars, and all printing was promoted.

Sign work, and there was plenty, was also promoted in exchange for space in theatre cellar to artist who lacked quarters. Simple animations worked with ordinary oscillating fans and other effective displays drew attention, as did a three-sheet poster in lobby with plug message to Dick Powell and request for photo, signed by Smith. Patrons were requested to write down their names and addresses to receive the photos. Cutouts of Powell and Keeler promoted from another house bordered the bally.

Windows were not neglected, and outstanding was full animated display in important downtown spot with dancing figures (see photo) moving on belt. This was salvaged from a previous showing. Street ballys and stunts using ushers also clicked, one of the latter being an ordinary closed trunk with "do not open" copy outside and picture plug inside.

Personal letters to all fraternities at local colleges were forwarded and helpful also was a chain letter to the effect that only good luck would come from sending letter to friend and seeing the picture.

Dannenberg Invites Patrons to Applaud

Noting that preview audiences broke out spontaneously during certain sequences of "Roberta," Sid Dannenberg, Warner Theatres Cleveland ad head, conceived the idea of informing patrons at the Hippodrome they were at liberty to express themselves during the run of the picture as they would were they at a regular stage play.

Sid put this in the form of a trailer, copy along these lines: "Experience has taught us that 'Roberta,' the picture you are about to see, is so entertaining that it prompts audiences to want to express themselves such as they do when viewing a play . . . therefore when you feel the urge to applaud the dancing of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, the singing of Irene Dunne . . . just go right ahead and applaud. . . ."

The idea went over very well indeed with patrons and also landed in the Cleveland papers, drama editors devoting lots of space to a discussion of the trailer's merits.

The Big Show—

Starts on the coming Monday, April 1, and continues for four days ending Thursday night, April 4. The place — Motion Picture Club, 1560 Broadway, New York City . . . Time—10 to 10 daily and you are all invited.

Time and again we have been queried on the possibilities of an exposition where Quigley Award entries and other campaigns forwarded by theatremen from all over the world could be examined at length. We have long intended something along these lines and now with the splendid cooperation of Motion Picture Herald and Motion Picture Club the first annual "Show of Showmanship" makes its bow.

The majority of the campaigns in the show have been publicized in these pages and now these excellent exploitations will be viewed not only by brother showmen but also by executives in allied lines, advertising agency heads and others interested in how the theatreman promotes his house and his attractions.

It is our earnest wish that everyone within reaching distance who reads these lines will make it his business to attend. Invitations have been forwarded to Round Tablers and to other showmen. To those who have been inadvertently missed we say: excuse it, and please come anyhow. There is no charge for admission. —A-MIKE

MORE "HINDS" OPINIONS

AD HEAD AGREES WITH HINDS' VIEW

DEAR MIKE:

I fully agree with Mr. Hinds in his claim that it is the picture that determines a successful engagement rather than the community in which it is shown.

This is something I have always contended and while, as Mr. Hinds says, occasionally there are some pictures that cater to big city audiences, the successful pictures are successful everywhere. As he says, "Anne of Green Gables," which, according to the rating of all the experts, is a small town picture, has a definnite drawing power in the big cities. It ran three weeks at the old Roxy Theatre and did a landslide business, as records prove. The same thing happened in the case of "David Copperfield," "Little Women," the Shirley Temple and Will Rogers pictures, "A Girl of the Limberlost" and others of homespun calibre.

Then, on the other hand, so-called sophisticated pictures like "The Thin Man" have, according to box-office checkups, proved very successful throughout the country at large as well as the key cities.

I think Mr. Hinds' point is well taken and the problem is more a question of advertising and selling pictures to specific audiences than it is producing a special brand of product for every type of community. Mr. Hinds is right—there are no small towns.—ED FINNEY, ADV. DIR., MONOGRAM PICTURES CORP.

WILL PRESTIGE PICTURE OFFSET CASH LOSS?

DEAR MIKE:

Have read with interest the article of Mr. Hinds, of Whitewater, Wis., reference success or failure of pictures in villages or cities.

My experience runs only from towns of a little less than 1,000 to one of 4,000, but checking the matter over in my memory am inclined to believe that Mr. Hinds' last paragraph tells the whole story. That is, so far as my own experience.

In every "wide spot" in the road are folks who appreciate higher class pictures; those with educational as well as entertainment value. They are in the city in greater numbers. In every community are the folks who pay their money with the desire merely for entertainment that will pass the time. Naturally they far outnumber the other class, and this applies in large and small spots.

So it comes down to this: are there enough of the "class picture" element to make a certain picture pay its way, plus a profit? In the large town there will doubtless be that necessary number. In the small spot it is very unlikely. In that case the exhibitor must decide whether the prestige of the class picture will off-set the cash loss and allow him to make a greater profit on following pictures.

The "entertainment" picture will naturally make a better net for both the large and the small town show. For the big town "class" rank in per cent to population about the same as the little town "class."

Our own experience has been that an occasional picture on which we expected and did sustain a loss paid out on later show. One in three or four months has been plenty for us.

What we all search for is that rare piece of merchandise, a picture that pleases all classes, combining romance, action and a real "story." I said "rare." They are not as rare as in the past. During the last six months we have had several that brought in and pleased the extreme of both classes. Those kind of pictures are becoming more common we believe, for on our booking sheet are several more on which we are prepared to gamble our last hat.

Then there are some that will draw only the action or romance lovers. Good pictures of their kind. And then about two or three features that will bring in less money than we pay out for them—and they will be good pictures, too.

Parker is a town of 1,225, located in a farming community.—P. G. ESTEE, S. T. THEATRE.

IS UNSUCCESSFUL WITH "DIALOGUED" PICTURES

DEAR MR. VOGEL:

Mr. Hinds is picking all the outstanding pictures for his example. I can go along with him on all of his list but "Barretts." This picture was liked only by the socalled intelligentsia, of whom there are few in the rural towns.

I cite another arty picture, "Barkley Square," the English pronunciation, "Cavalcade," both of which were acclaimed as "tops" by the critics. But our audiences had another name for both of them.

We have no success with pictures that are dialogued to death, but dialogue, with some modicum of action, we can get by with.

Mr. Hinds is forgetting the in-between pictures, that flop like no ones business.—A. E. HANCOCK, COLUMBIA THEATRE, COLUMBIA CITY, IND.

Looking Back With Bill Levee

Taking himself a jaunt down Memory Lane, Round Tabler Bill Levee, of the New Strand, White Plains, N. Y., sets down a few wistful jottings that come to mind in the course of his varied and exciting career in showbusiness. Bill is going to do us a "Looking Back" every now and then. This is his first. . . .

"I remember, I remember." . . . "Backward, turn backward, Oh! Time in thy flight." . . . Let's travel down memory lane. Remember the Unique Theatre on Fourteenth Street in little old New York? It is 1905. The barker outside the Unique (the same type of barker you see today in front of the Broadway cinema palace) is shouting to the curious throngs, "Step right inside folks, here we have the foist talkin' pitchers, only a dime folks, one-tenth of a dollar. Be the foist ones to see talkin' movin' pitchers." Three decades have rolled merrily on since that memorable event. What changes time has wrought!

Here on Fourteenth Street motion picture history was being made. Recall the Edison Talking Machine? It was via this apparatus that the "foist talkin' pitcher" made its debut on Fourteenth Street. That good old street, the Times Square of another era. The street which lays claim to being the street mentioned as "the corner on the square" in that famous poem, "The Face on the Barroom Floor".

Old timers who read this column will remember how the Edison talking machine was placed behind the screen and how hard they tried to keep the cylinder record in synchronization with the film. How miserably their efforts failed, those of us who remain to tell the tale can testify. But it was the beginning of that marvel of today. The Talking Screen.

Fourteenth Street in 1905 boasted of six theatres. Of these six only two remain. On the present site of the Gas and Electric company's steel structure stood the most famous of all New York theatres, The Academy of Music.

A meeting place for the elite of another generation. Many famous stars tread the boards of the old Academy, and among these were George Arliss, Robert Edeson, Montgomery and Stone, Richard Bennett, Amelia Bingham, Priscilla Knowles, Louise Gunning.

The 14th Street theatre, now known as the Civic Repertory, housed stage productions, while the City theatre and the Unique theatres were picture and vaudeville houses. The Dewey theatre, also on the old street, sometimes ran Jewish shows.

It was here on this street at the City theatre that William Fox presented his first big film production, Theda Bara in "The Vampire." It was on this street and in the old Academy of Music, that the writer of this memory lane column was initiated into the mysteries of show-business. It was his first love in the theatre world.

More later folks. . . .

THE FALLACY OF THE "ART" THEATRE

"Ain't No Sech Thing," Showman Opines; Details the Difficulties in Path of Successful Operation

by HERMAN G. WEINBERG
Managing Director, Little Theatre, Baltimore

There is no such thing as the "art" theatre, though the word is bandied about a good deal still. That term died with the passing of the silent film. The sudden advent of the talking pictures spelled once and for all the doom of that plucky little group of intimate theatres that comprised "the little cinema movement" in America between the sadly lamented years of 1927 and 1931-2. Then, anything that came from Europe bearing the label "Made in France," "Made in Russia" or "Made in Germany" was treasure to be gobbled up by the cinema elect, the socalled high-brows, the intelligentsia (horrid word!).

A lot of celluloid junk was palmed off in those days under the hallowed aegis of art. It was comparatively easy to make a small fortune running these films, usually obtained at cheap rental, and sometimes running two, three, four and five weeks with almost no effort. Advertising space was cut to an absolute minimum. A personally subscribed mailing list took care of the minority clientele anyway And the critics, fed up with the sameness of the Hollywood opera were most kind. The result was a boom time in miniature for those half dozen or so entrepreneurs (easily recognizable but most of them since fallen into a kind of disrepute) who fostered this enterprise.

Sound Brought Changes

With the advent of the talking pictures, those who still had enough zeal in "the little cinema movement" found that they had to compete, in a certain measure, with the best that Hollywood could do in the talkies, and that best was very good. Hollywood, which had never caught up to Germany in point of photography and lighting, in the silent era, and to Russia in dramatic vitality, passed them at the starting post in sound reproduction and is still so far ahead of the rest of the world in sound recording that it seems as if Europe will never have a chance to catch up.

Now that the little cinema houses had to compete with Metro and Paramount, and the rest of them, the situation changed perceptibly. Pictures had to be sold. No longer was a foreign label enough. The foreign language barrier was a high enough hurdle to put a crimp in the works right from the start. Certain foreign language films, on grounds of sheer merit, hurdled the language barrier, and became famous for long runs. The majority played their week or so first run and a spot or two elsewhere and were relegated to cinema limbo.

Today, for a foreign language film to be any kind of a commercial success in America it has to be so good as to really challenge the supremacy of Hollywood. As these are few and far between, Hollywood need have (and probably does not have) any fears on that score.

HERMAN WEINBERG is by all means ably equipped to speak on the vagaries of the art(?) theatre. His years are many in the conduct of such operations, including the popular Little Theatre, in Baltimore, where he now holds forth. On this page, Herman endeavors to correct what he feels are misconceptions regarding the scope of the "art" picture, among which is an impression of your chairman that there may be untapped sources of revenue in various parts for this class of entertainment. —A-MIKE

With the increased overhead (royalty on sound equipment; consistent newspaper advertising, they must advertise regularly now or they don't stand a chance; increased film rentals which have jumped up astonishingly from the silent days—as much as 1,000 per cent!) the owner of a little cinema house must literally grab the bull by the horns and on his own scale do exactly what his big brothers of the 2,000-3,000-seat cinema palaces are doing, and sell his pictures. . . .

Nor does it end there. He must sell his policy of foreign films (not even necessarily French, German—a few exhibitors are playing successfully with fire here—and Russian) but even British made films. And he must, above all sell his house. Here's where most of them go off on a tangent from which they never return except to fold up and silently steal away, as was evidenced recently by a certain exhibitor who lasted exactly two and a half weeks under a policy of foreign films in a city that has supported another smaller house for six years and is still supporting it!

For the same reason that he could not make a go of it, I do not see how the contemplated move on the part of another New York exhibitor to arrange for sporadic showings (perhaps one night a week) of foreign films in his house (which shows third and fourth run Hollywood film with three or four changes a week) can be successful. The financial returns won't be worth the bother—and bother it is, my friends, bother it is! To audiences to whom a thrice weekly change of neighborhood movie stuff has appealed, the sudden devotion of one day a week to a foreign film will be neither here nor there. It seems to me that the best that could be hoped for, and that would indeed be fortunate, would be that the gross for that day on a foreign film would not average less than if the said exhibitor had his regular program on. To make for any kind of greater returns, he would have to start taking space in the newspapers, always an expensive procedure, send out letters to special lists, arrange tieups with organizations,, clubs, societies, museums, schools, intellectuals, etc. The people to whom foreign films appeal, usually don't go to movies as a rule—at least not to the general run of the Hollywood variety. They don't want to mix with movie morons.

Must Cater to Audiences

They want their house, with a quiet, distinctive atmosphere. They want coffee and cigarettes. They want to be able to sit around in a soft, luxurious lounge and smoke and read and chat. They want a wide variety of foreign films, but they must be first rate. They want you to keep them informed of your change of programs. (Newspaper advertising in the foreign film field is taken on the long chance of getting the mob—your real clientele wants a special announcement from you in the mail, personally addressed to them.) You can show them five ace foreign films in a row, but bring one on that is something short of the masterpiece they expect from you and you'll get the sweetest boycott for that week of your life! The pampered darlings!

But it's either that—or the straight neighborhood policy. The two can't mix. You have to train them, educate them, mould their opinions, introduce new stars so that they may recognize them in future pictures and look forward to seeing them. You've got to do yourself everything that Metro and Paramount spend millions a year doing for the other exhibitors who are on the well beaten path of the Hollywood movie. . . .

But you can't do all this successfully if you are going to limit your showings of foreign films to one night a week. Even a tenth rate Hollywood film gets a two or three-day showing at a neighborhood movie, to give those interested a chance to see it. And what must it be with the smart "ultra" crowd who usually have quite a number of functions to attend to and can't always reserve a specific night for what always must remain in the final analysis, "just a movie. . . ." I have held pictures for three and four weeks, only to be told by friends of mine, who keep in closer touch with me than my regular patrons, that they "simply don't get a chance to come around to see it."

Mike Vogel suggests that the potentialities for profit are not extensive for this form of operation on a weekly basis, therefore, he believes that "in quite a few situations the better class of programs . . . could be put over successfully one day a week. . . ."

The potentialities for profit for this form of operation are not only not extensive for this kind of operation, but are practically non-existent for the one-day stand showings.

My answer to the whole problem of the Little Theatre movement lies in the salient fact that my own Little Theatre in Baltimore has become an extended run house this season, almost 50 per cent of the product having played at least two weeks each, with another 35 per cent playing from three to four weeks each. We have widened our potential audience for this sort of thing to such an extent that this is entirely possible.

Cease talking about drawing the "intellectuals" and learn to sell your house and its policy over a long period of time to the great mass of movie goers. You'll only get a small fraction of them at best, but a small fraction of half a million potential moviegoers is preferable, from a box office standpoint, to a few hundred "intellectuals" who might be induced to expect a foreign film on Wednesday nights at your theatre (for the one-day stand exhibitor) or to the two or three thousand die-hards (for the exhibitor of foreign films on a weekly basis) who are all that he expects can be relied on to support him and his precarious adventure.

Contest Built On Mark's Short Story

Written by Manager Mark Solomon, Embassy, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., was an original short story with a theme of frustrated love similar to that of "Anne of Green Gables." And this served as a contest idea on the date of that picture, with a main prize of a promoted radio and guest tickets to other winners.

Mark ran the story, the ending of which had an unusual twist, on front page of his program and invited patrons to submit what they considered fitting endings in no more than 50 words. Required also was that the last two words spoken by Anne Shirley in the picture be included in the entries, which contestants could learn by seeing the show.

The idea was entirely successful to the extent that Mark reports difficulty in clearing his house as patrons remained over in order to make sure of the two necessary last words. Hundreds of entries were received, with many close to the original solution.

In addition to program notice, lobby displays and other buildup, Solomon also crashed the local paper for a story on the contest, unusual publicity he states, as the daily does not give very much additional space to subsequent run houses.

Exploitation built around the submission of short stories and fitting endings such as Solomon describes should make good exploitation in interesting budding authors and might be tied in with book editors.

Original "Barnum" Clown Ballys for Caldwell

Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, was fortunate in securing the services of resident Jimmy Spriggs, one of Barnum's original clowns, to ballyhoo for the picture in original costume. Spriggs made tour of department stores plugging date.

Wally distributed regular colored circus heralds, devoting space to each freak with cut and copy. Distributed also were the "Barnum" tracing pictures.

On "Sequoia" Wally held a special preview for women's clubs and humane society, essay booklets were distributed to students and notices tacked on bulletin boards.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA

DON'T TAKE OUR WORD FOR IT ...READ THESE RAVE REVIEWS!

"A new movie star emerged from the Capitol screen when Nelson Eddy appeared opposite Jeanette MacDonald in 'Naughty Marietta' . his fine, full powered voice is admirably suited to the Herbert score.. a welcome addition to the screen, he brings to it a canny sense of comedy and plenty of savoir faire." —Kate Cameron, N. Y. Daily News

"Superlatives for 'Naughty Marietta'! It's the top, the super-stratosphere of musical motion picture entertainment! In Nelson Eddy, who debuts so auspiciously as Jeanette MacDonald's hero, the screen has found a thrilling thrush, possessed not only of rare vocal tone, but of personality and form and features cast in the heroic mold. At the film's Capitol Theatre world premiere, a madly enthusiastic audience applauded each song to an extent that made the dialogue immediately following inaudible." —Regina Crewe, N. Y. American

"Those advance enthusiasms were justified. Nelson Eddy is a find, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has wisely put him in a part well suited to his acting ability and magnificent voice. Jeanette MacDonald is at the top! It is a happy part for her; and Mr. Eddy seems the ideal co-star. This handsome version of his operetta should please even Victor Herbert himself."
—Eileen Creelman, N. Y Sun

"Virtually perfection of cinema light opera. The triumph of 'Naughty Marietta' is registered by Nelson Eddy, who has a brilliant baritone voice. He is engaging and good-looking and seems to me a far more valuable acquisition than even the celebrated Mr. Tibbett."
—Richard Watts, Jr., N. Y Herald-Tribune

"A screen operetta which would have delighted its composer. Encountering Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy in splendid voice, W. S. Van Dyke has made a photoplay which is gayly romantic and rhapsodically tuneful. Such fortissimo singing as Mr. Eddy and Miss MacDonald provide for those rapturous love songs has not been heard in a motion picture theatre since 'One Night of Love'. Mr. Eddy's distinguished baritone insures him a spotlight on the screen. Miss MacDonald, of course, is an accomplished actress as well as a first-class soprano. Then, for humor, there is Frank Morgan as the hilariously baffled Governor of New Orleans."
—Andre Sennwald, N. Y. Times

"It's ter-rific. MacDonald-Eddy are the new team sensation of the industry. Their duet of 'Sweet Mystery of Life' is the grandest thing ever recorded!"
—Ed Sullivan, Daily News

"Naughty Marietta' is a personal triumph for Nelson Eddy. Already famous on the concert stage, Mr. Eddy is established as a definite screen personality."
—Rose Pelswick, N Y Journal

"'Naughty Marietta' is one of the best musical pictures that has ever been made Victor Herbert's music rings out from the screen with that same sweep that made 'One Night of Love' a landmark. W. S. Van Dyke is one of Hollywood's wonder men . his uncanny knack of swelling every inch of this picture with rich orchestrations and of disguising the plot with such music as will make you jump out of your seat is a wonder and a delight. From now on, Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy will be referred to as 'tops'."
—E. de S. Melcher, Washington Star

"Great entertainment! An exquisite film, so rich musically, and strong in story, it makes the average musical movie seem tawdry. Handsomely produced and skillfully directed, it features the splendid voices of soprano Jeanette MacDonald and baritone Nelson Eddy. The story is dramatic, its tender charm contrasted with stirring scenes of action and suspense." —Bland Johaneson, Daily Mirror

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's latest cinema triumph is a complete one. Never before has music soared so gloriously from the screen. Glittering and swiftly moving musical. Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy duets are inspirational. Eddy's technique is at once smoother and more adaptable to the screen, even than Tibbett's. 'Naughty Marietta' is the perfect marriage of operetta with the cinema."
—Edgar Hay, Miami Herald

"A great screen operetta sung to perfection. Possessed of a brilliant baritone voice, handsome Mr. Eddy has a way about him, which, with his singing ability should make him one of cinema's outstanding figures. Not even the great Lawrence Tibbett has ever sung before the screen microphone with more telling effect or beauty. MacDonald's is a stunning performance both vocally and dramatically."
—William Boehnel, World-Telegram

HE'S THE SCREEN'S NEW SINGING SENSATION!

A NEW STAR IS BORN OF A GREAT PICTURE!

Every so often a great motion picture electrifies the world by skyrocketing a star to immortality Such was the case with "The Four Horsemen" and Rudolph Valentino; "Ben Hur" and Ramon Novarro; Wallace Beery, Ronald Colman, Clark Gable—to name a few—each stepped out into the spotlight from a great film hit. Today another nation-wide success, "Naughty Marietta" creates a new popular favorite in Nelson Eddy, its sensational singing star.

VICTOR HERBERT
He wrote his best-loved melodies for "Naughty Marietta"—hear them soar triumphantly from the screen!

W. S. VAN DYKE
...who has always given you something different ("Trader Horn", "Thin Man"), now does it with a musical.

JEANETTE MacDONALD
Never before has she been so lovely—never before has her golden voice been so perfectly recorded for the screen!

NELSON EDDY
Favorite of the concert world, his thrilling personality makes him the screen's first romantic singing star.

FRANK MORGAN
Hilariously funny as the baffled Governor of New Orleans who tried to tame "Naughty" Marietta.

LOTTERIES AND SUCH

THE lottery business is getting a vast deal of encouragement from the American press and the newsreel screen.

The lottery business is a catch penny device operating in precisely those brackets of buying power where the motion picture must look for the bulk of its revenues.

The lottery is competitive thrill, a reaching for the lure of attainment without effort.

That is just exactly what the motion picture sells, in a vicarious but very real fashion, more especially down in those strata where the lottery tickets sell.

It is obviously true that newspaper readers are interested in reading the get-rich-quick stories of the lotteries and it is obvious that the camera-and-microphone antics of the winners make entertaining newsreel stories, but that has no bearing on the wisdom of their exploitation. All too often the amusement business makes offer of excuse that "the public likes it." The industry's production practises have just been put through the wringer of reform because of the application of such a policy with respect chiefly to sex morality.

Also, as usual, through the current baseball training season the newsreels have given large promotional attention to the sport which will be competing with the box office until the world's series games are played this coming autumn.

It is relevent to observe here that for many many years it has been the firm policy of the Loew Theatres in the metropolitan area to refuse to put on the screen any picture containing scenes from Coney Island, on the basis that Coney Island is competitive.

But Coney Island is not the only competitor, and not the most important competitor, either. Further, the newsreel has no news coverage obligations comparable with those of the newspapers. Twenty minutes of screen time a week can tell very little of what goes on in the world—besides the screen public is interested not in news but entertainment. Most newsreel selections represent editorial habits, and heritages of habits. A case in point is afforded by the vast importance with which exhibitors have been educated to view first pictures of the Kentucky Derby. The Derby was not a national screen event until the newsreels made it that—at the cost of many thousands a year to themselves, with not an additional dime in film rental or box office draw.

MR. HOWARD SECEDES

A FEW weeks ago we recorded that Mr. Joseph Hergesheimer was entirely fed up with writing novels, and that Mr. Elmer Rice was quite through with the Broadway stage. That was all very well, especially as those gentlemen merely said what they were tired of and through with—that being, as we observed, merely evidence that they had become mature, which their public never can.

But now comes Mr. Leslie Howard, recorded for the New York Times of Monday, who seems to care for nothing about the motion picture but the Hollywood climate and the convenient, pleasant hours of work, saying:

"I have no desire any more to play in the commercial theatre. And the movies are purely commercial. My plan would be to use that economic independence which the movies can give to an actor to seek to elminate the commercial theatre and to attempt to create the kind of a theatre in which we, as actors, could find the opportunity to do the sort of thing we want to do. . . . "

Fortunately, or unfortunately, as you may view it, nothing will happen in Mr. Howard's project to eliminate the commercial theatre and to rebuild the amusement world to the heart's desire of the actor.

The box office public takes care of all such matters, with great, automatic efficiency.

Meanwhile, biting the hand that feeds you is nothing as compared to cutting it right off.

"SINGLE BILL" MEANS SINGLE

IN a provocatively interesting discussion of exhibition and its problems, recorded by Mr. Victor Shapiro in Hollywood, Mr. Harold Franklin says in substance that exhibitors resort to dual bills under the pressure of competition with houses which surround their pictures with vaudeville.

"But," says Mr. Franklin, "distributors can do something . . . by signing contracts with exhibitors that certain pictures must be played single bill."

However, this able exhibitor does not go on to say that such "single bill" contracts would also stipulate that there should be no presentation acts, stage show or vaudeville device whatsoever. Until that could be accomplished nothing would be accomplished—and how probable is it that distribution would consider such dictation to its affiliates and other first runs.

MR. RICHARD WATTS, Jr., of the New York Herald Tribune leaves in a fortnight on his third visit to Russia, according to the Morning Telegraph. It would seem that he is almost certain to enjoy it.

THIS WEEK---

PRISON DONOR

Speaking as honor guest at a testimonial dinner in New York last week, Warden Lewis E. Lawes of Sing Sing prison revealed that Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, has donated the prison's model gymnasium, seating 3,000, in memory of his son, Lewis, the gym having cost the state nothing. . . .

CONSOLIDATED BOARD

For three-year terms, Ben Goetz, J. E. McPherson, J. W. Coffman, M. J. Siegel were elected members of the board of Consolidated Film Industries. Mr. Goetz and Mr. McPherson were reelected, while Mr. Coffman succeeds J. D. Egan and Mr. Siegel succeeds George W. Yates, whose terms have expired. . . .

STUDIO TO CONVENT

Abandoning a brilliant screen career, Jenny Luxeuil, who strongly resembles Saint Therese of Liseux, walked calmly out of a French studio, where she was scheduled to make a picture of the life of the "Little Flower" of Normandy, and, telling no one, entered an obscure Dominican convent in Languedoc. . . .

HARRY LEWIS

Harry Lewis, who operated one of the first film exchanges in the country, the Chicago Film Exchange, with 10 branches, died in New York last week at 83. Mr. Lewis, in 1906, rented the program for a theatre showing only motion pictures, the Nickelodeon in Chicago. His long drawn fight with the Patents Trust was finally settled, he receiving about $500,000. . . .

FOX DEBUTANTES

Called the studio's debutantes of 1935, considered the young actresses most likely to succeed, Winfield Sheehan, Fox production chief, has named Rita Cansino, Frances Grant, Rosina Lawrence and Barbara Blane, ages from 16 to 20. . . .

TECHNICAL CREDITS

The executive committee of the Technicians' Branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast in the future will make the technicians' credits publication a complete technical history of each production. The first, to be issued shortly, will include all technicians. . . .

NAMED TO BENCH

Named a judge to fill a vacancy on the common pleas bench of Lackawanna County, Pennsylvania, was Thomas Linus Hoban, general counsel in the state for the Comerford theatre interests. . . .

"LUNCHEON MATINEE"

To appeal to workers "out to lunch," Jack S. Truitt, operating the new Royal in downtown Kansas City, has adopted a "luncheon short subject matinee," which, running from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., will consist of newsreel and short subjects, with no feature. The rest of the day will be devoted to a regular run program, at 10 cents for double features. . . .

CENSOR ACTION

Banned by the New York censor is the Mexican film, "Chucho El Roto," until certain changes are made. The objection was based on a sequence showing a bandit committing a crime in the garb of a priest, which was held derogatory to the Catholic Church. Mariano Viamonte, manager of the Teatro Campoamor, New York house, plans to revise the film to suit the censor. . .

MUSICIANS VOTE

Voted at a meeting of the American Federation of Musicians last week in New York were: a three per cent tax on incomes of local members, a change in substitute laws and a cut in insurance benefits. The tax will go into the union treasury, the benefit cut from $1,000 to $500 was an economy move, and the substitute change makes a substitute eligible for full time and full pay, and is designed to aid employment. . . .

A film exchange will be operated in conjunction with the circuit. . . .

"NORDIC CUNNING"

When the Nazi German production of "The Old King and the Young," starring Emil Jannings, was shown in Vienna recently, the Austrian authorities saw to it that when provocative Nazi speeches were made by Jannings, his lips moved—but he said nothing. Anti-German papers called the film "a Nazi propaganda film, camouflaged with Nordic cunning." . . .

FILM APPRECIATION

Following conferences between Mrs. A. S. Exhibitors' Own Exposition of Selling the Pictures Is Praised by Leaders in Film and Other Industries and Is Made Annual Event; Plaques Are Presented to the February Winners of the Quigley Awards

The "Show of Showmanship"—written in terms of exploitation by the exhibitors of America and their colleagues in foreign countries—was presented by MOTION PICTURE HERALD this week to packed "houses" at the New York Motion Picture Club. So great was the interest shown that it was decided to make it an annual exposition, an occasion when the exhibitor's own show of selling art and material used by him in the promotion of his theatre and its attractions will be put on view for all the industry to study and appreciate.

Sponsored by the HERALD and Motion Picture Club and executed by the Round Table Club, the exhibitor's "Show of Showmanship" concentrates for the first time a cross section of film exploitation in the United States and abroad, with campaigns for the Quigley Awards entries from all parts of the world, advertising and exploitation material from managers in the field and every conceivable suggestion or method for promotion of motion pictures exhibited in displays calculated to interest the spectator.

Showmen in all branches of industry activity, distribution and advertising executives, and the advertising representatives of other industries, were there this week—all interested in learning something of the motion picture showmanship which helps to bring dollars to the box office. The show, which had an estimated attendance of 2,000 the first two days, has been scheduled to close Thursday, but it was decided to hold it over through Friday.

WHALEN PRESENTS FEBRUARY PLAQUES TO "FUZZY" KNIGHT AND ED DOUGLAS

At a luncheon Tuesday, the second day of the show, the Quigley Awards for February were presented by Grover A. Whalen, president of the New York Advertising Club and former New York Police Commissioner. The winner of the silver plaque was R. E. "Fuzzy" Knight of the Fairmont theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., for his campaign on Warner's "Devil Dogs of the Air." To Mr. Knight also went the distinction of being the only theatre manager to have won the Quigley Award twice. The bronze plaque was awarded to Ed Douglas of Loew's Kings Theatre, Brooklyn, for his campaign on MGM's "Forsaking All Others."

The advertising schools of Columbia University and New York University were to participate in the final session, in addition to delegations from the Advertising Club of New York, leading advertising agencies and outside theatre circuits.

The luncheon meeting was addressed by several of the country's outstanding advertising and sales executives, both in the motion picture and other industries.

In introducing Martin Quigley, the chief speaker of the day, Mr. Nizer paid him special tribute when he said that Mr. Quigley has been "not only a publisher but the advisor to the industry as well."

"It was Martin Quigley who forecast the storm of the Legion of Decency, and when that avalanche occurred, it was to Mr. Quigley that we turned for advice and guidance, and his guidance had much to do with the fact that the industry met the Legion of Decency on its own grounds," Mr. Nizer said.

QUIGLEY POINTS TO NEED OF PROGRESS IN METHODS OF EXPLOITING PICTURES

Mr. Quigley, in the spirit of the occasion of showmanship, pointed out that there is no more important function vital to the welfare of the industry as a whole than that fulfilled by the theatre man in preparing the ways to present films to the public.

"Roughly, it may be said that there are certain motion pictures which because of some essential appeal need very little in the way of presentation in order to have the public response of a character that is wanted," Mr. Quigley pointed out. "Unfortunately, it seems considerably beyond human effort to make a sufficient number of

What Exhibitors Say of

Typical expressions from motion picture exhibitors, circuit operators, and exhibitor organization leaders and others of the industry, addressed to Motion Picture Herald concerning last week's presentations of the announced program of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers in connection with the Pettengill bill, now before Congress, follow:

EDWARD M. FAY
Fay's Theatre,
Providence, R. I.

What I think of the project in reference to the National Congress of the Parents and Teachers in connection with their contemplated scheme of entering into the picture business would not be fit to dictate to my stenographer, and assuming you use the typewriter yourself anything you put on paper would be mild in comparison to what I would write. . . . After considerable experience with the local parent and teachers organization, as well as the Congress of Parents and Teachers of the State of Rhode Island, my thoughts go double.

WALTER VINCENT

If the passage of the Pettengill Bill would give to this Congress (of Parents and Teachers) the power that they expect to grab, the motion picture exhibitor would indeed be lost. . . . Personally, I think that the bill cannot possibly be passed, although in these days one can never tell what may happen.

ABRAM F. MYERS
Counsel, Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors,
Securities Building, Washington, D. C.

Your telegram to Mrs. Klock rather slyly suggested the answer which you sought. I am sorry that Mrs. Klock did not sense the purpose of the inquiry which unwittingly afforded you an utterly irrelevant argument against the Pettengill Bill. No exhibitor and no exhibitor organization would countenance or permit a program such as that outlined in Mrs. Klock's telegram and no legislature in its right senses would support such a program. Aside from the fact that such a program would put the theatres out of business, it would not be desirable from the standpoint of the public, for the reason that all informed persons know churches, schools and similar institutions are not built, and can not be equipped, to cope with the fire hazards incident to the exhibition of motion pictures or to furnish proper projection and reproduction of sound.

Coupling the Pettengill Bill with the ideas of some supporters of that measure relative to putting the churches and schools in the motion picture business is, of course, a clever stratagem on the part of those opposing the bill. There is not one word or sentence in the bill which contemplates any invasion of the exhibition field by non-theatrical agencies or institutions.

Let me repeat, however, that in my judgment you are barking up an empty tree. Your fears with respect to the Pettengill Bill remind me of the interpretation placed on chops and tomato sauce in the celebrated case of Bardell vs. Pickwick.

The Motion Picture Herald is to be congratulated for its exposure of the intentions of those behind the un-American Pettengill bill now up before Congress.

Experienced showmen today are finding, as in every line of endeavor, tough enough sledding to keep going. To burden these exhibitors with the unfair competition that the Pettengill bill would produce, would mean sounding the exhibitors' death knell and would soon force them out of business.

I do not agree with Mrs. Klock and am for the Block Booking.

And as to the schools and churches going into the showing of educational pictures, we the theatre owners and operators can very easily handle the showing of any educational pictures that may be made and shown to the public, therefore I see no reason why the school and the church should go into the exhibiting game, and do hereby state that I am against it.

E. L. KUYKENDALL, President,
Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America,
1600 Broadway, New York City.

I was a little surprised that Mrs. Klock would openly admit the purpose behind their support of the Pettengill bill. However, I have known for several weeks that that was the motivating influence. You have handled the subject in a masterly manner and it should be of untold benefit in arousing the dumb-bell exhibitors of this country who are so simple minded that they are actually supporting the Pettengill bill. I have seen hundreds of letters they sent to Congressmen and Senators asking them to support this obnoxious bill.

SIDNEY E. SAMUELSON
President, Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors,
Hotel Lincoln, New York.

I see nothing in the Pettengill Bill that will alter the present non-theatrical status. After all, distributors have always asserted their right to choose their customers. Today they are serving selective contracts to non-theatricals while the competing exhibitor is compelled to exhibit everything.

I am opposed to non-theatricals except for shut-ins. However, if you will search the files of your own paper you will discover several territories where distributors use the non-theatrical threat to force exhibitors to buy complete feature film blocks.

I am in favor of the Pettengill Bill and will continue to work for its enactment, feeling certain that it will benefit every person and enterprise engaged in this business.

In the face of the amazing frankness of Mrs. Klock the distributor who does not heed the obvious warning to work with the exhibitor in an honest, practical way will suffer the results.

I do not believe that the exhibitors would have wanted this bill if the distributors had granted a 20% cancellation privilege. Even the 10% code allowance is blocked by all the technicalities some distributors can evolve; when operating at its best the code provisions are very unsatisfactory on this point. The distributors did not heed the years' warning of the exhibitors on decency in pictures, but the League of Decency gave them a sock that meant something.

If Mrs. Klock's prediction that pictures will be made available for schools, churches, and clubs comes true, it would be a terrific sock to exhibitors as well as distributors, but such a condition will result, and with the support of the exhibitors, if the distributors do not give a liberal cancellation allowance.

The Pettengill Bill is sure Death, if put over. Obviously I am opposed to it the same as any one else in any industry would be if imposed upon them.

Sooner or later, all connected with the motion picture industry will wake up and have some part of their business kept a secret. We are loath to exploit what we invested in such and such a theatre (double our investment or triple it) to attract the people. Actors', etc., salaries are published as so much cigaret advertising. We have followed this line so long I fear now we are facing a proposition where we have got to test our real business ability and cut out publishing the heart of our business.

It seems that most people don't realize that the motion picture theatre is compelled to carry the same burdens and obligations the other industries carry (or I should say in most instances a great deal more). Mrs. Klock points out that the fine pictures would receive wider distribution if such organizations were permitted to show them. She overlooks the fundamental fact that these splendid productions can be made only if it is profitable to make them and that means that a profit can be made only through an efficient operation of an industry.

DAVID BARRIST

I think your concern of a wholesale invasion of the theatre field on the part of non-theatrical institutions, as a result of the elimination of block booking, is an exaggerated fear.

I fail to see why these same church and civic organizations, with block booking eliminated, will be better enabled to buy film than they are today.

In this entire film zone there is not a single instance of a non-theatrical institution which has made a success as a regular purveyor of entertainment. A church here and there, a club featuring Sunday night shows—and you have the whole non-theatrical situation.

The only exhibitors today who favor block booking are those in highly competitive situations whose chief difficulty is getting film. I have such a spot myself, but I am "agin" block booking. I think if the market for a quality product were intensified and that for mediocre product contracted, that it would result in more class "A" pictures.

FRED WEHRENBERG, President,
M.P.T.O. of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois,
St. Louis, Mo.

It seems to me that Mrs. Klock was left without the proper contact from theatre owners in regards to public relations.

The idea of putting the churches, schools and other civic organizations on a par with established motion picture theatres, giving them the right to exhibit all photoplays, is all wrong. That is why we need a stronger non-theatrical section in the Code for the Motion Picture Industry.

CARL LAEMMLE
President, Universal Pictures Corp.,
Universal City, Cal.

As far as the Universal Company is concerned we are interested first in doing business with theatres, and the only time when we are ready to serve churches or schools or other non-theatrical institutions is when such a service cannot hurt the business or income of our natural customers, namely, the motion picture theatres. This has been my stand for over a quarter of a century and it will require more than an ill considered Congressional bill to upset it.

C. E. WILLIAMS, President,
MPTO of Nebraska and Western Iowa
Park Theatre, Omaha, Neb.

Should the effort of this wedge driving become an actuality I can visualize nothing but ruin for the small exhibitor in the rural districts. The larger first run houses in cities of importance, the producers and the distributors could not possibly be in the adverse situation of the small towner.

I think each of us must realize that over night in eight or ten thousand towns and villages a competitive theatre would become operative, most of them without taxation, investment or "what have you." Each lodge member, school child or church member would become a ticket salesman and solicitor for their own particular group.

I presume Mr. Pettengill and his bill believe they are shooting at the producer. If, however, this bill should actualize Mrs. Klock's vision, he and his bill would be actually shooting the exhibitor, and I don't mean shooting at. You then, Mr. Ramsaye, could drive to many thousand villages in this "Land of the Free" and see an epitaph on the little theatre door something such as this: "My boss was crucified and has gone hence. Through trials and tribulations, sunshine and shadow, drought, failures and famine, busybodies and chiselers, he carried on. Then the government went feminine and they carried him away."

R. X. WILLIAMS, JR.,
Secretary-Treasurer,
Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee, Oxford, Miss.

The National Congress of Parents and Teachers have as their officials those who are most interested in breaking into the press, motion pictures or any other form of advertising. I find that in most instances they have no children of their own, if so they are divorced from their families and have made little or no success of their own homes.

I am of the opinion that any one interested in the motion picture industry should get into the industry by buying a building and going into the show business. They will then be in a position to do a great good for the business and will not be in the position of the dog barking at the moon. People who try to tell us how to operate our business and at the same time have no business of their own make little or no impression.

Churches and schools are exempt from all forms of taxations and both are leaving their fundamental principles of religion and education. Those are the two things most neglected in both today. If they are interested in going into the amusement world then why exempt them from taxes, pay preachers and school teachers. It will take only one manager for the school and one for the church and this will save money on operation.

The theatres in any community will always show the pictures the public demands.

If Mrs. Klock was in any manner interested in welfare work without publicity and enormous pay she would go into the grocery business and do some real welfare work. I have done quite a bit of welfare work in my community and I find what they are in need of and most desire is food, clothes and a place to work, and have never raised the question of the amusement of them, to say nothing of a complaint of the kind offered at local theatres. Her expressions are strictly personal and not from the majority of the parent-teachers of the nation. None of the local groups want movies in the schools or churches and with a checkup on the local groups you will find that they want their children out of the buildings when they are not studying their textbooks.

I believe that if the trade journals and papers would keep the names of these interested in reconstruction of the motion picture industry out of print they would soon fade from the picture as what they care for most is publicity.

My connection with the entire situation is as follows: I have two children, one 10 years and one 3, both girls, I am a member of the P. T. A., a Rotarian, college graduate and mayor of the city in which I live.

Among others who commented were Karl Hoblitzelle, head of Interstate Circuit, Inc., Dallas, Texas, who called the article "to the point and very effective"; H. E. pictures of that character to keep the theatre supplied.

"There is another type of picture which we in the trade frequently refer to as the exploitation picture, which most readily lends itself to methods of promotion and exploitation. Both types of pictures represent, however, only a small part of all the product which theatres need.

"There is a greater, medium class—that class of picture upon which all theatres depend for their existence."

Depends on Presentation

Mr. Quigley said that in a great many instances, in connection with the medium class of picture, what the production will amount to in the public mind depends to a great extent upon the spirit and intelligence with which the exhibitor presents that picture to his public.

"Despite anything of any other character that might be done anywhere else, throughout the length of the industry, there is nothing to suggest continued progress and development unless there is continued progress and development in methods of promotion and exploitation," he said.

Award Made Permanent

Mr. Quigley concluded by saying that in developing the plan of Awards for excellence in matter of promotion and exploitation, Motion Picture Herald has sought to do two things: first, to devise a means intended to stimulate better and still better activities along motion picture exploitation lines, and, secondly, to give proper recognition to theatre men whose skill and efforts have and are contributing so much to the industry's welfare.

"Motion Picture Herald is grateful because of the fine recognition which has been accorded to this plan throughout the industry," he said. "It feels well rewarded in the recognition which it has received and I am very happy to announce that as the result of this first year's efforts, Motion Picture Herald has determined to keep this plan of activity as a permanent Award."

Challenge Met, Says Whalen

In presenting the silver and bronze plaques for the February Awards, Grover A. Whalen said in part:

"I would not think of presenting the plaques without first paying a compliment to the motion picture industry. There was a challenge given to the industry not long ago by the public, and it is to the great credit of this industry that it met the challenge and successfully cleaned house itself. For that accomplishment you deserve the greatest amount of praise and appreciation on the part of the public, because any industry that can handle itself the way you did on this particular occasion deserves the applause of the general public."

Other speakers were Barron Collier, Jr., Paul Hollister, Harry Hershfield and John W. Alicoate.

The complete roster of speakers and others seated on the dais follows:

Grover A. Whalen, President, New York Advertising Club; Louis Nizer, Counsel, New York Film Board of Trade; Martin Quigley, Editor and Publisher, Quigley Publications; Colvin Brown, Vice-President and General Manager, Quigley Publications; Terry Ramsaye, Editor, Motion Picture Herald; John W. 'DOLLAR DAY SALE' IDEA IN PREVIEWS

Universal has adopted Hollywood's 'Dollar Day Sale' idea. Recently it previewed "Rendezvous at Midnight" at two Hollywood theatres on the same evening.

Picking the Ritz and the Fairfax theatres, both neighborhood houses, reviewers were left to choose the location nearest their dining halls.

In spotting the preview in these two theatres, Universal gave extra work to helpers, and satisfied two theatre managers, which is something or other.

Everything for Exploitation

The "Show of Showmanship" itself was held in the lounge and bar of the Motion Picture Club and comprised in the main the advertising exhibits of all major companies; reproductions of lobby displays and ticket-selling fronts; national tieups, newspaper advertising styles and suggestions, accessories and press books, short subject exploitation suggestions, poster and lobby designs—in short, everything it takes to operate the motion picture theatre from an advertising standpoint.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had on display the puma which figured prominently in its picture, "Sequoia," an exhibition of stills of exploitation in foreign countries, and specially prepared electrical transcription records of songs and music from "Naughty Marietta" and "Reckless."

The lounge and bar was a constantly moving mass of motion picture personalities. A group would pause at the Warner exhibit just inside the entrance to the lounge and before it could properly assimilate everything therein would be pushed on to the MGM and RKO Radio displays by another incoming group.

In the RKO Radio exhibit was a fashion show, with marionettes in miniature copies of gowns worn in "Roberta." A large cardboard cut-out of Katharine Hepburn smiled at the crowds and pointed to a needlework exhibit. The Dionne quintuplets, in "miniature," were in the RKO section, too, testifying to the "scoop of scoops" by the Pathe News in getting the first pictures of the babies.

In another corner, United Artists was represented by an electric train rushing around a track in the center of which were letters announcing that "United Artists Sets New Speed Records With Box Office Pacemakers." Each Pullman was dedicated to one of the United Artists producers—Samuel Goldwyn, London Films, 20th Century, British & Dominions and Reliance.

GB Productions' display featured brilliantly colored posters of productions as well as pictures of Terry Ramsaye and Red Kann.

Hundreds of Campaigns

Fox's exhibit was all Shirley Temple, with lobby cut-outs, while Columbia went all out on suggestions for its current campaign on "The Whole Town's Talking."

Paramount and Universal were represented with helpful hints on current and forthcoming productions.

In the center of the room was a long table, at the end of which was a display of Quigley Publications, with an 8 ft., 10 in. by 7 ft., 6 in. picture of Vice-President Garner presenting the Quigley Grand Award for 1934.

On the long table were piled the campaigns of several hundred theatre men as entries for the Quigley Awards—the campaigns which are the backbone of the annual "Show of Showmanship."

Boycott Called In New Orleans

New Orleans independent exhibitors, with theatre men from the surrounding territory, this week decided to withhold their patronage from one film exchange to be decided on at a later date by the board of the Independent Exhibitors Association as punishment for alleged discriminatory distribution.

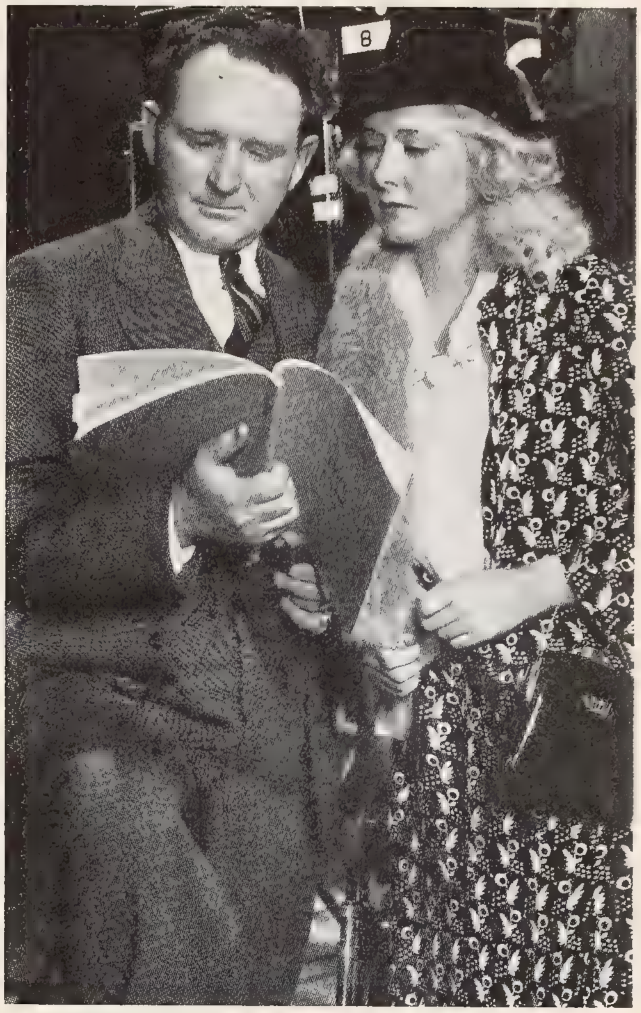
It was decided that the withholding of at least $25,000 of business from one exchange one year, and the same amount from another the following year, would have the effect of making the exchanges accede to the independents' demands.

Inspectors To Unionize

Film inspectors employed in local exchanges in New York are moving to unionize. According to the plan, an American Federation of Labor charter will be sought, with subsequent moves to be made for a uniform wage scale and hours.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

A MODEL. Was Irene Dunne, RKO Radio star, as she posed for leading artists while guest of honor at a reception of the Society of Illustrators, incident to their annual exhibition, which was held at Radio City in New York last week.

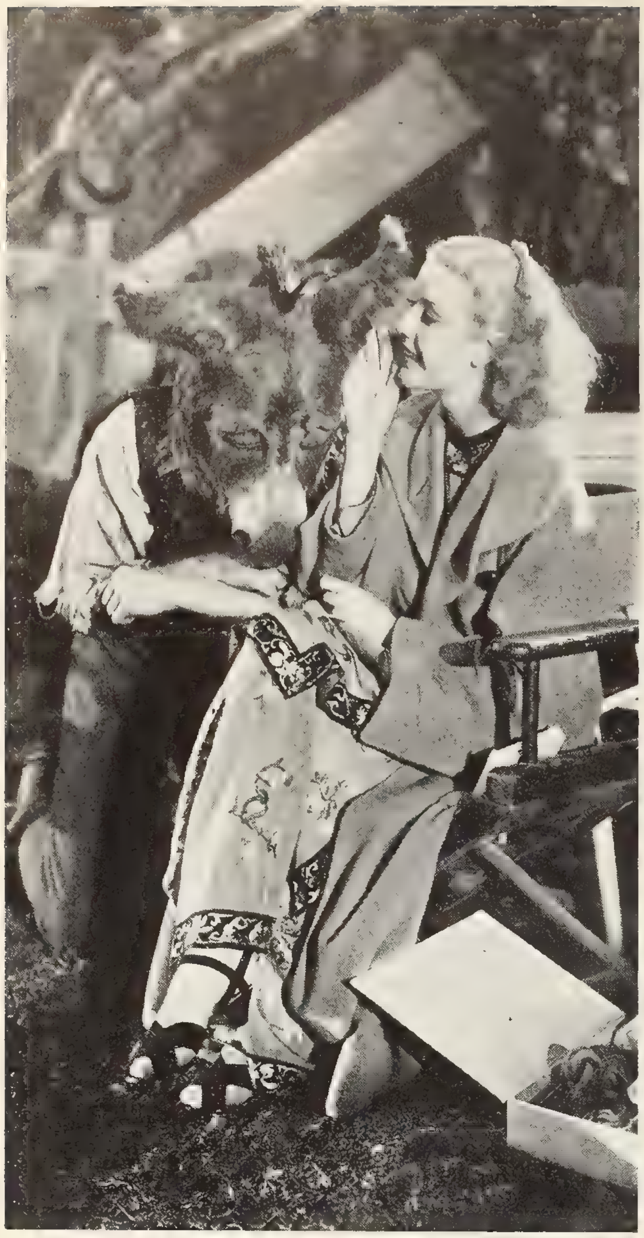


A SILENT STAR. Mae Busch, a star years ago, studies the script of Warner's "Stranded," with Frank Borzage, director.

ON THE WAY. (Left) Is Dorothy Thompson, just given a stock contract by Paramount.

SECOND GENERATION. Of screen youngsters, have their pictures taken. Lee and Barbara Nugent (at top), whose daddy is Elliott Nugent, join Paramount children David Holt, Virginia Weidler, Lois Kent, Betty Holt, Baby LeRoy and Billy Lee.

OH, GEE! OH, GOSH! Wails Harry Langdon, as he casts a not too enthusiastic eye on that pile of spuds, waiting to have their jackets removed by Harry, the poor little soldier who has been assigned to KP (Kitchen Police to you) in the Columbia Pictures short subject, "The Leather Necker," just completed on the Coast, and one of the Broadway Comedies series.



ALL EARS. One of which is being used by Anita Louise, young player on the set of Warner's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," to whisper a secret to—James Cagney, believe it or not, who is the man behind the ears.

ELECTED. Reserve Major Richard N. Sears, Pathe cameraman in Boston, elected president of the New England Signal Post.

CAST. (Below) In Monogram's "The Healer," is Karen Morley, wife of Charles Vidor.

SINGING STAR. Grace Moore, operatic star who scored in "One Night of Love," here appears in an early scene from her latest starring vehicle for Columbia, "Love Me Forever," being directed by Victor Schertzinger.

A KNOTTY PROBLEM. Apparently both in front of him and beside him, is encountered by Buster Keaton, the awkward recruit, in the navy and romance, as in Educational's comedy, "Tars and Stripes," which has just been completed at the San Diego Naval Training Station.

VISITING ADMIRAL. Greeted at the Fox Movietone City studio on a recent visit to the Coast by Warner Baxter, Fox star, was Admiral Joseph M. Reeves, Commander in Chief of the United States fleet. Baxter came off the set of "Under the Pampas Moon," costumed for his leading role.

NEWSREELS COVER STEEPLECHASE; AND THEN THE TROUBLE STARTS

A. P. Says British Cameramen Rushed "Yankees'" Towers, Set Off Flare Bombs Blamed for Balk of Golden Miller

Associated Press sent the following news cable Monday from London to its newspaper wire franchise holders in the United States, as published in the New York Times:

> A feud between British and American newsreel photographers was blamed tonight by competent spokesmen for the failure of Golden Miller, red-hot favorite, to finish in the Grand National steeplechase at Aintree, Friday.
> It was said that a flash of light and a billowing cloud of smoke from a photographer's old-fashioned flash gun startled Golden Miller just as he was getting ready to make a jump, causing the horse to "refuse" and spill Jockey Gerry Wilson, thus saving British bookmakers some $10,000,000.
> Certain British newsreel interests, it was stated, had purchased exclusive official photographing rights on the inside course, paying £1,500, but enterprising American rivals had rushed up with high platform towers at the last minute and stationed them at strategic points on the outside course.
> When British cameramen discovered this "Yankee trick" it was claimed they attempted to storm one of the towers, rocking it violently and attempting to pull it down while American photographers were grinding away on it.
> British policemen drove off the assailants, whereupon the British movie men were said to have resolved upon some strategy of their own. This was revealed when a flare bomb suddenly burst at a crucial moment, just as the rest of the field approached the American cameras, cutting off their view and incidentally, it was said, prompting Golden Miller's $10,000,000 balk.
> Reproductions of the American photographers' shots were published in London newspapers over those of their British rivals, showing Golden Miller approaching the jump, one of the smallest of the course, and subsequent scenes, somewhat obscured by smoke, showing a riderless horse with Jockey Wilson on the ground.

The running of the 97th annual British Grand National Steeplechase last Friday at Aintree found Gaumont-British News, British Movietone (Fox), and British Metrotone (Hearst-Metrotone), described by Associated Press as "certain British newsreel interests," pitted against Pathe, Paramount and Universal, which would represent the "Yankees."

Poaching a Normal Procedure

In England poaching is accepted by virtually all companies as quite normal procedure. Newsreel rights are awarded over there, for a price, to one company exclusively, or to a combination of interests, for practically every public event that can be controlled by the authorities, from the trooping of the colors at the Horse Guards Parade behind their stables in London, to a Grand National Steeplechase. It is found necessary to follow the practice with some consistency in order to fulfill their obligation as a news dispenser both to theatre owner and the public.

The British parcel out these exclusive filming rights, a custom of their own, from a few dollars for the rights to a second-rate tennis match and the like, to $7,500 and $10,000 for an event of the importance of the Grand National.

However, this week's episode immediately revived discussion in London of the advisability of abandoning the system and permitting all newsreels to film unmolested in the open, without charge, a condition for which the American managements have fought in England for years. It is held that the present practice does not protect the reel which pays for the franchise, and compels the others to poach on the event at considerable trouble and unnecessary expense.

The socalled "feud" so internationally flavored as an Anglo-American controversy by the Associated Press was nothing more than the usual strategy to prevent competitive cameramen from stealing pictures to which others had purchased "exclusive" rights. It probably did result in a more realistic "roughing up" of the poachers than is ordinarily handed out, but even that is not a new experience to newsreel cameramen who are ordered and determined to cover the news of the day by camera and microphone.

Pathe Gazette Withdrew Bid

Pathe Gazette, which gives British newsreel coverage to RKO's Pathe News, had, as the highest bidder, controlled the Grand National rights alone for some 12 years, withdrawing its high bid for last week's classic. The reason was not officially disclosed, but it was intimated in New York that the company felt it had paid for the franchise long enough, while the others stole the same pictures, and this year it would take its chance on the outside while some other reel footed the bill.

Gaumont-British News and British Movietone had purchased the franchise together, reputedly for $7,500. This gave Hearst's affiliate, British Metrotone, the right to a copy, since Gaumont in England and Metrotone in the United States have an agreement to exchange all material between them. Gaumont-British News is the only newsreel in England controlled by a British corporation, Gaumont-British Pictures, Ltd., largest producing-distributing-exhibiting company in Great Britain. Fox Film Corporation and Gaumont-British have a sympathetic relation, Fox having a $17,087,618 equity in Gaumont through its investments in Metropolis and Bradford Trust Company, of London, which controls Gaumont.

"Poaching" Jointly

The Fox-Gaumont-Hearst combination left Paramount, Pathe and Universal on the outside, and so they proceeded to "poach" jointly, as outsiders have always done. They filmed the race, but what happened at the course is another matter.

Regardless of who was responsible for the "flare" and subsequent smoke discharge, and the reasons involved in their use, the consensus in newsreel circles is that neither had anything to do with the behavior of Golden Miller. Nor were there any innuendos forthcoming from official sources. The horse threw the same jockey at another race the next day, and there is no record of any nearby flares causing that incident.

Truman Talley, producer of Fox Movietone, in New York, was riled at the Associated Press account of what took place at Aintree, and charged the news service with "attempting to build up in the newspapers a feud between British and American newsreels."

"Furthermore," he declared, "the Associated Press was very inconsistent in its dispatch."

Mr. Talley pointed out that the news cable reported in one place that "a feud between British and American newsreel photographers was blamed" for the accident to Golden Miller, while it reported in a subsequent paragraph that "a flash of light and a billowing cloud of smoke from a photographer's old-fashioned flash gun startled the favorite."

Americans Say Poaching Is Normal Strategy, Deny "Feud", Blame Newspaper Photographer's Oldstyle Powder Flash

"Everyone knows," he explained, "that a newsreel cameraman never carries artificial lighting to a race track. Obviously it was a newspaper still cameraman who shot off an oldstyle powder flash as the horse was about to take the jump. It's probably the old story of the newspapers blaming the newsreels for something they did themselves.

"The Associated Press talks about a feud between British and American newsreel photographers," continued Mr. Talley, "whereas there are no American newsreel photographers in England. The newsreel affiliates over there are separate organizations, staffed by all-British right down to the office boys."

Fox Movietone, Hearst Metrotone and Paramount News in New York had not heard from London about the episode. They were first informed by the Associated Press dispatch appearing in New York newspapers.

M. D. Clofine, editor-in-chief of Metrotone, held to the same opinion as Mr. Talley, that the flare was set off by newspaper still photographers.

W. P. Montague of Paramount News denounced the British system of selling rights to newsreels to film public events.

The five newsreels in New York were awaiting the arrival of the pictures from England, due here Thursday, probably on the SS. Europa.

Heated Dispute in London

The unseating of Jockey Gerry Wilson in the Grand National caused a heated dispute in British sporting circles. There were intimations that large book-making interests, standing to lose $10,000,000 if the favorite Golden Miller won, had something to do with the accident, but these were quickly discounted, and, on the following day, Miss Dorothy Paget's Golden Miller lost his reputation as the best steeplechaser in recent years when he again tossed Jockey Wilson in the Champion Steeplechase race at the same track at Aintree, near Liverpool.

Nor was Miss Paget alone in ill luck. Her cousin, John Hay (Jock) Whitney, millionaire sportsman and head of the Pioneer motion picture producing and Technicolor enterprises of New York and Hollywood, showed the "exasperating luck" that always has followed his efforts to win the blue-ribbon event of steeplechasing when in the Grand National his Thomond II weakened after jumping the last fence and Major Noel Furlong's Reynoldstown and Lady Lindsay's Blue Prince, 22-to-1 and 40-to-1 outsiders, respectively, drew away to finish first and second, and Mr. Whitney's Thomond galloped in eight lengths behind to finish for the second year in succession in third place.

Mr. Whitney's Easter Hero was second in 1929 and his Sir Lindsay ran third in 1930. In last Friday's 97th running of the classic his Thomond took the lead from Golden Miller, "hottest" favorite on record, at 2-to-1, and gained steadily on the others until he was running right behind Reynoldstown.

Royal Ransom, another Jock Whitney entry, spilled his rider early. The Associated Press learned that he had a 10,000 pound sterling (about $47,000) side bet with Cousin Dorothy Paget, that Thomond would beat Golden Miller, although neither would admit making the wager. And with the spills neither won nor did either win the bet.

'BLOOD AND THUNDER' BROADCASTS FOR CHILDREN BRING U.S. WARNING

Federal Commission Chairman Charges Some of Late Afternoon Programs Have Deleterious Effect on the Child Mind

Accused of not completely fulfilling its obligations with regard to the probable effect of broadcasting upon the juvenile mind, the radio broadcasting industry last week was called upon by Anning S. Prall, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, to eliminate all "blood and thunder" features from specified children's programs and generally to "clean house" if broadcasting is to continue successfully. Mr. Prall spoke over a nationwide hookup from Washington.

Mr. Prall said that while he believes radio presents an unequaled opportunity for the development of juvenile talent, he is not entirely certain that it is living up to its obligations with respect to its effect upon the average American child.

"In some cases I am certain it is having a deleterious effect because of some of the programs that are being presented," he said. Mr. Prall said he referred to programs heard in the late afternoon, and that while he did not condemn all of them, he did not approve of those that can be compared to the "dime novels of the 'Dead-eye Dick' or 'Boy Smuggler' variety."

"It is my view," said Mr. Prall, "that the radio people themselves would do well to eliminate programs that arouse the imaginations of children to the point where they can not eat or sleep. Good clean adventure programs can be made educational, and even their commercial messages can be helpful. We cannot censor what is said on the air. That is right and proper, for you can readily see the political consequences if any governmental agency were invested with such bureaucratic powers while any one party is in the ascendancy.

Can Refuse Licenses

"What we can do is maintain a general surveillance over radio stations and networks under our broad authority in the public interest, convenience and necessity. We can take into account the public interest as a whole, or in part, of the general program structures of the radio stations. If they are consistent violators, we can refuse to renew their licenses. As you know, about a half dozen stations have been taken off the air in recent years because of their failure to live up to proper standards of public service."

Mr. Prall said that the fullest possible use of radio as an educational medium has not yet been found and that from the records of hearings before the Commission's broadcast division last autumn both educators and the broadcasters were forced to admit they have not cooperated in this respect.

"Whoever is to blame," Mr. Prall concluded, "the fact remains that they must get together for a unified program of action. It is our plan to get them together for a national conference under our auspices beginning May 15. In my opinion, radio cannot supplant the classroom, but it can supplement classroom instruction very appreciably if properly handled by proper persons."

Last week came the collapse of American Broadcasting Company, an outgrowth of the American Broadcasting System formed by George B. Storer as a group of local stations in cities throughout the East.

The network was disbanded primarily, it was said, because the expense load fell upon station WNEW, New York, which is 84 per cent locally sold commercially, and in order to feed the network this station has had to build double programs, with extra technicians, artists, clerical help and other expenses.

The few remaining stations on the ABC network at the time of its dissolution last week were, in addition to WNEW, stations WTNJ, Trenton; WDEL, Wilmington; WCBM, Baltimore; WOL, Washington; WIP, Philadelphia; W1XBS, Waterbury, Conn.; WPRO, Providence, and WMEX and WHDH, Boston.

Temporarily, WNEW will continue to feed sustaining programs to a few stations in New England, namely, WPRO, WHDH and W1XBS. Unless these stations decide to pay wire charges, this arrangement will be dropped, it was said.

Stories which have appeared from time to time indicating that Columbia Broadcasting System is "interested" in the ABC stations with a view to creating a "junior" network from them, were denied by ABC executives.

Showmanship at WHN

The motion picture industry and the radio broadcasters came one step closer together when it was announced that the Loew-controlled station WHN in New York, whose new directing head is Louis K. Sidney, who succeeded Major Edward Bowes, will inaugurate a "policy of showmanship" as practiced in the motion picture business. Mr. Sidney long has been affiliated in executive capacity with both Loew's, Inc., and its film subsidiary, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

One of Mr. Sidney's first moves was to enter into an arrangement with the William Morris Agency, largest actor representative, which makes the Morris office the controlling operator and equal partner in the WHN talent department, thus giving the station first call on the Morris talent lists.

Mr. Sidney plans further to bring about close coordination between WHN and its film and theatre affiliates and to this end the MGM studios are reported to have agreed to encourage all its contract stars and players to broadcast over WHN when they are in New York. Among players who are said to have agreed to broadcast shortly are Una Merkel, Robert Young, Lewis Stone, Stuart Erwin and Jean Parker, all of whom will be in New York within the next two weeks, and Norma Shearer, Clark Gable and Joan Crawford, who also are expected in New York soon.

WHN's theatre connection with Loew's gives the station a stage outlet such as few other stations enjoy through contractual arrangements.

Bill Asks Extension of Recovery Act

Extension of the industrial recovery act for two years from June 16 next, is provided for in a bill introduced in the Senate last week by Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi.

Although the measure materially amends the present law, by sharply restricting exemptions from the antitrust acts and limiting codes to interstate industries or those whose activities substantially affect interstate commerce, there are indications that a further rewriting of the bill will be sought before it is passed.

General belief is that the general outline of the motion picture code would be retained with amendments.

Automatic extension of all existing codes for 90 days is provided in the bill and within that period they are to be exhaustively analyzed. A long controversy is foreseen if the film code is reopened.

The penalty provisions of the present law are to be eased materially, and all threat of imprisonment for violations eliminated.

No date will be set for a conference between the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America code revision committee, headed by Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, and the Code Authority, pending Congressional action on new NRA legislation. Mr. Kuykendall said the request by the Code Authority for a conference was simply a "serving notice" that the subject is pending.

Los Angeles exhibitors were scheduled to meet to discuss the troublous clearance and zoning schedule, which again was held up by the Code Authority. One obstacle to acceptance of the plan is that it does not embrace first-run admission prices and therefore conflicts with the consent decrees effected through the United States district court of the Southern District of California, in 1930 and 1932. The decrees, signed following agreement between Fox West Coast and various distributors, require that clearance of first-run houses in the zone be reduced when they cut their admission prices.

The Code Authority has $40,897 cash on hand, disbursing $20,132 in February. Receipts included $18,000 from exhibitors. February disbursements were as follows: home office in New York, $7,748; Hollywood office, $2,770; field boards, $9,614. The principal expense was $13,668, for salaries.

Loew's Select Chicago Site In New Expansion Drive

First tangible move made by Loew's, Inc., in its proposed expansion drive for city-wide representation in Chicago, came last weekend with the decision to spend $200,000 on a 1,500-seat theatre, it was learned unofficially. Thomas Lamb, architect, already had prepared sketches for submission to the New York home office as soon as the lease is signed.

Paramount Assent Past Two-Thirds

Creditor assents to the plan of reorganization for Paramount Publix Corporation this week passed the required two-thirds mark when deposits of Paramount Broadway were made. It is estimated that holders of approximately $33,000,000 of the $46,000,000 of claims qualified to vote have now assented. In addition, a majority of Paramount stockholders has approved the plan.

Formal confirmation of the plan was generally expected at the final hearings starting Thursday, before Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe.

Federal reorganization statutes require confirmation of a reorganization plan by two-thirds in amount of all classes of creditors and a majority of stockholders.

Expect Opposition Defeat

The Paramount Broadway bonds, outstanding in the amount of $8,875,000, were the last to reach the required two-thirds quota, and the deposits of these bonds on Monday passed the $6,300,000 mark, or more than 70 per cent of the issue.

Acceptances of the plan by the creditors are taken as final assurance that no effort will be made to change the proposed new Paramount board of directors. Opposition to the board is expected to be raised this week, but lack of strength behind the objections is seen as discrediting their efforts.

A list of objections to the proposed board, together with the suggestion of five alternative names, was completed Monday by Louis M. Levy, who claimed he represented Paramount stockholders, for presentation on Thursday of this week before Judge Coxe in New York. Mr. Levy asserted that some of the nominees are associated with companies whose interests extend to the affairs of Paramount's film competitors; that only three of the proposed board of 16 have had film experience, and that some of the nominees were identified with the formation in Paramount of policies which led to the company's financial embarrassment.

Vatner Attack Ignored

Unless directed to do so by Special Master John E. Joyce, counsel for the Paramount trustees will not answer the affidavit attacking the terms of Paramount's new domestic recording license agreement with Electrical Research Products, Inc., it was revealed.

It was disclosed that Eastern Service Studios will terminate its tenancy of Paramount's Astoria studio immediately on confirmation of the plan of reorganization for Prudence Bonds, Inc., holder of the first mortgage of $930,000 on the property. The new plan provides for leasing of the studio by Paramount News.

Motions to expunge claims against Paramount Publix totaling $191,972 were granted by Special Master Joyce following a hearing last week. The claims included that of Tobis-Tonbild for $11,119; Warner Bros., $75,000; Eastman Kodak, $4,740, and minor claims totaling $1,113. The trustees were granted leave to sue A. C. Blumenthal for $56,000 claimed paid to him in 1932, and for $25,000 of Paramount bonds.

An order allowing the claim of Olympia Theatres' stockholders against Paramount Publix at $1,824,562 upon delivery to Paramount of 52,234 shares of Olympia common stock and 6,509 of preferred, was signed last week in New York by Judge Coxe.

The petition of the Paramount trustees for leave to adopt 181 executory contracts made prior to the company's bankruptcy was unopposed at a hearing Monday.

Columbia Buys Story By Johnston and Hines

Columbia Pictures has purchased the story, "The Butler," written by William A. Johnston and Johnny Hines. It will be placed in production at an early date.

Mr. Johnston has been on the editorial boards of various magazines, including Harper's, American Magazine, Munsey and Century, and was for years editor of Motion Picture News. Mr. Hines has been an actor on the screen and stage for some years.

Protests Censor's Action on Picture

If the New York censor eliminates a single scene from Warner's "Black Fury," Judge M. A. Musmanno, of the common pleas court in Pittsburgh and co-author of the original story, will issue an injunction to stop them, he declared in Pittsburgh last week.

Judge Musmanno wired a protest to the New York board when he learned it was demanding the elimination of "inflammatory scenes." The scene to which there is said to be the greatest objection is that showing the brutal murder of a coal miner by a policeman. This, Judge Musmanno insists, is based entirely on fact, detailing exactly how John Barcosky, a miner at one of the outlying Pittsburgh mines, died several years ago at the hands of the police during a strike.

The jurist charged that "the coal barons of Pennsylvania have sought to prevent the production of this picture and have failed," and declared he hoped "the industrial barons of New York state will not attempt to keep from the people of the Empire State the facts which went into the crucible from which resulted 'Black Fury'."

"There is no reason," he said, "why the incidents surrounding the killing of John Barcosky should not be retained in all their brutal vigor in the cinema production. The picture is not an exaggeration but portrays the shambles of the Pennsylvania coal fields."

He said the picture has already been changed from the original draft to take some of the "sting" from it.

Harry R. Irving, author of "Bohunk," the play on which "Black Fury" is based, in a letter to the judge, declared he does not desire to be a party to "any intrusion, legal or otherwise, upon the rights and prerogatives of the New York board of censors. . . . I do not believe that it lies within the province of either of us to contest any action taken by a public or quasi-public body."

MPPDA Takes Space To Coordinate Offices

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America has taken additional space at its New York headquarters at 28 West 44th Street, on the 22nd floor, in order to coordinate its departments. The main offices are on the 21st floor, and the production and advertising councils and public relations department will be moved from the 15th to the 22nd floor.

'Bank Nights' Gain In New England

"Bank nights" are spreading throughout New England. From Boston came reports that more than a dozen contracts have been signed with theatres. Theatres in Vermont, New Hampshire and Rhode Island were evidencing interest.

The Boston grievance board has not as yet been called upon to decide on a case regarding the legality of "bank nights."

In Chicago this week "Screeno" experienced a setback when stop orders were issued in two cases by the grievance board.

Injunction suits restraining the local grievance board from outlawing "bank nights" will be filed in several territories, it was said in Detroit this week, following the filing of a similar suit by A. H. Blank. It is understood theatres in several states are contemplating such actions.

Hearing on a permanent restraining order against the Detroit board is scheduled for April 6 by Judge Charles A. Dewey in U. S. district court there. The action is based on a cease and desist order against a Central States theatre at Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The theatre contends that the awarding of the prize does not constitute a violation of the NRA and the suit also attacks the NRA's constitutionality.

Sixty per cent of theatres in Detroit are giving away premiums of one sort or another, most of them two nights weekly. A year ago less than 10 per cent of Detroit theatres had giveaways.

Spreading to the majority of independently operated suburban theatres in the last few weeks, the premium vogue will reach its peak in Kansas City about April 20 when Fox Midwest plans to inaugurate a coupon plan at its local theatres, including its first-run Uptown.

Mrs. A. Baier of the suburban Lindbergh in Kansas City plans to ask a representative to introduce a state bill banning premiums at theatres or making it illegal to give added inducements when playing a picture day and date with equally priced houses not adopting the practice.

Projectionists Would Benefit By Two Proposed State Bills

Projectionists would benefit by bills proposed in Pennsylvania and Rhode Island. Assemblyman John Yourishin in Pennsylvania proposed 24 consecutive hours' rest each week, not including the Sunday holiday, while in Rhode Island Senator William Troy asked for compulsory employment of an operator for each machine.

In New York Compliance Director Sol Rosenblatt failed to indicate, upon returning to NRA Washington headquarters, when he would call another meeting of the NRA fact-finding committee which has been attempting to iron out local labor difficulties.

The NRA Labor Relations Board appointed Charles C. Moskowitz, of Loew's as a member of the regional board in New York.

BROADWAY SETS THREE-YEAR HIGH FOR SIMULTANEOUS STAGE SHOWS

41 Legitimate Plays Run in One Week; Fluctuation in Number of Theatres Open and Closed Returns to Normal

by FRED AYER

A new three-year high for simultaneous Broadway showings is being set by the legitimate stage this season and the fluctuation in the number of theatres open and closed approximates the normalcy of predepression years. Only four times in the season—which in about six weeks will be officially at a close—has the number of shows running simultaneously fallen below corresponding periods of 1933-34, the other weeks showing activity far in advance of either of the past two seasons.

In addition, the peak for the season was reached in the week ended just after Christmas when there were 41 productions running at one time. The previous high was in the same period of 1931 when there were 42 legitimate attractions on Broadway.

Although the usual Broadway season gets underway the first week in August, the current season showed little indication of activity until the second week of September. During the first three weeks of August there were only five productions running. One of these was a musical, "Life Begins at 8:40," which closed only three weeks ago, and another was "Tobacco Road," still running.

In the 1933-34 cycle the peak for simultaneous production was 33, as against the current season high of 41 for the week ended Dec. 30, 1934.

February of the 1933-34 season was when the peak of 33 was reached, an unusual time, producers consider. This season the figures for February were normal, fluctuating between 23 and 26 each week.

On March 30 of this season, the Broadway show calendar listed 30 productions running, three ahead of the same weekend of the previous season. For the current week, ending April 6, there are 26 productions, including the three scheduled to open this week, bringing the season again back to normal.

That National Theatre Idea

The legitimate theatre's annual debating tourney about creation of a National Theatre on the European plan got away to an early start this week when Harry Moses, currently producer of "The Old Maid," launched himself via the columns of the New York Times as opposed to any project which has as its central idea the establishment of a National Theatre. Mr. Moses believed that influential persons really interested in promotion of the theatre's general welfare and prepared to do something, would be much more interested in giving their support if they became financially interested themselves rather than if simply called upon to assist in the spending of money bestowed by a kindly and beneficent state.

"I am fearful of the paralyzing hand of bureaucracy were an attempt made to establish a National Theatre," said Mr. Moses.

Mr. Moses' plan, he said, is far more comprehensive than the Theatre Guild subscription plan in force in a few Eastern and Middlewestern cities. It is a plan to make a group of subscribers in each of 20 or more cities participating partners in the productions which would be launched from a central headquarters such as New York. The plan would provide for showing in each city a series of new plays each year with first-class casts, guaranteeing a season of at least 40 weeks for every production, with minimum intake assured.

The New York or central headquarters engagement would be limited, Mr. Moses explained, by the number of pledged supporters. This might be four, six or eight weeks, according to road bookings, and the same rule probably would apply to the other cities, although there undoubtedly would be a minimum of one week.

Mr. Moses said the response from representative groups in half a dozen cities has been favorable.

Samuelson Picks Regional Leaders

Sidney E. Samuelson, president of Allied, last week announced the organization's six regional vice-presidents for his cabinet and the territories each will supervise. The six are:

WALTER B. LITTLEFIELD of Boston, to supervise Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

MARTIN G. SMITH, Toledo, to supervise western Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, West Virginia and Kentucky.

AARON SAPERSTEIN of Chicago, for Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

W. A. STEFFES of Minneapolis, for North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska and Iowa.

NEWMAN H. WATERS, Birmingham, for North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Florida.

COL. HARRY A. COLE of Dallas, for Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Kansas.

Harry Brandt was renamed, as expected, as head of the New York Independent Theatre Owners' Association last week, without opposition. Bernard Barr was elected first vice-president; Charles Schwartz, second vice-president, and Maurice Brown, re-elected treasurer.

The Tri-State Motion Picture Theatre Owners will hold its spring convention at the Hotel Chicsa in Memphis, Tenn., April 14-15, R. X. Williams, secretary and treasurer, announced.

Allied Owners Creditors Vote on Plan April 19

Creditors of Allied Owners Corporation will vote April 19 on confirmation of the company's plan of reorganization which provides for theatre purchase agreements with Loew's and Paramount, it was decided last week at a hearing before Federal Judge Robert Inch in Brooklyn.

Although a preponderance of the creditors represented indicated sufficient strength for ultimate confirmation, the adjournment was taken to comply with agreements which permit dissenting creditors to withdraw from committees which favor the plan. Inasmuch as the plan received the tentative approval of the court only ten days ago, it was felt that insufficient time had been afforded to dissenting out-of-town creditors for withdrawal.

Italian Cabinet Grants Film Subsidy

The Italian cabinet at Rome last week granted a five-year annual subsidy of $1,000,000 to motion picture producers to encourage Italian film production.

Newsreel Crews Call Code Failure

Dissatisfied with working conditions and failure of the motion picture's NRA code to provide an increase in employment, newsreel cameramen are demanding revisions of those code clauses which cover maximum working hours and clarification of a cameraman's working hours. A committee of five, representing cameramen's locals and the newsreel companies, was appointed in New York this week to confer with William P. Farnsworth, deputy administrator of the amusement codes.

The Code Provisions

Under provisions of the motion picture code, newsreel cameramen are not permitted to work more than 320 hours in eight weeks, or 40 hours weekly, but the code stipulates that these hours are to be computed from the time such employees leave their base of operation with their equipment until the time of their return, or are required to remain in a designated place.

The clause states further that "contacting and planning shall not be computed as working hours, which, according to O. V. Johnson, business manager of Local 644, New York, of the International Photographers of the Motion Picture Industry and I. A. T. S. E., means in effect that a cameraman may sit in the newsreel office for four hours waiting for an assignment, be called on a job for two hours and then be credited with only two hours' work.

"In spite of the NRA code," Mr. Johnson said Wednesday, "no men have been put to work. In fact, we have lost men in all sections of the country.

More Reels, Fewer Jobs

"In Chicago since the first of this year, five newsreel cameramen have been let out of jobs and in the East at least two have been dropped in that time. The same situation prevails in Hollywood.

"When the code was drawn there were only four reels operating with independent camera crews throughout the world. Today there are five and still there has been no increase in employment."

The committee, in addition to Mr. Johnson, consists of William H. Strafford, business manager of Local 666, Chicago; Jack Connolly, Pathe News; A. J. Richards, Paramount News, and Lou Krouse of the IATSE. Mr. Connolly and Mr. Richards have authority to act for all the newsreel companies.

The first conference between these representatives took place late last week and another meeting to draw up proposals to be presented to Mr. Farnsworth was set for Thursday of this week. The committee is a permanent group.

Eastman Kodak Reports Salaries to Commission

In connection with applications on "Form 10" for permanent registration of securities on stock exchanges, the Eastman Kodak Company, reporting with other corporations filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington, reported remuneration of officers this week as follows: Frank W. Lovejoy, president and general manager, $90,903.90; William G. Stuber, chairman of board, $61,230.76; Thomas J. Hargrave, vice-president and secretary, and C. E. Kenneth Mees, vice-president, $45,000.

Eleven other officers received an aggregate of $228,928.43. George H. Clark, director, as of March 14 was listed as the heaviest stockholder, with 2,000 preferred and 15,000 common.

Cantor's Collaborator Sues Him for $250,000

An eight-year friendship on Broadway between Eddie Cantor and David Freedman, script writer and Cantor collaborator, ended this week when the comedian was sued by the writer for $250,000 for alleged breach of contract.

Mr. Freedman charged that an oral contract existed whereby he would receive 10 per cent of Cantor's radio earnings. Four years ago, Cantor's radio earnings were said to be $2,000 weekly; now they approximate $10,000 a week. Freedman estimated the comedian had earned $3,000,000 in the eight years of their association, whereas his own income from their joint endeavors had been about $50,000.

Mr. Cantor, denying the charges to newspapers, explained there were weeks in which he had paid Freedman 15 to 18 per cent of his radio salary.

Boycott, Myers' Reply to Circuits

Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, this week in Minneapolis suggested a nationwide boycott of distributors who threaten the building of theatres to effect the sale of product. Mr. Myers, speaking before the annual convention of Northwest Allied States, aimed his remarks directly at the planned theatre building program of Loew's, Inc., in Chicago and elsewhere, and described a united front by exhibitors against any company forcing the purchase of its product by threats as not only defensible but practical as well.

"While a boycott is illegal," Mr. Myers admitted, "so is murder, except in self-defense, and independents, no matter how few, are still powerful enough to bankrupt any company using such tactics, if they stick together."

The Allied general counsel characterized the motion picture code as "the most scandalous" of all codes under NRA. He said that the continuation of NRA is inevitable and that theatres must work for code amendments and a balanced Code Authority.

Nathan Yamins, head of Allied's New England unit and a Code Authority member, said the code was drawn and administered by producer-distributor interests, with the exhibitor "on the short end of the deal." He recommended complete revision of the code and a Code Authority made up equally of both producer-distributor and exhibitor interests, both major and independent.

Mr. Myers predicted that Congress will pass the Pettengill bill prohibiting compulsory block booking at this session, and described the measure as the only possible means of breaking "the film monopoly." During the convention Mr. Myers received word from Washington that the Senate finance committee would hear him on the motion picture code next Monday.

J. B. Clinton, Duluth, was elected president of Northwest Allied, and was also named a member of the board of five to govern the organization. Others named to the board were S. B. Lebedoff, El Peasley, Gus Baehr and Bill Glazer.

Exhibition Ruled Intrastate Action

Ruling on the motion of Harry Huffman, Denver exhibitor, to strike out certain portions of the government's answer in his effort to have made permanent an injunction preventing distributors from stopping service to his theatres as directed by the local grievance board, Judge J. Symes in United States district court, Denver, ruled last week that when films arrive in a state and are received by a distributor, they cease to be in interstate commerce and are not subject to federal regulations. He called exhibition purely intrastate commerce, and said the NRA had no power to interfere.

Judge Symes declared he will hear further argument on the government's contention that Mr. Huffman is in violation of the anti-monopoly laws, in his operation of a lottery. The court ruled the Colorado state NRA act unconstitutional. A state court judge had previously ruled similarly. Judge Symes said: "The whole proposition of NRA codes being set up as law is unconstitutional, in my opinion. Legislating of socalled codes of fair competition is done by a group of private industries."

Pathe's Air Newsreel Will Start April 8

The Pathe Newsreel of the Air will begin on a twice weekly basis April 8 over the Mutual network, with station WOR, Newark, as the key outlet. Last week it was reported the program would be heard over the NBC network, but both NBC and the Columbia System have a prohibition on recorded programs and the Pathe sound track, which will play a prominent part in the broadcasts, is considered in the same classification as a record.

Other stations which will carry the program are WLW, WXYL and WGN. WGN, WOR and WXYZ will broadcast the newsreel at 9:45 P. M. Eastern Standard time and WLW at 7 P. M. on Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

Bromo-Seltzer has begun a billboard campaign on the Pathe broadcast.

Reports of New Plans for Fox Metropolitan Doubted

With the creditors' hearing on the Joseph M. Schenck-Fox Theatres plan of reorganization for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses set for April 15, reports were circulating in New York this week that an established theatre company is planning to present another plan of reorganization or purchase of the 86 Fox Metropolitan properties in Greater New York. Si Fabian was said to be considering submission of a bid. One version of a reported new plan said it would be supported by Fox Metropolitan bondholders who are dissatisfied with the 25 per cent write-down of the circuit's bonds proposed in the Schenck-Fox Theatres plan. Another report had the supposed offer backed by the Greenblatt financial interests of Philadelphia.

Fox Midwest, as Fox Midcontinent with Elmer Rhoden in charge, and Fox Rocky Mountain as Associated Theatres with Rick Ricketson in charge, will emerge from bankruptcy May 4.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

Terry Ramsaye's remarks concerning the Parent-Teachers' plan to take the motion picture out of the theatre and put it in the classroom recalls a story which has been going the rounds of Kansas legislative circles.

It seems a member was haranguing the state assembly about the necessity of consolidating rural schools in the interest of efficiency and economy.

"We have some schools with only four or five pupils," he orated. "Why, I even know of a school where there is only one pupil, and he's a half-wit. What'll we do with him?"

"Send him to the legislature!" thundered back someone in the somnolent chamber.

Floyd Fitzimmons, managing Century Circuit's Grove theatre at Freeport, on Long Island, verifies the authenticity of our recent observation on this page that it's a wife's second nature to take charge of all her husband's winnings; and so it must be a terrible strain on the women whose husbands are called as the winners of "bank night" money in our motion picture theatres.

It seems that a male patron at Floyd's Grove theatre left the auditorium for a few moments, and, while he was enjoying a smoke in the lounge on the mezzanine floor his name was called as the winner of a $250 "bank night" award. The allotted time passed with no one answering to claim the prize. Therefore, as is customary, it was forfeited, to be awarded at another time. Some few minutes later the patron strolled down the stairs with a very peaceful and contented expression, only to be pounced upon by his wife, who shouted "Where the hell were you. You're a nincompoop; you walked out on $250. It would have bought so many dresses."

Besides, she went west fully expecting never to see the studio, never to see the people who hired her, never to see anyone but the paymaster, and they actually made her spend 15 minutes on the lot explaining that they had made the hero of her novel, who was a radio engineer, a horticulturist.

Lou Sobol, Broadway reporter for Hearst, sends back from his vacation in Hollywood, an account of colored Bill Robinson's visit to Mississippi, when, dropping in to see a picture, he walked up-stairs to the balcony, in keeping with the Jim Crow ruling of segregation, and observed that every so often a bell clanged out loudly. Later he inquired and learned that whenever there was a situation in the picture which brought a laugh from the white folks, an attendant would hit the gong as a signal that then the colored folks had permission to laugh too!

Mr. Robinson, the pride of Harlem, has, since "The Little Colonel," become one of filmdom's noted performers. He is reputed to have enough important film assignments ahead to keep him out there for many months. For publicity purposes Bill has posed, at the request of the studios, with many white stars—Katharine Hepburn, Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter, Shirley Temple, Evelyn Venable, John Boles, Fred Astaire, Harriet Hoctor and others—none of whom objected to being photographed with the sepian. Only one actor refused to pose with him—Stephin' Fetchit, who is blacker than Pittsburgh soot!

U.S. COURT DEFINITELY CLOSES TRI-ERGON CASE

Supreme Bench Refuses to Allow William Fox Rehearing of "Flywheel" Patent Case

The United States supreme court at Washington on Monday put a final halt to William Fox's attempts to collect possible millions in royalties on his Tri-Ergon sound patents when it refused to grant him a rehearing. Mr. Fox had refused to believe that his patents were "lacking in invention," as ruled last month by this tribunal. Challenging the propriety of the decision he filed last week a petition for a rehearing in the Altoona-Publix and Wilmer and Vincent "flywheel" case, involving theatre reproducers. The court acted with unusual swiftness in refusing to rehear.

Barely getting under the wire before the final hour of the 30-day period within which the petition could be filed, Mr. Fox's American Tri-Ergon Corporation answered the speculation in the industry as to whether he would continue the fight on the outcome of which he stood to win or lose possibly scores of millions in royalties.

Monday's decision had not been expected before April 8th.

Three Contentions Fail

Mr. Fox's lost plea was based on three contentions:

(1) That in deciding the flywheel claim invalid for want of invention, the court had made statements unsupported by or in contradiction with the formal record;

(2) that the court erred in throwing out the disclaimers in the flywheel case, and

(3) that as a result of this action, confusion has been created which makes it impossible for the lower courts to determine whether a disclaimer is valid when it adds a "new element" to a claim.

The whole question of whether the Tri-Ergon patents made sound film feasible hinged upon the first point, and it was on this that Fox's petition laid greatest stress. It was contended that the exhibitor-defendant's own experts, during trial of the case, had admitted there was a demand for sound, and that this demand was in existence as early as 1913, when Thomas A. Edison attempted to use a phonograph in the theatres, but that no system proved workable until the Tri-Ergon method was developed.

Over a period of a number of years, the court was told, investigators sought diligently to develop sound pictures, among them DeForest, Fox, Western Electric and General Electric.

"Certainly these people were not interesting themselves and spending their money for the fun of it," the petition declared. "There was a great public demand ever since 1913. And yet this court states that there was no public demand until 1926 and that 'when the need arose for a mechanism suitable to move film records with such speed constancy as to produce sound successfully, it was forthcoming.' It was forthcoming, but from these patentees, and as early as 1921, who were the first to give sound-on-film sound pictures to the world, and their work has now been appropriated by the great corporations of this country and with impunity under this court's treatment of what, we respectfully submit, was a pioneer invention."

Cited Supreme Court Cases

Contending that the court erred in rejecting the disclaimers, the petition cited a number of cases in which the supreme court had "recognized the validity of disclaimers in limitation of a claim to a species of a general class covered by the claim" and declared this to be precisely the nature of the disclaimer involved in the suit when properly applied.

"This court in the present opinion as we read it has broadly condemned the disclaimer here because it added a new element, regardless of what it was and regardless of whether the subject matter was disclosed as part of the original invention," it was argued.

"If we are correct in our analysis of the disclaimer cases approved by this court in its opinion, as we firmly believe we are, it will be quite impossible for the lower courts to determine whether a disclaimer which adds 'a new element to a combination previously claimed' is valid or invalid."

It was also pointed out that the court in its opinion asserted that the courts below paid no attention to the question of the disclaimer, yet the lower court, it was contended, stated expressly that "all the other defences" were considered and rejected as not "substantial."

The Tri-Ergon case had been before the Supreme Court since last fall, and had received more attention than do most of the disputes which come to Washington. Following an adverse decision in the lower courts, the producers and exhibitors involved in the initial suits appealed to the Supreme Court, only to have their plea rejected, which would have affirmed the decision. An application for reconsideration was filed and the court reversed itself and set the case for argument, halting a number of suits which Tri-Ergon had instituted on the basis of the court's previous action.

New Copyright Bill Introduced in Congress

The State Department's new draft of copyright legislation was brought before Congress this week as part of a bill introduced by Senator Duffy of Wisconsin, as chairman of the foreign relations committee which investigated copyrights.

Senator Tydings of Maryland also brought the copyright question before Congress this week when he submitted a resolution calling for an investigation of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers because of alleged abuses upon "hundreds" of Maryland business establishments. Senator Tydings charged that "under certain rulings of the supreme court," ASCAP and its subsidiaries are "exercising dictatorial powers, developing a 'racket' that could never have been intended to be endowed upon any organization by any court."

Seton Selects 43 Screen 'Immortals' Of the Silent Era

A certain "immortality" has been bestowed upon 43 players of the silent era of the motion picture, by virtue of the fact that Harold Seton, champion first-nighter and owner of a collection of 10,000 theatrical photographs, has given their photos to the New York Historical Society. Mr. Seton called his gift to such a conservative group as the Society, "the most dignified compliment that's ever been paid to the movies."

Mr. Seton selected from his vast collection those players whom he considered most representative of the silent day of the screen. He has attended every first night for the past 26 years and revealed that he had become a motion picture "fan" many years ago, when, he said, "Everybody said, 'You ought to see the movies, but they will hurt your eyes,' so I went to a nickelodeon on Fourteenth street. Adolph Zukor sold me a ticket for a nickel."

"One of the first film stars to attract my attention," he said, "was Mary Pickford. Her trademark was the golden curls. William S. Hart, he was the idol of American kids. Twenty-five years ago Douglas Fairbanks was a successful juvenile on the Broadway stage.

"I saw the first appearance in America of Charlie Chaplin. It was at Hammerstein's Victoria, where the Rialto is now. I remember Marion Davies as the prettiest girl in Ziegfeld's Follies."

RCA Denies Monopoly Charge of Government

Radio Corporation of America this week in Wilmington, Del., filed an answer in denial of the government's charge that it and RCA Communications, Inc., an RCA subsidiary, have a monopoly on international communications.

RCA's answer, filed in United States district court, stated that it is faced with keen competition from companies that carry 80 per cent of telegraphic communications throughout the world and 99.9 per cent of domestic traffic. The company denied further that its purpose is to prevent any competitor from engaging in the business of transmitting messages by radio and that any of its international contracts have been made to restrain communications between the United States and foreign countries.

BRITISH BOOKING BY EXHIBITORS' OFFICIAL ASSOCIATION PROPOSED

Odeon Circuit Planning to Build 50 More Before End of Year; 14 Starting Soon, Each with An Architect of Its Own

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

If a sufficient number of exhibitors were to decide to have their booking done by the General Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the renters' society "could bluster and threaten until it was blue in the face," declared W. R. Fuller, general secretary, in the annual report of the CEA.

Premising that "a combination of circumstances has enabled the renters to force film hire to uneconomic heights," Mr. Fuller said that a failure of exhibitors to hold together in enforcing a resolution to pay no more than 40 per cent for the whole program, is a cause of present evils.

Other significant references were that "as a result of mergers amongst the American renting houses the relatively few individuals who control the major portions of supplies were able to impose their wishes upon a number of exhibitors many times greater. . . . It may be anticipated from now onwards that there will be groupings of exhibitors in order to create equal bargaining powers with the renters, and permit the laws of supply and demand to operate freely."

Significant in these remarks is the insistence on the value of booking combinations, within or without the CEA, for the purpose of lowering prices.

In view of the KRS action in questioning the recent deals whereby Gaumont-British bought interests in Union Cinemas and H & G Cinemas and proposed to book for these halls, there can be little doubt that distributors would be disposed to accept any such challenge as an invitation to a battle royal.

It is symptomatic of the tension in the trade that the CEA has already, in a Manchester court, sought to obtain an injunction to restrain the KRS from exercising a booking boycott, under its credit restriction scheme, against a local exhibitor.

There was a suggestion of anti-climax in Mr. Fuller's comment on another outstanding problem. "As there seems to be a disposition on the part of the renters to recognize the value of a standard contract," he remarked, "no useful purpose would be served by an account of the discussions that are past." Trade history rather suggests that there will be plenty of interest in the discussions on this point that have still to come.

Doubt Direct Tax Remission

The experts now are predicting there will be no remission of direct taxation, and undoubtedly the trade's hopes have received a severe blow. Possibly they are not dead, but even the assistance of a committee of Members of Parliament, in the House itself, seems now to be much less important than it did before the announcement of the increases of Navy, Army and Air Force.

A new major British circuit is shaping rapidly, concurrently with considerable official alarm about "redundancy." Oscar Deutsch, creator of the Odeon circuit, who has erected 50 theatres in all parts of the country, expects to make the total 100 before the end of the year.

Fourteen are scheduled for early erection, and each will have its own architect. This is just another indication of Deutsch's liking for experiment. Expansion is by erection and not by purchase; when his circuit is completed it will be 100 per cent modern. Every hall is a "super," with the common feature that they are designed on the stadium one-tier system or a slight modification of it. Practically every building is a neighborhood house.

Mr. Deutsch is the man who put the British Thompson-Houston sound system on the market, selling through F. A. Enders, of the now defunct FBO, Ltd., in the first instance.

ABFD Expansion

Associated British Film Distributors, selling end of Associated Talking Pictures of the Ealing studio, has just issued details of its expansion program, consequent upon the reciprocal deal with First Division. With twenty Mascots for British distribution, on top of the First Division product, and the security of its own American release through First Division, ABFD will also have a much bigger lineup from ATP. Basil Dean is going to Hollywood in September to discuss joint production.

The practice of British distributing houses of making a double release date in London has long been questioned by the London and Home Counties Branch of the CEA, and the KRS has now agreed to appoint members to a joint committee with exhibitors to try to find a solution.

May Raise Federal Housing Aid Limit

Congress is expected shortly to approve legislation which will increase from $2,000 to $50,000 the amount which may be loaned to business properties, including theatres, under the Federal Housing Act.

The House already has indicated support of the increase, and Housing officials anticipate that similar support can be obtained in the Senate, which would simplify passage. Administration officials have contended consistently that the maximum of $2,000 has made virtually impossible any extensive use of the government's assistance by business men, whereas it is believed that a $50,000 maximum will greatly extend the field.

Cooperating in the Federal Housing Administration's program, the Johns-Manville Company, building material manufacturers, have prepared a five-reel film, "Before and After," showing to building contractors.

Reginald Berkeley Dies in Hollywood

Reginald Berkeley, English dramatic writer, who was under contract as a Fox scenarist, and who came to Hollywood to adapt "Cavalcade" for the screen, died at Good Samaritan Hospital, Los Angeles, last week, of pneumonia which developed after a major operation performed several days before. Mr. Berkeley was 45 years old.

At one time a member of Parliament, Mr. Berkeley was also a member of the British delegation to the League of Nations. After the war, during which he received several decorations for gallantry in action, he resumed his writing, "French Leave," a play, enjoying a long run. Winfield Sheehan, head of Fox production, was responsible for Mr. Berkeley coming to Hollywood, where he was also known as a player. He recently returned to Hollywood, after signing a new Fox contract, from a vacation in England, where his widow and three children are living.

Mr. Berkeley was born in London, taken to Australia as a child, and practiced law in New Zealand for several years, returning to England shortly before the outbreak of the war. Stories he adapted in addition to "Cavalcade," which won the 1933 award of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, were "The World Moves On," "Carolina" and "Marie Galante."

Session on Barring Doubles April 9th

Harry Brandt, president of the New York Independent Theatre Owners' Association, who has launched a campaign to eliminate double features in the Greater New York exchange territory, this week sent invitations to 26 exhibitor and distributor executives in New York to participate in a round table discussion on doubles and on increased admission prices. The meeting is to be held April 9 at the New York Motion Picture Club.

Mr. Brandt's plan is to bring about an increase in admission prices in the territory which, he contends, would normally result from the abolition of twin bills.

RKO, Loew's and Skouras Theatres have formally declared themselves in favor of Mr. Brandt's plan.

In Canton, Ohio, all nine houses went over to the dual bill policy. The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association Monday voted to prepare for signatures an agreement to continue with single features in all member theatres, effective July 8.

A ban on double bills in Flint, Mich., got underway in accordance with an agreement reached early last month.

In Kansas City, with the single exception of Paramount, all distributors have agreed to permit double billing, according to a report.

U. S. COMPANIES AWAIT NEXT MOVE IN BELGIAN QUOTA DEMAND FIGHT

Protest They Do Not Intend to Dub Pictures Twice in French, Once for France and Second Time for the Belgian Market

by PIERRE AUTRE

Special Correspondence

Whether Belgium will have its own quota is the warmly discussed question which is giving the Belgium cinema industry, and the French as well, much to ponder over.

The issue had its beginning when the French quotas issued on July 1932, July 1933, July 1934 and November 1934 stopped all importation into France of any kind of foreign pictures dubbed in French in the outside countries.

Two languages are used in Belgium: French in the territory touching the French border, and Flemish in the other part along the Dutch border. Thus half of Belgium, including Brussels, speaks French; the other half, with Antwerp, speaks Flemish. Until now, all the pictures shown in Belgium have been foreign pictures; there virtually is no home production. Since sound came in, there have been three or four Belgium pictures with French dialogue, three or four with either French or Flemish dialogue.

Thus the Belgian market has been entirely in the hands of foreign companies. The kinds of pictures shown in Belgium are mainly:

(1) French pictures with Flemish titles for the Flemish territory.

(2) American, British, German and others in the original version, with superimposed French and Flemish titles.

(3) American, British, German and others in French dubbings with Flemish titles.

(4) A few American or German pictures dubbed in Flemish. These dubbings were made in Belgium or Holland.

Most of the pictures have been French or foreign dubbed in French.

As the French quota required dubbing in French territory and foreign pictures which would be shown in France, all the foreign pictures, including those to appear in Belgium, were dubbed in the French language once and for all in the French studios. American distributors did not care to dub their pictures in Belgium, as they knew they could not import them into France.

In December, 1933, some Belgian distributors sent a letter to the minister of foreign affairs of Belgium asking that in the case of all foreign pictures to be shown in their countries as French or Flemish dubbings, the government should decree that they be dubbed in Belgium.

This demand had no immediate effect and the question was left in abeyance. Then on November 24, 1934, the French Government issued a new quota proclamation effective for six months. Under this decree, as in the previous ones, foreign pictures of more than three reels had to be dubbed on French territory and could not exceed 94 pictures for six months.

The French Government, asked by the Belgium cinema organizations to allow free entrance into France of pictures dubbed in Belgium, refused to make this exception to the French quota.

So the Belgian distributors, the same who had asked for a Belgian quota, addressed a report to the King of Belgium, Leopold III. Out of this came three weeks ago a royal decree which regulates the importing of foreign pictures into Belgium, with these stipulations:

For importation of motion pictures (printed) will be required a special license delivered by the Minister of Economic Affairs.

The Ministers of Finance and Economic Affairs are charged with execution of the decree.

On issuance of this decree, which concerned not only dubbings, but all kinds of pictures, the directors of the Belgium branches of MGM, Paramount, Warner, United Artists, Universal and Fox addressed a solemn protest to the minister of economic affairs.

Americans Protest

The American companies argued that it is impossible for them to dub their pictures in Belgium, that they organized special studios for dubbing in France and they do not intend to dub a picture in French twice, once in Paris and the second time in Belgium, that they would prefer to drop the Belgian market.

After a stormy meeting of the Chambre Syndicale of the Belgium Cinematography, the American companies resigned.

The issue is clear cut. On one side are those who would like to create in Belgian a national cinema industry; on the other side stand the American companies adamant against dubbing their pictures in Belgium when they already have been dubbed in France for the French market.

It will be impossible to recover the price of a dubbing in French made especially in Belgium for the French speaking segment of Belgium.

A Hungarian picture, dubbed in French in Belgium, has not yet been admitted by the French censorship.

The French Chambre Syndicale de la Cinematographie proposes that the French Government allow an entirely free exchange between France and Belgium. It might be an eventuality that the French Government, in agreement with the French and Belgium distributors, would allow free importation into France of all Belgian pictures produced in Belgium, or foreign pictures dubbed in French or Flemish on Belgian soil. These pictures would be considered as produced or dubbed in France. And that would be the end of the Belgian Quota.

Steffes Opens Theatre

Al Steffes will open the Shubert in Minneapolis this week under the name of the Alvin. Vaudeville and films will be the policy. Mr. Steffes has spent $60,000 in remodeling the house.

Leslie Howard Is Oppressed by the Films, He Declares

Leslie Howard, star of the screen and stage, told a conference on acting in New York last week that he had no desire to continue to play in the commercial theatre, including the motion picture. The conference was arranged by the Beekman Hill Neighbors and Leighton Rollins, director of the Studio of Acting.

Mr. Howard, who is playing in "The Petrified Forest" successful Broadway play, contrasted the New York theatre and his work for the motion picture in Hollywood. Some things about Hollywood, the climate, the fact that there were no long runs, and working hours which permitted an actor to keep the normal hours of most persons, Mr. Howard liked, but, he declared there is something oppressing in the realization that a motion picture was just a vast machine that controlled everyone connected with it.

Scripts Mr. Howard called "fantastic effusions," and the actor, he said, is given no consideration in the selection of a script, and really knows little or nothing about it until he is called upon to act.

"I have no desire any more to play in the commercial theatre," he said. "And the movies are purely commercial. My plan would be to use that economic independence which the movies can give to an actor, to seek to eliminate the commercial theatre and to attempt to create the kind of a theatre in which we, as actors, could find the opportunity to do the sort of thing we want to do.

"I noticed the other day that Miss Helen Hayes had announced her withdrawal from the movies and said she didn't particuarly like herself in the movies. Like Miss Hayes, I don't particularly like myself in the movies either. But the movies remain the chance the actor has to become economically independent of the movies, and of Broadway, too, in the commercial sense."

Ambuter Takes Partners

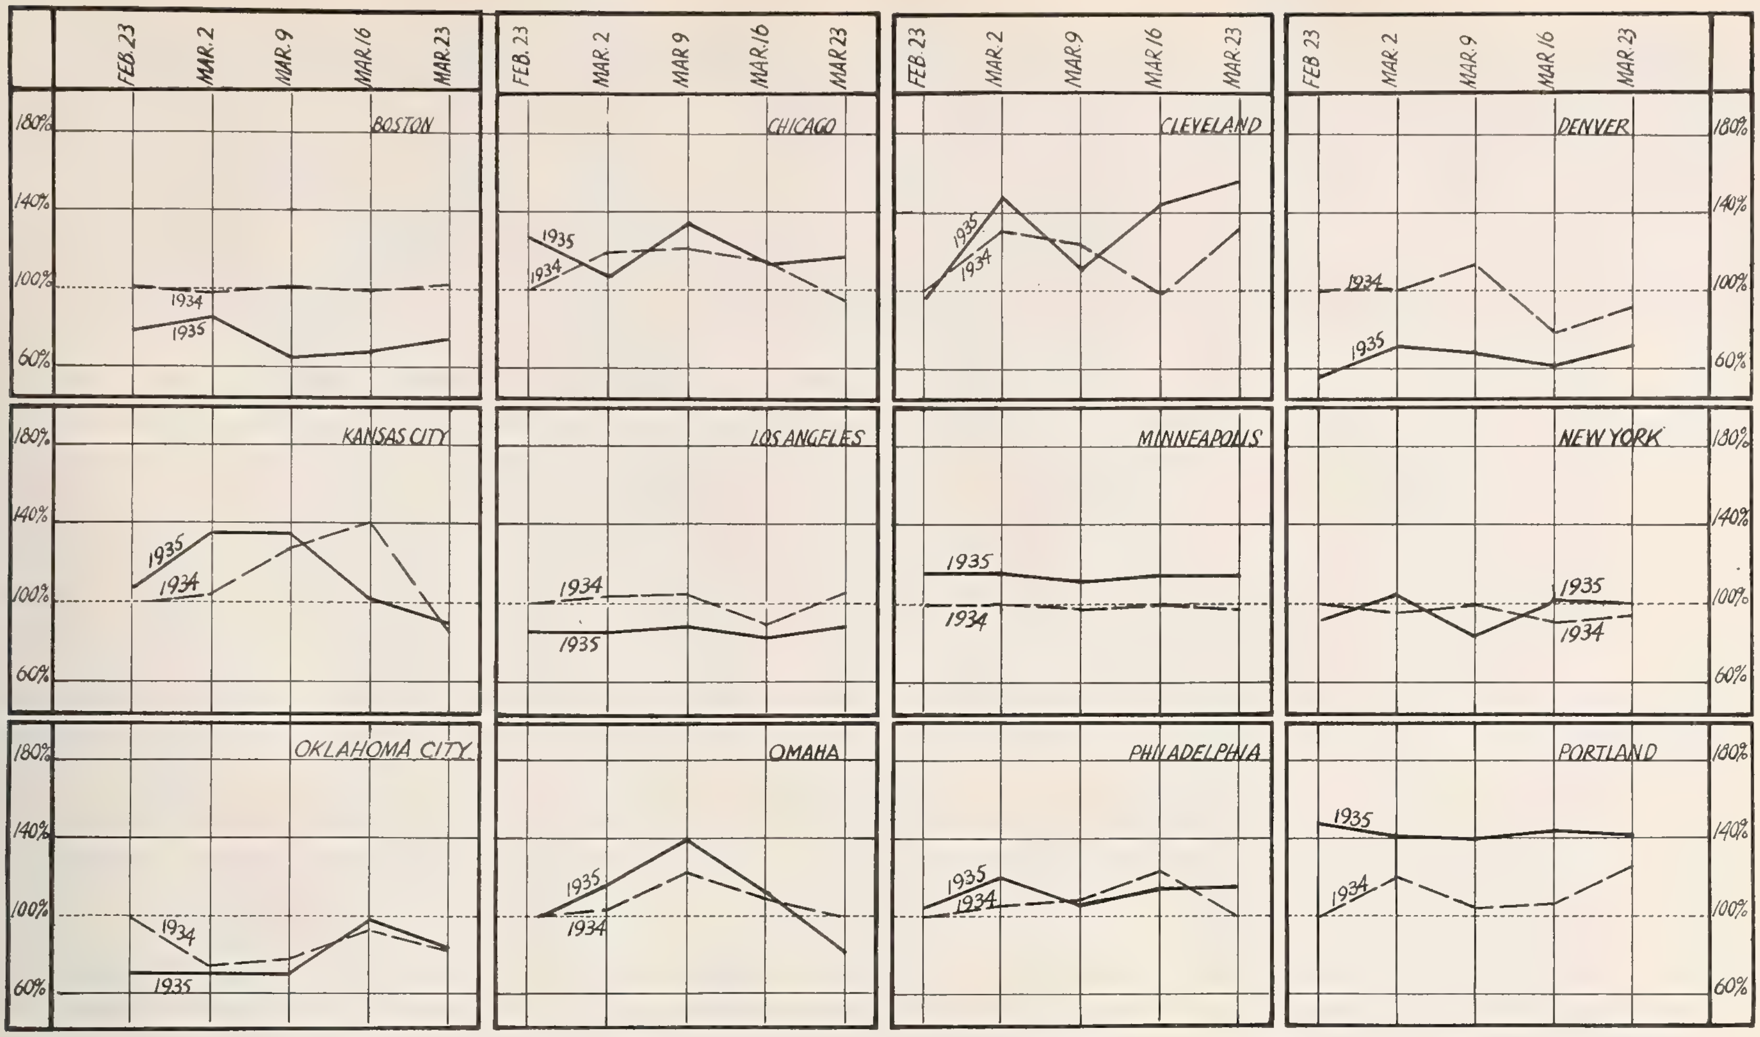
David Ambuter, head of the Ambuter Film Laboratories, Boston, has entered into an association with William Wool, former Paramount newsreel man, and George Sellman, former independent exchange owner. The firm will concentrate on 16 mm. work.

Typhoon Opens Branch

Typhoon Air Conditioning Company, Inc., has opened a Philadelphia office to handle eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia. Charles S. Dingleman, former Stanley Company chief engineer, is in charge.

Schine Pays Dividend

Schine Theatrical Company has declared a dividend of 75 cents per share on the preferred stock, payable March 1 to stockholders of record February 20.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of twelve key cities during the five week period from February 23 to March 23, 1935, with the receipts from the same cities during the corresponding preiod in 1934. The gross for the first week of the 1934 period for each city is takenas 100 per cent for that city.

Stage Show Use Grows in West

Vaudeville and presentation shows, in their comeback march, have now extended their lines in the South, West and Northwest. Where Chicago and Cincinnati had been the outposts of the Middlewest, contact is being established throughout the territory. In the South, many motion picture theatres of Alabama have taken on regular unit shows for one or two nights a month, while midnight revues are solidifying their position.

Omaha's Nebraskans had their first view of "live" talent on the Paramount stage when A. H. Blank booked in A. B. Marcus' "Continental Revue," and the circuit is continuing the experiment but at the Paramount it now is being limited to weekends. Theatre managers from the sector report there is a slight profit to be gained from the policy, and a negative reaction is noticed after the stage show weekend.

Well Received at Sioux City

In Sioux City, Iowa, stage shows have been playing the Mort Singer Orpheum to good business, with straight pictures on the other four days holding up fairly well.

Weekend vaudeville has been prospering at the Orpheum in Lincoln, Neb., for several months, while spasmodic booking of small units is indulged in by the Blank circuit in the Rivoli at Hastings and the Capitol at Grand Island.

The Palace Theatre in Minneapolis, which had been operating at 10 cents with second-run product, had found itself under compulsion of other houses to raise its prices. It went to 15 cents and a first-run policy, then added five acts of what used to be called standard vaudeville. Business moved forward.

But the supply of vaudeville suitable for large houses was limited, and the prices of the lesser houses were already around 20 to 25 cents. So the de luxe houses inaugurated big stage productions at prevailing prices. Some of these noted a substantial increase in business, but not enough to increase the net appreciably after the added overhead.

Far Northwest Activity

In Portland, Ore., a number of theatres sponsoring the policy reported considerably increased returns. The Paramount was the first in Portland to come back to vaudeville shows and Hamrick's Orpheum since its opening has used regular circuit vaudeville. The Capitol for several years has been showing vaudeville.

Stage shows in Seattle and other Pacific Northwest territory are running in full swing. In Seattle, two of the six first-run houses offer regular vaudeville. Hamrick's Music Hall often is open for a stage attraction and several second and even third-run houses also are offering stage shows.

Audio Has New Jersey Film

Audio Productions is making an industrial film for the state of New Jersey's Public Service, which will feature sequences illustrative of the activity at the plants of various large industrial firms in the state.

Monogram Shifts Frazer

David Frazer has been appointed branch manager for Monogram in Denver, having been transferred from the Salt Lake territory, where he was branch manager.

Writer for Films In Canadian Post

The appointment, by King George of England, of Colonel John Buchan as governor general of Canada, is the first royal recognition of a writer for the motion picture. Colonel Buchan is the editor, author and war correspondent whose novel "Thirty-nine Steps," was recently filmed by GB. Robert Donat and Madeleine Carroll play the leading roles.

The novel, in the best-seller classification, is the story of spies plotting access to air ministry secrets, with Scotland Yard involved in a murder mystery. Alfred Hitchcock directed.

Colonel Buchan has had a varied career as a newspaper man, soldier, intelligence officer and statesman. In all he has written 50 books, and has lived in South Africa and Canada. He visited the United States three months ago. Prior to his appointment, he was a member of Parliament. It is said he may be elevated to the peerage before he leaves England for Canada.

Century Loss $127,470

Century Circuit, Inc., of Delaware, and subsidiaries, has reported a loss of $127,470 for the year ended August 31, 1934. The figure is reached after $30,223 excessive depreciation for prior years, expenses and other charges. The loss compares with loss of $80,825 for the previous year.

Les Miserables

(U.A. - 20th Century)

Drama

Sure to find high rank among pictures, "Les Miserables" is all that any exhibitor could want to sell or patron wish to see. Solid and substantial entertainment, it completely captures, via great acting, intelligent direction and production values rich in realism and illusion, the full emotionally dramatic spirit of the literary classic upon which it is based. By its support of recent quality pictures, the public has demonstrated its appreciation of and anxiety for the kind of entertainment "Les Miserables" is.

Fundamentally, "Les Miserables" is the character drama of Jean Valjean and Javert. It graphically establishes these characters in a manner to make lucid all that is to follow. Valjean is sentenced to the galleys for stealing to feed hungry mouths. Javert is sworn into the gendarmerie, dedicating himself to uphold the law, tempered neither by mercy nor justice.

Then in bold strokes it plunges into the core of the Victor Hugo novel. Valjean in the galleys, more animal than man, first brought to Javert's attention when he lifts a beam that might crush out a fellow convict's life. Sentence completed, Valjean, still a shunned animal, comes to the home of Bishop Bienvenue. Amazed at the kind treatment, he steals again and then in one of the picture's most moving sequences, learns from the sympathetic priest the lesson "it is better to give than take" that changes his whole life.

Valjean becomes M. Madeline, successful manufacturer, high minded citizen, chosen to be town magistrate. His path and Javert's cross again as the latter is assigned as his inspector of police. Madeline befriends Fantine; takes her child, Cosette, from a life of heartless cruelty and, when the mother dies, makes the girl his ward.

Another feat of strength, similar to that of the galleys, seen by Javert, raises dim suspicion in his mind that Madeline and Valjean are one and the same. Ruthlessly following every shred of evidence that might link the two, his case is almost complete when another man is arrested as Valjean. To Javert the full letter of the law demands that Madeline punish him. Mercifully, but with fear in his heart, Madeline refuses and then, before judges who will not believe, confesses that he, Madeline, is Valjean.

With Cosette, he flees from fate that is sure to the sanctity of a convent. Cosette, under the sisters' care, grows to maturity as Valjean serves as gardener. Javert lives for the day when he will see Valjean again.

Cosette falls in love with Marius, student revolutionary leader. Javert is assigned to learn who is financing the anti-government forces. Again the Valjean-Javert trails cross. Wishing to flee to England, Cosette cannot bear to leave Marius. Word brought to her by Eponine that Marius is in danger, Valjean goes forth to rescue him. Javert sees and follows. Wounded in a barricade battle, Marius is found by Valjean. To escape the trailing Javert, he, carrying the wounded boy, takes to the Paris sewers. Here suspense reaches its most intense moments. This great acting by March and Laughton is followed by a meeting in Valjean's home, where with Cosette and Marius together and their future happiness assured, Valjean offers to surrender to his nemesis. Requesting a moment's time, Valjean leaves Javert alone. In that short interval, Javert, learning the difference between the justice of the law and its mercy, walks forth to suicide and Valjean is forever free.

This is a picture that must be sold with a dignity and power that not only convinces patrons that they will see drama of the finest character and be thrillingly entertained thereby but should learn object lessons that will be elevating and inspiring.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Mr. Dynamite

Comedy Mystery

The ingredients of this film are the sort of which people like to talk. Essentially it is melodramatic mystery, but while this quality motivates, the hectic comedy which it precipitates is of equal if not more interest from an entertainment and amusement standpoint. Speedily paced, blending its two qualities in such a way that there is a laugh for every tense moment, the show is of that character that quickly catches and holds interest.

Adapted from a Dashiell Hammett story, which legitimately permits a commercial association with "The Thin Man" as a business booster for this, the yarn has Edmund Lowe in a typical role. Bounced off a police force as his superiors think he's a little slicker than the slickest crooks, he, as Mr. Dynamite, and his wife, Lynn, are invited to leave town for good.

While this is going on it is revealed that Mona, daughter of gambling house owner Lewis, is infatuated with Dvorjak, concert pianist, whose wife, Charmion, doesn't care as long as the checks come rolling in. A young man in the gambling casino practically breaks Lewis' bank and is killed as he leaves the place. Lewis wants to locate Dynamite, who he knows is just the kind of man to have in his corner, as local police threaten dire things. Simultaneously Dynamite reads about the killing and decides to cut himself in.

From that point on, with Dynamite taking over in characteristic fashion, the plot becomes more and more complicated, erupting when Dvorjak, in his home playing for Mona, is killed. As hokum that brings countless laughs is mingled with formula realism, Dynamite proves just a step ahead of the cops and the dastardly plotters, and while another death ensues, solves the case and gets himself a healthy fee.

As there is plenty of stuff with which to work, stirring up public curiosity and desire to see this attraction should not be difficult. The combination of comedy, complicated romantic drama and melodramatic mystery appears to be one assuring popularity among those enjoying a novel detective yarn as well as those who just seek an evening's entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Four Hours to Kill

(Paramount)

Drama

"Four Hours to Kill" is tense, gripping, suspense-packed drama. The love interest is dramatic. The comedy relief is drama with a heart sock. The principal dramatic theme is melodramatic to the last degree. Essentially it is an expertly blended series of personal episodes involving many different people, all happening in one major locale—a theatre lounge. It is narrated in "Grand Hotel" technical style, yet the show is not episodic.

The film is an adult attraction. With rigid realism characterizing every episode, each is highly theatric without being obtrusively so. Thus its entertainment values are for those mentally attuned to understand and appreciate, as are its showmanship qualities. Exhibitors wishing to capitalize its full worth should first see for themselves before trying to tell patrons about it. In so doing an understanding should come which printed description is incapable of conveying.

There's drama to the first sequence; the meeting of the young lovers, check room boy Eddie and his girl Helen. The drama between Eddie and Usherette Mae threatens to become dangerous when audiences understand why the girl is trying to blackmail him. Johnson's comedy as he telephones the hospital inquiring whether his baby has arrived is dramatic. There's something mysteriously dramatic about the arrival of Detective Taft, who with Tony handcuffed to him, has four hours to kill, ere he escorts his prisoner to the death house. Highly dramatic are the sequences involving the meeting of the philandering Carl and his paramour Sylvia. When, during the intermission of the show

The "Front" Show

THE campaign to wrest from __________ his monopoly on inspired cinematic cartoons in color is beginning to assume threatening proportions. Two partners, Harmon and Ising, of the M.G.M. studios, are apparently the chief conspirators, and their latest volley is being fired at the Capitol, where "When the Cat's Away" evokes both laughter and applause. This is a little gem of a tinted cartoon. In the "front" show at the Capitol there is also a contribution by James Fitzpatrick, a Travel Talk called "Rainbow Canyons," the loveliest piece of color work since Fitzpatrick adopted that medium. But the main feature of this week's "front" show is the warning finger which is being pointed at the whimsical Mr. __________. Watch out, __________!

which is always going on but never seen, Tony tells Taft that he'd be happy to die if he first could have a few moments with squealer Anderson and then gives the cop $300 to buy a graduation present for his daughter, the drama is sympathetic. It is that as Eddie tries to borrow $200 to pay off Mae from doorman Mac just as that person is thinking of hitting Eddie for the rent money.

Drama becomes exciting as Sylvia notices her diamond brooch missing and Carl accuses Eddie of stealing it. It reaches a seething pitch when Tony, seeing Mae, recognizes her as Anderson's wife. It explodes entirely when Tony, first lifting Mac's gun, escapes from Taft. It takes a different twist, but the excitement is still maintained, as Johnson, calling the hospital, begs that his wife's life be saved no matter what the cost.

Then as Tony, while the hue and cry is on, slips back into the lounge and phones Anderson that his wife needs him the stage is set for the thrilling climax. Suspense dominating all, as he hides in the phone booth, practically every character now appears. Captain Seaver raises fury with Taft for permitting his prisoner to escape. Sylvia and Carl in suspecting Eddie of stealing the brooch find themselves in a terrible predicament that changes the girl's infatuation to hate. Hidden Tony waits, then when Anderson, who has arrived, learns that he is loose, he realizes how he has been duped. Cringing, he stands before the emerging Eddie, pleading for his life only to die as bullets rip into him and Tony dies from bullets from Taft's gun. Everything is righted save for Sylvia and Carl, who still must have some explaining to do to the insurance company and the woman's husband as all admit that Eddie found the pin on the floor. With the menace of Mae eliminated, it's happiness ahead for Eddie and Helen, as there is happiness for Johnson, who now has a baby and wife, and for Pa and Ma Herman, who can go back to the high priced seats into which they had sneaked.

The picture is all meat into which any aggressive showman can sink his teeth and come up with a campaign that should convince the patron that this will thrill and interest him as seldom before.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Star of Midnight

(Radio)

Comedy Mystery

Here's something new in the line of comedy mystery melodrama with a companionate romantic angle as popularly intriguing as the basic subject matter. Novel and new in treatment, is is however, entirely made up of tried and true amusement elements. A laugh in almost every line of dialogue, bit of action and situation, it is essentially a comedy. Yet by the smart manner in which the supporting elements have been applied, it is legitimate to term it either a mystery melodrama, a semi-gangster, a detective story, a romance that is just as modern and enervating as any moderne could desire or a well-rounded combination of all. As each quality completely fulfils its expected function the show should have a punchy and interesting appeal to all classes of patrons.

Moving at a speedy pace with William Powell as Dalzell, a character decidedly similar to that portrayed by him in "The Thin Man," interest is created immediately, builds continually and winds up with a climax that is likely both to baffle and thrill those who have made advance conclusions.

Suave man-about-town Dalzell delves into criminology as a hobby. Currently agog about Mary Smith, "Star of Midnight" show star, whom he has never met, his heart stops when over the phone she asks him to use his influence in preventing a columnist from writing about her. Promising help, he makes a date with Tennant, who is slain en route to Dalzell's apartment. With love and a desire to folow his hobby spurring him, he first puts the screws on gangster Kinlan by demonstrating his knowledge of that worthy's tax evasions.

Then as the situations become dramatically complicated and the two policemen, Doremus and Cleary, give it a wild comedy tinge by their practical crime solution antics, and Dalzell gets mixed up with a high powered lawyer, Classon, whose wife, Jerry, turns out to be one of his old friends, the yarn takes on a dramatic mystery tinge in which all the characters scamper through a maze that plays hob with any sense of logic. The lawyer breaks down and confesses that he is the killer of the man whom his client is accused of slaying and that his motive is that he had been tricking his wife, Jerry, who had had an eye on Dalzell. The amateur detective is almost on the spot, only to be saved by the quickness of his butler, the bullet intended for Dalzell killing Jerry, and all the menaces to Mary Smith (Donna) being eliminated, back she goes to her show and eventual marriage with Dalzell.

Taking advantage of cast name strength, story and production values and getting audiences in the proper frame of mind to understand what is in the film looks to be the best selling plan.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Mark of the Vampire

(MGM)

Melodrama

This is a picture which should give the "horror" fans all they want. It's full of shrieks and screams, gasps and shudders. The stuff commonly supposed to change red blood to ice water starts right at the beginning; a little slowly, perhaps, as the explanatory ground work is being laid. When the film really gets down to cases, attempting to demonstrate how completely it can scare folks with devilish melodrama, the shivers and shakes should come thick and fast. Approaching the climax, weird and eerie suspense supercharging all action and reaction, audiences are likely to be nervously perched on chair edges.

The whole show is played for one purpose, apparently—to raise the maximum amount of goose flesh. Although there's some, there isn't much dramatic love interest, just enough to justify the use of the term as a supporting element, and, of course, to fix it so that the girl in the story is the focal point of all that is dastardly in the anti-climax, just before the menace is eliminated. There is little straight comedy, although there are any number of laughs. However, they come as the result of fiendish plans and tricks going awry and anticipations failing of realization.

For practical showmanship purposes, this, other than telling the people it is a horror picture, seems to be the kind of attraction that one shouldn't let the public know too much about. As the yarn unfolds, it will be difficult enough for them to believe what they actually see, much less what they think they see, or care to anticipate, without giving them any advance information as to all the nerve-jerking melodramatic mystery that is conjured up.

Locale is a mid-European country where a queer superstition holds the people in iron grip. That superstition is that the dead—vampires of a spirit world taken form—bring terror to the living. The only safeguard against their depredations is the wearing of a sprig of magic herb about the person. In telling of the story, full as has been stated of spine-tingling activity, a reason for these vampires, which after all are humans, is given. It takes a bit of hypnotic mesmerism on the part of the production's leading character to further the wierd atmosphere, but in the end, but not in a way that might be expected, everything is righted and audiences can pull themselves together and realize that, after all, it was all in fun.

There is plenty of opportunity for tricky gag exploitation stunts with which to create a not too revealing interest in the picture. Straight advertising and publicity, however, which capitalize upon the name values presented and at the same time broadly hint at the show's "shock" quality, seem to be the method that will best sell it.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Tod Browning. Screen play by Guy Endore and Bernard Schubert. Recording director, Douglas Shearer. Art director, Cedric Gibbons. Associates, Harry Oliver, Edwin B. Willis. Photographed by James Wong Howe. Film editor, Ben Lewis. Assistant director, Harry Sharrock. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 80 minutes. Comedy Romance

Refreshing fun is this show's entertainment and showmanship quality. Essentially an all laugh show, it is continuously light, gay and airy and as it tells a catchy comedy romance story, there is never a serious moment. Composed entirely of materials that ordinarily enthuse the masses, it calls upon good old-fashioned hokum in dialogue, action and situations in creating its amusement. Moving speedily, it continually concentrates attention on its basic story, but in the meantime introduces numerous comedy asides that add to its merry color and atmosphere.

While dealing with familiar materials, smart direction dolls them up with a novelty that gives the show a unique swing. Then as the picture is acted in a spirit that seeks to get the most laughs and smiles it rolls along in a manner that, while everyone may know just what is going to happen there is a lot of enjoyment watching it work out. Additionally, while the show is the kind of entertainment in which audiences always seem to find amusement, the various production values that are brought in open the door for showmanship and exploitation that should be just as fresh as the picture's amusement.

Just Grand

In keeping with the times, the Our Gang aggregation of Hal Roach not only goes musical, but pulls a fast one on the entire production field by capitalizing on the timely topical Amateur Craze now sweeping our land. It is a knockout. One of the finest offerings from this kid ensemble that the Roach studios have ever turned out. That precocious and charming youngster "Spanky" McFarland occupies the spotlight and is featured on an Am ateur Night program where he panics the audience in the theater. He will also panic the audience in your theater. The kid is immense. He does a Julius Caesar-Mark An thony combination dressed in old Ro man armor and flowing robes. Add ed attractions are the Cabin Kids, cute pickaninnies, the Meglin Kid dies and Carl Sweitzer, the juvenil "hill-billy" find. But it's "Spanky's" show. And good for anybody's dough. If you don't play it up in marquee lights you shouldn't own a marquee. It's feature calibre in short subject meter.

Timed to capitalize on the Amateur Night craze . . . . And the first of the new showmanship shorts from Hal Roach studios for M-G-M.

Locale is the Southern back country. Two autos crash. Naturally there is the expected flare-up of tempers and accusations of everything from just plain carelessness to murderous intent. The fiery socialite, Jane Dale, and the equally fiery young lawyer, Bill Shevlin, are towed into the one horse town by Mr. Julius B. Clummerhorn. It turns out that Mr. Clummerhorn is the whole works—sheriff, judge, taxi driver, barber, game warden, hotel and garage owner and everything else that might be productive of a stray nickel.

As the small town characters, Cyclone, the Snake Brown family trio, Lizzie, Nancy and Back have their inning in contributing to the colorful hilarity, the court trial of the bumping autoists is a riot of nonsense. But not for nothing is Shevlin a lawyer bitten by the love bug, and the manner in which he hornswoggles Clummerhorn into paroling the girl in his charge is a gem of amusing trickery and gibberish. However, it is not until he proves his ability as a dog trainer that the girl finally accepts him.

In connection with this picture, there is ample opportunity for digging up much of the old fashioned brand of hokum showmanship. There is plenty of material inherent in the picture with which to work. Exploitation should carry the main burden of selling the show, but where names are the necessary requirement there are quite a few old standbys to talk about as well as a newcomer, Wendy Barrie, whose work here promises much for future appearances.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Dramatic Romance

As may be understood from the title tone, this picture has a sentimental motivation. It tells an unusual but nevertheless understandable and interesting love story, embellished by drama that consolidates the sympathy naturally generated for the two central figures. It is highlighted by contrasting comedy that eases the dramatic tenseness and as the whole moves in appealing, whimsical vein, the resulting entertainment is wholesome and inspiring. The intelligent manner in which it is directed and acted makes it readily possible for astute showmen to pick out and commercialize values.

Because of its character, the show should be more interesting to women than it is to men. Treating of conditions and situations which are close to the feminine heart, it does so in understandable and non-theatric fashion. As hokum is eschewed, an air of humanness makes the story real and something that could happen.

The locale is Paris. Bonnard, a writer-book collector, has been searching almost a lifetime for one book. In a batch which he buys from an agent, he discovers a note written by the sweetheart of his youth on a torn page. His search for the complete book leads him to a library in Lausance. There he meets Jeanne, daughter of his old love. The happiness that comes to the old man and the young girl is rudely halted by her guardian, Mouche, who packs the girl off to a rigidly conducted private school. Life for her is bitter under the watchful surveillance of Mlle. Prefere and Mouche. Her only happiness is when she is able to be secretly in Bonnard's company. Her misery touching Bonnard deeply, he takes her away from the school. He is threatened by Mouche, who accuses him of kidnaping. As the situation builds to strong drama, the old book agent, who in the meantime has prospered, comes to Bonnard, telling him that he now has a copy of the book which Bonnard has sought so long. In the climax it is revealed that Mouche had stolen the book years ago from the library and also that he had forged the papers making him Jeanne's guardian. The situation being righted, the road for romance is cleared for Jeanne and Henri, a love match that Bonnard has always fostered, and he returns to the classification of his library, the sale of which will insure the young folks ample funds for a happy married life.

The tender quality of the story which completely ignores heroics, appears to be the element to concentrate on in selling the picture. Although there are no outstanding names, practically all of the cast has been recently associated with pictures that have brought their talents to favorable public attention. By selling it with dignity, but without too much seriousness, it is distinctly possible that audiences will talk about it in a way that will go far towards giving the picture general popularity.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Drama

The time to realize the great entertainment and commercial value of "Black Fury" is before it is played. It may well be considered one of the greatest dramatic pictures of this or any other year. Different drama, without any excusing or qualifying concessions, it rips, tears and crashes in honest, straight from the shoulder style into the powerful story it tells. In so doing, it is attention-holding and heart-quickening with a definite appeal for both class and mass and to the emotions and to reason. This is the kind of picture about which the truth must be told.

"Black Fury" is two stories; a story of shattered, disillusioned love, which under savage circumstances, is reborn in triumph and glory, and a story of a new kind of warfare—industrial war in the Pennsylvania coal fields. Intelligently handled in every phase, it is as timely and important as today's news. Yet selling it properly will require just as much showmanship finesse and craft as its making did of production intelligence.

First analysis might lead to the opinion that "Black Fury" is not a woman's picture. But if reactions of women in the preview audience are any gauge, its moving love story, in which sympathy is concentrated upon the man, makes it just as much a woman's attraction as its dynamic action drama makes it a man's.

The picture's essential commercial and entertainment value is the powerful simplicity of its parallel stories. The full atmosphere of its coal mining locale being established, hunky miner Joe Radek, dumb, illiterate, jovial, sees his roseate dreams of married bliss with Anna Novak shattered when she runs away with state trooper Slim. Stunned beyond his power to understand, unwilling to believe, he drinks. Drunk, he attends a miners' meeting. The age old question—capital and labor—is being furiously debated. Under the vicious lashing of agitator Steve the old order is howled down and drunken Radek, easy prey to Steve's blandishments, is elected president of the new by acclimation.

A befuddled "big shot," he sees in ways Steve was careful to point out, ways to make someone pay for his love tragedy. The operators lock the men out. Racketeer company police, the "cossacks" of all industrial strife, are brought in. Steve disappears. The miners and their families starve, freeze and are evicted. Deserted by Steve, alone, unable to do anything, president Joe, once so popular with his co-workers, but now universally hated, seeks the solace of more drink.

Mike, once Joe's best friend, it killed by McGee's "cossacks" as he tries to protect a girl from Lefty' attack. Radek learns of it. Into his dull brain comes the realization that he alone is responsible for all the horror that has come to his kind. Followed by the returned and contrite Anna, who pleads ineffectually with him, Joe, after raiding a store and powder magazine, enters the mine. With Anna as his liason, he tells his plan—to destroy himself and the mines unless the operators call off the lockout. One or two blasts convincing the owners of his sincerity, McGee goes down to get him only to be made the mad miner's prisoner after a terrific battle. For days, as Washington mediates and the nation's press thunders reports of Joe's doings, he holds out. Then, the owners, bowing to the force of public opinion, capitulate. Joe is the real hero he always visioned himself from whom Anna will never run away again.

This picture is neither preachment nor propaganda; rather dramatic, showmanship entertainment, realistically yet humanly acted and directed. Those who see it should understand and appreciate. Finely and authentically produced, all that seems necessary to sell it anywhere, any time, is a straightforward revealing advance telling of what the picture treats.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Comedy Drama

A domestic comedy drama, this attraction possesses showmanship values. Family type in character, blending humorous fun in action and dialogue, it again teams two characters whose recent appearances have been favorably received. The story, which is fast moving, is uniquely, yet familiarly, premised and has many novel twists.

In the yarn, happily married Mr. and Mrs. Wilton have a problem on their hands. Married daughter Peggy, having quarreled with husband Bill, comes home to mother. To show the youngsters the futility of such antics, Henry and Clarice plan a fake quarrel of their own, the intensity of which will scare the youngsters into sense. However, as Henry leaves the house, he innocently becomes involved with Doris, the vampire in Peggy's and Bill's life. Gossip reaching Clarice's ears, she gets the impression that friend hubby is pulling a fast one and as Bill seems to be the only family friend Henry has left, Peggy comes to think that her husband is aiding and abetting her father in his philanderings.

As a comedy wrestling match is tossed in to heighten the hilarity, the peace-making tables are turned. Bill frames a stunt whereby Henry by proving himself a super-hero restores himself to Clarice's good graces.

The title, having definite exploitation value, particularly as it applies to the story's theme and development with gossip proving the dynamite for well laid plans, there is also much that is comercially valuable in the Charlie Ruggles-Mary Boland names. While hardly a big picture, audiences in the neighborhood and smaller theatres, where the atmosphere and feeling is more familiar, should find the show pleasing.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

George White's 1935 Scandals

(Fox)

Musical

Comparisons being inevitable, this picture retains and embellishes all the lavish eye and ear glamour of the first George White's "Scandals." The motivating story is entirely new and different. Handsomely and artistically mounted, elaborately costumed, it's a stage and backstage show. It features many musical and dance numbers, several of which are thematic to the story, others specialties. Colorful, moving at a moderate pace so that the full value of each sequence may be realized, it improves on the previous effort.

While the more spectacular features are the central point of interest, there is also interest in the story, its motive, the manner in which it runs its course and the happy ending. As a musical it comprises practically all the values that have made this character of entertainment successful. As a light dramatic romance, it makes good use of all the necessary ingredients.

Opening with the concluding scene of the first show, White takes a trip south. At a hick town stop, Manya, who has tagged along, calls his attention to a billing "White's Scandals—entire production conceived, produced and directed by Elmer White." Dropping in on the hick show being presented, he sees a diamond in the rough, Honey Walters, performing with Eddie Taylor. Wanting her for his show, after appreciating Elmer's gag, Aunt Jane persuades him to take Eddie, Elmer and Dude along with Honey. Honey and Eddie, in love, are an instantaneous success. Then as Eddie falls for tap dancer Marylin and to pay him back, Honey picks up with Daniels, the inevitable happens. Both get big-headed and White fires them.

Weeks of walking the streets finally get Eddie a part in a show booked for tanktown presentation where he finds Honey playing the rehearsing lead. In the meantime, Aunt Jane, who still thinks her children are the stars of White's show, lands in town. That she may not be disappointed, White turns the town inside out searching for them. Found just as they are about to board a train for Altoona, they return to become the hits of the show and thrill Aunt Jane and White when they announce they are married.

Lavish on stage musical comedy, with the expected class of singing and dancing being the principal selling qualities, the comedy provided by Ned Sparks, the tap dancing of Eleanor Powell, the singing and dancing of Alice Faye and James Dunn, Lyda Roberti's characteristic contributions and Cliff Edwards' fantastic dream sequence are assets that should not be overlooked.

"According to the Moonlight" is the theme song, along with "Old Southern Custom." Most spectacular chorus group feature is "Hunkadola." The fantastic dream song feature is "I Was Born Too Late."

Exploitation opportunities are almost unlimited. Particular care should be taken to convince patrons that everything is new but the title.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Traveling Saleslady

(First National)

Comedy

A lively, fast-paced comedy feature, this has several assets in the way of cast names, some genuinely amusing comedy moments, in situation and dialogue, and a story element which may well result in exploitation tieups by the alert exhibitor which may prove really valuable at the box office.

Joan Blondell, lively and popular player, has the title role, supported by Glenda Farrell, William Gargan and particularly Hugh Herbert, who supplies the backbone of the film's outright comedy, and whose appearance on the screen, when this film was seen on Broadway, was continuously greeted with anticipatory giggles which never failed to materialize into hearty laughter. Al Shean, Grant Mitchell and Ruth Donnelly are other familiar names.

The exploitation possibility enters in the story development which has Miss Blondell selling toothpaste of a new kind, cocktail toothpaste, in all flavors of wines and liquors and various mixtures incident thereto. What the exhibitor may do with this wide-open opportunity largely depends on his own alertness. The idea is excellent and highly ingenious exploitation stunts may well be developed from it. Another angle in the story which may be sold is that of the daughter of a magnate toothpaste manufacturer, who goes to work for a rival company when her father refuses to believe a girl can have any idea of business or any ability in selling. She teaches him an expensive lesson, and incidentally gets herself all tied up in a romance with her father's star salesman.

Miss Blondel is refused a job by her father, Mitchell, and runs into Herbert, eccentric and absent minded "scientist" with a cocktail toothpaste idea. Her father will not even see him, and Miss Blondell signs herself as Herbert's manager, then sells herself, Herbert and the idea to Shean, rival manufacturer. Changing her name, she goes on the road with the new toothpaste, determined to teach her old-fashioned father a lesson.

Traveling, she meets Gargan, her father's best salesman, and the two proceed to fall in love with one another, after 8 P. M. During the day it is strictly business, and they hit back at each other in every conceivable way, Gargan of course not knowing who she is. He soon stops kidding the saleslady when she begins to take away his best customers. Miss Farrell, owner of a chain of drug stores, is in love with Gargan, who is in a desperate state, what with losing all his best customers, and to the girl with whom he is in love. He can't quite decide whether to love or hate her, but makes up his mind when she ruins his business completely at the druggists' annual convention, through a series of tricks.

Back home, Mitchell's business is so bad that he goes to Shean and offers to merge. Shean fails to see the advantage, but offers Gargan the sales managership, with power to fire any sales person he wishes. Then Miss Blondell walks in, and holding the cocktail toothpaste contract, insists Shean and Mitchell merge their companies, while she takes care of a merger with Gargan.—Aaronson, New York.

I'll Love You Always

(Columbia)

Drama

A simple and dramatic story of a young couple, who thought they could live on love, ran into the results—on ambitious college graduates—of the depression, and finally discovered they needed each other, this should be found interesting material, telling its story in direct fashion, with a rather considerable portion of pathos and comparatively little comedy.

Nancy Carroll has the lead, with George Murphy, personable and an able performer, playing opposite. Arthur Hohl and Jean Dixon are the most familiar among the supporting players. Selling the names for what they may be worth in the community, and developing whatever sales material suggests itself from the story's theme and the title, appears to be the most acceptable method of merchandising.

Murphy, graduating in engineering with high honors, meets Miss Carroll, playing feminine leads in her father's broken-down Shakespearian stock company, when the company plays the university town. They are married, and with references from his dean to big engineers, they set out for New York with high hopes and very little cash.

The stumbling blocks appear, as Murphy finds the companies he visits not waiting anxiously for an honor graduate from engineering school. He refuses a road gang job offered by Paul Harvey, head of a large firm, and the couple land in a furnished room, with Murphy loading a truck for a furniture store. Miss Carroll meets Miss Dixon and her friend, Walburn, she having been on the stage with Miss Carroll at one time. His pride hurt, Murphy quarrels with Miss Carroll, and leaves her, while she, about to have a child, lives with Miss Dixon and takes a stage position.

Murphy visits Harvey again, is refused, and steals a large sum of money. He buys Miss Carroll clothes for her stage work, not knowing of the approaching child, and tells her he is going to Russia. They have a last fling in Atlantic City, where Hohl, detective, finds him. Hohl arranges with Harvey that it shall appear that the letters Murphy writes from his prison cell shall come from Russia, Harvey's office being the transmission point. Murphy is released, takes the road job offered by the friendly Harvey, and visits Miss Carroll at Miss Dixon's insistence, to make a final break. He discovers, of course, that he loves his wife as much as always, and she cares nothing for his jail record.

It is straightforward material, well handled, and may best be sold in an equally straightforward manner.—AARONSON, New York.

The Cyclone Ranger

(Spectrum Pictures)

Western

A western film with a difference, this is rather lacking in the exact type and quantity of fast action found in the western film, but tends to to make up for that deficiency by something more of story backbone than is usually the case in most westerns. There is sufficient action and atmosphere, however, to warrant playing the film in the weekend position, when the followers of action material look for westerns.

Bill Cody is the star, and he appears a capable rider and a reasonably satisfactory performer in his role of the Pecos Kid. The supporting players are for the most part unknown. Concentration on combination of the western locale, the star and a hint of the story content appears to be the most acceptable selling method to adopt.

Unusual in the case of the western, in this instance, the story's the thing, rather than the action thrown against a background of western mountain scenery and a stereotyped story.

Cody, with two Mexican companions, operate near the border in the cattle rustling "business," though they appear chiefly concerned with taking cattle from those who had previously fleeced them, it is understood in rather a roundabout fashion. One of the Mexicans had left his home rancho and mother years before and the other, an elderly man, who had worked at the rancho, is in the nature of a guardian, self-appointed.

They learn that the boy's mother is very ill, and determine to return with Juan to his mother. But Eddie Gribbon, one of the gang, kidnaps a man from a neighboring town, and as the three break with the gang and start south, they are mistaken for the kidnapers and Juan is shot by a posse.

He dies as they make their escape, and Cody and Pancho go on alone. They find the mother blind and she mistakes Cody for her long missing son. He has not the heart to tell her his identity, and he and Pancho continue the pretense. Cody is attracted to the mother's ward, Nena Quartaro, and she believes he is Juan. The jarring note enters when Gribbon and his gang arrive on the scene, and strike a bargain, that Cody shall permit them to run off with the rancho cattle, and they will not reveal his identity. Cody accepts, but sets a trap for the gang.

A pitched battle and lively sequence ends in the cleaning up of the gang, and Cody is about to give himself up to the sheriff, who has arrived from Arizona on the trail of the gang. But the sheriff accepts the death of Gribbon as that of the Pecos Kid, and Cody is left free to pursue his romance with Nena and continue to pose as Juan for the mother's sake.—AARONSON, New York.

Countryside Melodies

(First Division—Audio)

Splendid

Featured, as are all of the Musical Moods series, by the most attractive picturization, in natural Technicolor, of scenic beauties, this visual accompaniment moves from the Irish country side, about the shores of Lake Killarney, to scenes of the Iroquois Hunt Club of Kentucky in active pursuit of the fox. The music of the first part is based on Percy Grainger's "Country Gardens," the latter part featuring a glee club rendition of "John Peel." The hunting scenes, with the riders in their red coats following the dogs, are particularly effective. The subject as a whole is appealing and excellently produced, and should be provocative of audience appreciation.—Running time, eight minutes.

Kool Penguins

(Brown & Williamson—Audio)

Amusing Cartoon

A highly amusing novelty cartoon subject, this was produced by Audio Productions for Brown & Williamson, manufacturers of Kools, and is designed for theatrical showing. Cleverly handled, it contains an absolute minimum of the advertising "sting" and becomes virtually an entertaining novelty cartoon subject which is a burlesque on the manufacture of cigarettes. The penguins flee from the north, hit sweltering New York, go on to the south and the cigarette factory and return with aid for the city. The factory sequences are especially clever and amusing. The subject is available to the exhibitor, entirelv without charge, from Brown & Williamson.—Running time, eight minutes.

Old Dog Tray

Fair

A fair cartoon, against a background of the song "Old Dog Tray," in which the dog, tossed out by his farmer master, stays about the house. The mice come out at night, indulge in their usual antics, and sail about in soap bubbles. The dog induces his master to join him in the same sport, but the bubbles meet with disaster, and the two land in the mud.—Running time, six minutes.

Star Night at Cocoanut Grove

(MGM)

Highly Entertaining

There is real and diversified entertainment, as well as the draw value of star names and natural color photography here, which should combine to make the subject genuinely worthy of special exhibitor attention. At the famed Cocoanut Grove on the Coast Ted Fio Rita and his band supply the music, Leo Carrillo is master of ceremonies, such stars as Gary Cooper, Arline Judge, Jack Oakie, Richard Cromwell are seen at tables, Bing Crosby sings after an introduction by Mary Pickford, and there is a touch of girl dance routine material and a specialty dance in Spanish style further to add to the subject.—Running time, 21 minutes.

A Nose for News

Good

A good comedy, featuring Joe Cook, star of the musical comedy stage, as a would-be newspaper reporter, and indulging largely in his expected nonsense, much of which is amusing. Joe is sent to interview a notorious gangster in jail, and the gangster takes Joe's police card, which makes Joe the gangster. Every time he escapes from jail, the real thug is waiting to force him to give himself up, each time to the same cop. Eventually, on trial, Joe turns the trick on the entire courtroom, including the visiting gangster.—Running time, 17 minutes.

October Day

Excellent

Another of the Musical Moods series, this has the expert symphonic rendition of Schubert's "Autumn," with the visual accompaniment, in beautiful natural Technicolor, by Robert Bruce, confined to the countryside of Vermont in the fall of the year. There certainly must be universal appeal in the pictured beauties of nature in the Vermont hills at their most colorful. A touch of the human is added in the indicated love of a farmhand and a girl, merely indicated but expressively blended with the background.—Running time, nine minutes.

Buddy of the Legion

(Vitaphone)

Good

An entertaining number of the Looney Tunes cartoon series, in which Buddy, working in a bookstore, comes across a story of the foreign legion, and proceeds to live it. As captain of the troop, which is lured into the fort of the Amazons, he goes to the rescue, frees his men and other enslaved soldiers, and comes back to earth to be fired from his job.—Running time, seven minutes.

Anniversary Trouble

(MGM)

Very Good

One of the Our Gang comedies, this virtually features the chubby Spanky, who with his natural acting and almost too precocious comments, provides real amusement and entertainment. Spanky is made treasurer of his club, the money is in an envelope and is confused with an envelope of money left by Spanky's forgetful father on the breakfast table as an anniversary present for Spanky's mother. The club comes after its money, and his parents think something is wrong with their offspring, until Spanky finally straightens things out, with his father the "goat." Really entertaining.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Do a Good Deed

(Universal)

Lively Cartoon

It's a Scout camp and they're all doing their daily good turn—a whistle for the baby bird, a sipping tube for the corpulent bee, a corkscrew for the woodpecker. The common enemy, Mr. Bear, rumbles into a raid on the camp. The bees turn into a collective riveting machine on his hide, the woodpeckers time their rolling of a bowlder so that it plops him flat on the rebound. There's interest throughout.—Running time, seven minutes.

FILM MEASURES DIE IN 13 LEGISLATURES

General Sales Taxes Passed in Five States Instead of Proposed Admission Levies

Thirteen state legislatures concluded their programs of taxation and other measures last week without enacting laws directly aimed at the motion picture industry. In five, general sales taxes were passed instead of proposed levies on theatre admissions.

The 13 legislatures which completed their sessions are North and South Dakota, Georgia, Idaho, West Virginia, Utah, Oregon, New Mexico, Indiana, Kansas, Wyoming, Montana and Arizona. In Arizona a special session is to be called April 10 to settle the question of a possible theatre tax.

Legislative battles continued acute in four states—Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Delaware. Exhibitors were opposing admission tax bills in Tennessee and Pennsylvania, and a censorship bill in Michigan, modeled after that in Ohio. Delaware exhibitors were battling a dog race measure.

From California came news that Governor Merriam will veto any of the socalled "purifying" film measures which provide for state boards of control. A substitute budget balancing program offered in the Assembly Wednesday calls for gross transaction taxes at scaled rates, drops the 10 per cent admission tax but affects the film business with a one per cent tax on manufactured articles, one-fourth of one per cent on wholesale articles, and other charges.

The legislative situation in other states during the week was:

CONNECTICUT: The MPTO met to discuss five bills. One of them provides for a 5 per cent tax on gross admissions; another seeks a 50 per cent increase in the seat tax; a third calls for two men in a booth; a fourth, a compulsory control projection device for each machine; the fifth, censorship.

MARYLAND: Fees charged by Maryland censors would be increased from $2 to $3.50 for each 1,000 feet of master print and from $1 to $2 for each additional print, under the Baile bill. The House committee reported unfavorably two of four Sunday bills. The House passed the Mulliken racetrack bill to reduce the daily license fee of $6,000 to $1,000 and raise the tax on money bets.

MICHIGAN: A bill providing for a state censorship board of three, to be appointed by the governor for three-year terms, was introduced in the House. Cost of administration would be paid by fees of $1 for every 1,000 feet of film from distributors.

Missouri House Passes Sales Tax

MISSOURI: After a month of bitter fighting the House passed the 2 per cent sales tax, to be passed on to the consumer, but defeated an emergency clause to put the measure into immediate effect. Admissions, advertising and other services come under the provisions. The bill faces several obstacles in the Senate. A measure was introduced in the Senate for a 4 per cent levy on all transactions and services rendered.

NEBRASKA: The fate of Sunday shows comes up for balloting April 9 in Beatrice, the last major Nebraska town to have a ban on Sunday showings.

NEW YORK STATE: The Senate passed the Julius Berg bill which permits Sunday performances in legitimate theatres, but requires that theatres be closed one day in every week if they are open on Sundays. The measure then went to the Governor for signature. Under provisions of a bill introduced by Senator Thomas F. Burchill and referred to the Codes Committee, the penal law is amended by making it larceny to conduct a show or other public exhibition advertised for charitable purposes, without turning over to that cause or charity at least 75 per cent of the net receipts.

OHIO: The Senate passed a bill to prohibit dance marathons, walkathons and other endurance contests lasting more than 24 hours. It is expected the House will concur.

New Pennsylvania Sunday Bill

PENNSYLVANIA: With the 10 per cent ticket tax defeated in the Senate, Pennsylvania theatre men were concentrating their strength to fight the proposed state sales tax. Representing a consolidation of several Sunday bills, a new measure was presented in the House under which a referendum would be held in each municipality at the next municipal elections, in November. If passed, Sunday shows would be permitted after 2 p. m. Another bill calls for 24 hours of rest each week for projectionists.

RHODE ISLAND: Operators have a bill in the House providing for one man to every machine. Another measure pending provides that all films must be projected from machines on the ground floor, or the entrance floor, except in regulation booths.

TENNESSEE: Theatre owners of Tennessee converged on Nashville to fight the proposed 10 per cent amusement tax favorably reported out of the finance committee.

WISCONSIN: A broad tax bill, designed to abolish the state's general property tax, which would place a 4 per cent levy on theatres' gross incomes, has been introduced in the Assembly.

Meyer Named Universal Studio Business Manager

Fred S. Meyer last week was named executive business manager of the Universal Studio, in an unexpected appointment by Carl Laemmle, president of the company. The post was expected to go to Julius Bernheim. Henry Clark, studio comptroller, has taken over Mr. Meyer's former position as executive assistant to Mr. Laemmle.

Is Macfadden Ad Manager

William Cunningham of the Chicago staff of Macfadden Women's Group publications, has been promoted to western advertising manager.

Columbia Toy Deal

Columbia has granted a franchise to Transogram, Inc., toy manufacturer, New York, to use the "Scrappy" cartoon characters in all lines of merchandise.

Puritan Pictures Formed

Puritan Picture Corporation has been chartered at Albany by Louis A. Solomon, David Gross and Jean Krausl of New York City.

Can't Storm U. S. Into English Films, Says Capt. Norton

The British film industry, if it wishes to make any appreciable headway with its product in the American market, must not try to proceed too fast, said Capt. Richard Norton, director of British and Dominions Film Corporation, Ltd., before returning to England last week. During his five weeks in New York, which included a Canadian visit, he discussed the company's 1935-36 product with the American distributor, United Artists.

"I am glad to find that the word 'British' is becoming less unattractive to American audiences every year, but we in England must recognize that it will take time to conquer the provincial sectors of the United States," he said. "American pictures have been pleasing English audiences for 20 years."

Captain Norton said he believed the English appeal to the American box office must rely for some time on the draw of American "name" players, but that in the long run British stars, independent of Hollywood, would be built up in such fashion as to please American audiences as much as their own favorites.

The British and Dominions executive declared technical facilities and talent sources for British studios today are identical with those of Hollywood and New York.

British and Dominions, he said, will release three features in this country in 1935-36. The company does not plan to hasten distribution of more than a few pictures for the next two or three years, because "we want to get the right business."

"For a long time there will be a more or less superficial difference in thought between American and British audiences," Capt. Norton said. "Until this difference is overcome in this country, British producers cannot hope to accomplish financial miracles here. The American public simply cannot be stormed into liking British pictures."

Arrangements which will permit exhibition in this country of "Nell Gwyn," made by British and Dominions, including the addition of a new prologue and epilogue, were completed between Capt. Norton and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America during his stay.

He said no successor to the late Hubert Marsh as chairman of the board has been selected as yet.

Capt. Norton also said that as a result of his conferences with Will H. Hays he will carry to British producers an appeal for compliance with the American Production Code of Ethics. He will acquaint British studios with production problems encountered under the code.

One step he said would be the supplying of British producers with details of American censorship eliminations in an effort to make them familiar with the type of material to be avoided. A second step would be establishment of a system whereby scripts of proposed British pictures could be cleared by the Production Code Administration at a speed which would not delay actual camera work.

MAN PROPOSES

Fox

A good cast and a good story form the showmanship basis of this production. Modern, up-to-date, a blend of fact and fiction which creates many comedy situations, it's the story of a woman-hating newspaper reporter who falls when the right girl comes along only to rush from the altar to jail and there spend his honeymoon covering one of the most sensational jail exposure stories of the generation. Although much of its action, romance, comedy, drama, excitement and action occur behind stone walls and steel bars, it is not a "jail" story.

The original is by Claude Binyon, credited with many successful picture yarns, and Sidney Skolsky, newspaper columnist. Screen play is by William Hurlburt. It is directed by William Seiter, maker of "Richest Girl in the World" and the current "Roberta."

In the production, James Dunn, last in "Bright Eyes" and soon to be seen in "White's Scandals," is the reporter. Mae Clarke, absent from the screen since "Operator 13," is the deserted bride. Third angle to the triangle romance is Neil Hamilton, last in "Mutiny Ahead" and "Fugitive Lady." The supporting cast being lengthy, those of prominence are Sidney Toler, Warren Hymer, Stanley Fields, Jack LaRue, Raymond Hatton, Madge Bellamy, Arthur Treacher and Frank Melton. Others included are Dorothy Christy, Robert Gleckler, William Pawley, James Donlan and Phil Tead.

Although there is plenty of dramatic excitement in the story, comedy seems to be the selling quality upon which most concentration should be placed.

ALIBI IKE

Warner

This is a baseball story, written by Ring Lardner, whose "You Know Me Al" series first put the spark of comic humanness in the game's oddest characters. It stars Joe E. Brown, who before he became a motion picture actor was quite a ball player himself and retains all this enthusiasm for the national pastime. In it he's a combination Rube Waddell-Dizzy Dean-Babe Ruth-Ty Cobb, who does everything perfectly but always has a glib alibi for not doing it better; that is, until he falls in love with the club captain's sister and, by making an alibi for the ring she wears, loses the girl, goes into a slump, almost wrecks the team's pennant hopes, but finally emerges from the fog under the inspiration of understanding love, and by his diamond prowess wins the flag and the world series.

Situations on the playing field and in the field of romance are just the kind in which Brown appears to best advantage. The screen play is by William Wister Haines, and the production, which is being made in the local big league training camps, is directed by Ray Enright, who handled Brown in a previous baseball picture, "Fireman, Save My Child," and is also the maker of "Circus Clown," "Dames" and "The St. Louis Kid."

While the action presents a lot of big league baseball stuff and shows many famous players of the Cubs, Cardinals and Braves teams, the cast has wellknown screen names with the exception of Olivia de Vaviland, making her feature debut. Supporting players listed are Eddie Schubert, Ruth Donnelly and Henry O'Neill, who have been seen in many Warner productions, and Roscoe Karns and William Frawley.

To be released simultaneously with the opening of the baseball season, the diamond action of the production is a natural to sell to baseball fans; the romance, comic and hectic, should have an appeal to women and the general all-around fun, action and excitement, a magnet for comedy fans.

OUR LITTLE GIRL

Fox

The combination of Shirley Temple and this title is a direct tip as to the show's entertainment character and exploitation potentialities. The story, being essentially a domestic drama, is something new for Shirley, but on the basis of past performances in various kinds of pictures, she should have no difficulty in delivering in the expected manner. Fundamentally and in direct relation to title significance, it's a story of a separated father and mother who are reunited by the charm and sweetness of their little girl. Accompanying production values, however, give the picture vivid color, as one of the outstanding features is the presentation of a circus. Shirley again dances, this time with Jack Donohue.

The production is adapted from the story "Heaven's Gate," by Flyorence Leighton Pfalzgraf. The screen play is by Stephen Avery and Allen Rivkin. It is being directed by John Robertson, who recently made "Little Orphan Annie" and "Captain Hurricane."

While the name Shirley Temple is the outstanding cast feature, it is noticeable that her support is composed of players who have not appeared with her previously. The roles of the mother and father are assumed by Rosemary Ames, seen in several Fox pictures, and Joel McCrea, now in "Private Worlds." Lyle Talbot, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Warren Hymer, Margaret Armstrong, Rita Owen, Leonard Carey and Jack Baxley form the straight support.

From an additional exploitation viewpoint, there is Poodles Hanneford, a circus favorite all over the land, who brings his complete tumbling-riding act together with half a dozen clowns for added fun and excitement. Furthering this atmosphere are the Clarkonians, famous mid-air trapeze swing troupe. Also there are the dancer, Jack Donohue, and Gus Van, survivor of the noted vaudeville team, with whom Shirley does a number.

With the name values, quality of the dramatic, comedy action, contrasted story content, plus production values, the field for unique showmanship is wide.

BREAK OF HEARTS

Radio

A drama of regenerated love, this production offers much in story content, personnel and entertainment values upon which to construct a strong interest-creating campaign. The ingredients have many times demonstrated their entertainment quality. In addition there is a novelty in development, atmosphere and action as well as reactions, that quickly establishes the fundamental idea as different.

Basically it is a story of two persons, one a musician, the other a composer, whose love path is upset by menacing jealousy. As the man sinks lower and lower in the social and artistic scale, the woman rises to fame and prestige. Brought together again and inspired by their old love, the girl sacrifices the ease and affluence that could be hers to help her man beat his way back to a high position in the music world.

The title giving an adequate hint as to the story's sympathetic dramatic quality, it is an original by Lester Cohen, with the screen play by Sarah Y. Mason, Victor Heerman and Anthony Veiller, a trio who have contributed to several Radio successes. The direction is by Phillip Moeller, maker of "Age of Innocence."

The cast is headed by Katharine Hepburn, last in "Little Minister," and Charles Boyer, seen first in "Caravan" and currently in "Private Worlds," where his work is almost sure to create a wide interest. Principals in the supporting cast include John Beal, seen with Miss Hepburn in "Little Minister," Jean Hersholt and Jean Howard and Telene Millard.

In theme and action there is a certain similarity of entertainment quality to "One Night of Love." While straight music doesn't figure much, the drama and romance which it inspires are not to be overlooked in substantiating the appeal of the personalities and direct story value.

PARTY WIRE

Columbia

This is a love story. While that quality predominates, there is also a full quota of drama and comedy and just a suggestion of tragedy. The whole is spun about a unique premise. Localed in a small town, modernly timed, all the theatrics are the outcome of the great small town habit of listening on the party telephone wire and then via gossip placing the strangest and most weird interpretations upon simple and innocent remarks overheard.

The story is an original by Bruce Manning and Vera Caspary, noted short story writers who recently have cooperated on several Columbia pictures. The screen play is by John Howard Lawson and Ethel Hill. Direction is by Erle Kenton, recent maker of "The Best Man Wins."

While the featured cast is rather small, it is made up of favorably known screen names. Included are Jean Arthur and Victor Jory as the heroine and hero, about whom all the romance centers as well as the maliciously gossip-inspired drama and semi-tragedy. In the supporting cast are Helen Lowell, seen in many Warner and several Columbia features; Charley Grapewin, Robert Allen, Clara Blandick, now in "Princess O'Hara"; Geneva Mitchell, seen in many Columbia pictures, mostly recently "Behind the Evidence," and Maude Eburne, now being featured in "Ruggles of Red Gap."

The essence of the story has the entire eligible feminine population of Rockridge, dairy center, making plans to snare the wealthy bachelor, Jory, into marriage. As romance develops between him and Jean Arthur, an innocent but overheard bit of telephone conversation puts the girl in bad light. With the lovers' dreams apparently exploded, Jory's aunt, Helen Lowell, takes the town to task, puts a finis to its listening in on other folks' phone conversations, and fixes up everything for the hero and heroine.

Familiarly small town in atmosphere and action of story content, the production should inspire much of familiar and potent exploitation ideas.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

SEE FILMS FOOTBALL TO WHITE HOUSE GOAL
WARNERS RUSHING REBUILDING AND STAGES
VIDOR STAYS AT PARAMOUNT FOR TWO YEARS
SEVEN PICTURES START, SIX ARE COMPLETED

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

Hollywood Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD filmland promises to hie itself elsewhere if California's legislature picks out Pictureville on which to levy confiscatory or unreasonable personal income or property taxes.

Hollywood, and a good part of the state, is now in an uproar. On street corners, in Chambers of Commerce, restaurants, saloons and homes, from a personal, economic and business viewpoint, the debate, pro and anti, waxes warmly and furiously. Newspapers have started publishing aerial photos showing what Hollywood looked like twenty years ago and how it, its environs and Culver City look today. Columns are full of statistics. Editorials intended now to win sympathy for filmland, paint word pictures of a ghost town that may be. The whole hullabaloo is intended to convince Mr. John J. Public that if he permits these alleged exorbitant taxes to be imposed, the country might just as well be given back to the Mexicans.

This isn't the first time Mr. Picture Business has yanked out the old prop bogeyman to give John the jitters. As recently as last summer when Upton Sinclair wandered up and down the state promising John and his kind a veritable Utopia, and the fair-haired though baldheaded statesman chosen to oppose him seemed doomed to political annihilation, Mr. Picture Business said to the man on the street, "Elect Sinclair AND we move."

Evidencing its sincerity, the Picture Business raised a war chest, rallied its heaviest oratorical artillery, brought in high-powered outsiders and really gave the locals the jitters. Chuckling, immediately after election, Sinclair pointed at Mr. Picture Business, told his cohorts "there's the guy who licked us."

Thereby hangs a parable. An administration and legislature elected by the efforts of the industry, now biting the hand that put them in power.

Some commentators see California's Governor ogling the White House two years hence, using the picture business as a temporary football on his way to achieve that goal. Talk of Governor Merriam's self-seeking future, revolves around his endorsement of the Townsend Bill, which sought national favor by memorializing the bill to Congress, and Merriam's outspoken candidacy for the nation's chief executive post by the Young Republican League of California.

At the moment, Legislature and Filmland are cordial. Each measures the other with socks of publicity. Catlike, the move of one is countered by the other. A saner mood prevails on all fronts.

Acting as spearheads for the picture business are Louis B. Mayer and Joseph M. Schenck, both of whom know their way around politically.

Al Jolson and the Brothers Warner will continue to make pictures together for some time. Just before training for New York the "mammy singer" put his name on the dotted line of a long term contract. . . .

King Vidor, who hopped over to Paramount for a one picture deal, remains there on a two year ticket and gets the tag of director-producer. He'll work directly under Ernst Lubitsch. . . .

Joseph Schenck, Al Lichtman and William Philips are back in town following a quick plane trip from Manhattan. Mr. Schenck immediately grabbed front page space in the daily newepapers with his statement that the film studios would continue with their plans to move out of Hollywood, locating in a state where they were assured that at no time would they be threatened by tax legislation. . . . New plans for First Division are now being mapped out in New York by John Curtis, William Fiske and Nick Ludington, executive heads of the firm. The trio checked out of Hollywood this week. . . . $1,000,000 is being spent by Warner on reconstruction of buildings destroyed in the recent studio fire and on new sound stages. Plans are being rushed for the early completion. . . . Nicholas Schenck hopped into town for two weeks of conferences with MGM executives. . . . More fireworks in the extra registration muddle. Three Hollywood extra talent organizations have mailed protests to Sol Rosenblatt, claiming the new list now awaiting Mr. Rosenblatt's signature has not been handled according to code regulations. The organizations firing the bombshell are Hollywood Picture Players Association, Picture Players Alliance and Troupers, Inc.

MAY DRAFT RYSKIND AS FOURTH MARX BROTHER

Morrie Ryskind, co-author of the Pulitzer play "Of Thee I Sing" and "Let 'Em Eat Cake," will make the barnstorming vaudeville tour with the three Marx Brothers when they try out their screen material in the outlying houses before filming their "Night at the Opera" at the M-G-M Studios.

In case a befuddled public expects to see the Four Marx Brothers, instead of three, Morrie is likely to be drafted to transform the trio into a quartet. He is ready to change his name to "Marx" Ryskind, if and when he dons grease paint, and as one of the coauthors of the opera, the fourth Marx Frére shouldn't have any difficulty with his lines—and Marx, the fourth, is funny, too.

"Risko," as Marxo fourth hereafter will be known, once played the part of an office boy in a "Naked Truth" dinner sketch entitled "Fifty-Fifty or Fight."

Seven Pictures Start

Nearing the time when one intensive production drive will clear up the 1934-35 schedules, seven new pictures started this week as six were finished. Universal, which has been comparatively inactive for a few weeks, became busy again as three new features started. Fox, which has had an intensive program under way, finished three.

Most important of the new Universal group, "The Raven," based upon the Edgar Allan Poe poem, went before the cameras. Louis Friedlander is directing and the screen play is credited to Jim Tully. Boris Karloff and Bela Lugosi are teamed in the leading parts, with Ian Wolfe. Also on the stages is 'Frisco Lady," a dramatic romance being directed by Murray Roth. The cast features Valerie Hobson, Lyle Talbot, Hugh O'Connell, Henry Armetta, Clay Clement, Ruthelma Stevens, Andy Devine and Leslie Fenton. "I'll Bet You" is the third starring picture. Onslow Stevens, Maxine Doyle, H. B. Warner and Eric Linden are featured.

Monogram put "Honeymoon Limited" into work. The picture is a romantic comedy. The cast included Neil Hamilton, Irene Hervey.

Fox started "Black Sheep," an original by Allan Dwan, who is also directing. The cast presents Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor, Adrienne Ames, Tom Brown, Eugene Pallette, Jed Prouty, Herbert Mundin and Johnny Rogers.

At Paramount, shooting started on "College Scandal." A topical collegiate yarn, the cast to date including Arline Judge, Kent Taylor, Benny Baker, Douglas Blackley, Wendy Barrie, William Frawley, Bill Benedict, Joyce Compton and Mary Nash.

MGM's contribution to the new activity is "Murder in the Fleet." A mystery romance tinged melodrama, the cast includes Robert Taylor, Madge Evans and Johnnie Hyams.

Fox Completes Three

Two or three completed Fox pictures appear to be important. "Our Little Girl," a drama, stars Shirley Temple. In the support are Joel McCrea, Rosemary Ames, Lyle Talbot, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Jack Donohue, Poodles Hanneford, Gus Van, Margaret Armstrong, Rita Owen, Leonard Carey, Warren Hymer and Jack Baxley. "Red Heads on Parade," a Lasky production, has romance and comedy, plus music and spectacle, with John Boles and Dixie Lee starred. Featured are Jack Haley, Raymond Walburn, Alan Dinehart, Jane Withers, Herman Bing, William Austin and Wilbur Mack. Direction is by Norman McLeod. The third picture completed is "Ladies Love Danger," a romantic drama, again teaming Mona Barrie and Gilbert Roland.

Columbia completed "Air Fury," a topical dramatic story of commercial aviation which Al Rogell directed. Players include Ralph Bellamy, Tala Birell and Victor Kilian.

With Katharine Hepburn and Charles Boyer in the leads, Radio finished "Break of Hearts," a dramatic romance. Phillip Moeller is the director. John Beal, Jean Hersholt, Helene Millard and Jean Howard head the support.

Monogram finished active shooting on "The Healer." A dramatic romance, directed by Reginald Barker, the cast includes Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley, Mickey Rooney, Judith Allen, Robert McWade, Bruce Warren, J. Farrell MacDonald and Vessie Farrell.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

It is amazing how many theatre managers seem unaware of the fact that a screen surface that looks quite white and in excellent condition, may be sadly lacking in reflection power because of evenly distributed deposits of dust, carbon and particles and the like gathered from the air, as well as by discoloration set up by admixtures of gases contained in the atmosphere.

People patronize theatres to be entertained. Some of them are "picture fans" who attend rather regularly, regardless of how lacking in excellence the entertainment may be. Others attend regardless when their favorite star is booked. But back of these is that large group of people who can take their screen entertainment or leave it. This group, which is in the majority, is very critical, both of visual effect and sound.

The question is, how able are you, as a manager, to analyze results and determine whether or not they are the best that can be produced from the class of prints you receive, and with the equipment at hand?

However, we are not yet done with screens. When you, Mr. Manager, are about to select a screen, just what means will you take to determine whether or not the one selected will distribute the reflected light evenly to all parts of your auditorium? The requirements for a deep, narrow theatre are vastly different from those for a wide, shallow auditorium, as you doubtless know. The screen that will distribute the light quite evenly for a wide or narrow theatre having either a low balcony or none at all, might be quite inadequate in a theatre having a high balcony.

The wise manager will determine from the theatre plans or by actual measurement just what the maximum horizontal and vertical viewing angles will be. He will then demand actual photometric measurements of the reflection powers of screens under consideration at those angles, to be made by some responsible optical engineer attached to responsible organization—the Eastman Company for example—which company will, I am advised, make such measurements upon request for a very reasonable fee.

Another point highly important to theatre managers is screen image dimensions. This is a subject upon which widely diverging views are held. From the viewpoint of box office receipts, however, the question instantly resolves itself into what size screen image will provide for theatre audiences, viewed as a whole, the most pleasing entertainment, in which the least amount of visual strain is involved.

In this several points are involved. First it may be conceded by any thoughtful manager that, for several reasons, too large a screen image detracts from the value of front seats, one of which is the wide viewing angles involved. Following action over a large field of action at close range for one to one and a half hours fatigues the eye muscles. This may be conceded by even the most confirmed big-picture manager. Also it may be agreed that the viewing of a large screen image at close range adds to eye strain because the whole image not only appears coarse grained, but also in effect, out of focus. Still another element of damage lies in the unquestioned fact that a large screen image at close range is almost anything but beautiful.

On the other hand, always provided sufficient illumination can be had to illuminate brilliantly, a large screen image (doubtful unless high amperage high intensity arcs be used), will be found to better serve the rear seats if they be in excess of 100 feet from the screen. However, as against this advantage must be placed the further fact that added magnification makes every defect in the screen image more plainly visible. Then, too, in considering this phase we must remember that patrons who cannot see the smaller image well from the rear seats may select seats closer to the screen.

TO RESUME THE BLUEBOOK SCHOOL

Next week the Bluebook School will be resumed, with questions prepared by engineering departments of sound organizations, which also have appended correct answers. The usual course will be pursued in selecting answers for publication, except that in the event no correct answer is received that of the engineers will be published. —F. H. R.

As to illumination, we may say broadly that 8 to 10 foot candles at the screen center should be regarded as the minimum, as, particularly in dark scenes, less will not be sufficient to bring out all photographic details at their full value. As to the maximum, it should not exceed 12 to 14 foot candles, photometric measurement, since above that, at medium to short viewing distances, the whites in the picture tend to produce brilliancy approaching glare that is painful to sensitive eyes.

Sound is one of the most abused items in modern projection practice. It is the duty of theatre managers to know whether or not sound is as it should be, which is far from being a simple task. Sound excellence involves both volume and quality. Sound should be checked for volume level frequently, as volume requirement alters with every change in the audience itself. It is extremely poor procedure to entrust sound observation to an usher or to any one else having other duties to perform. Excellence in sound is of such importance and the volume requirement is likely to change so often and so suddenly that a constant check is highly advisable. In the end it will more than pay.

As to quality, I make the statement that in but few theatres is it all it could and should be. In a very great many it is lacking in varying degree in excellence, while in no small number it is very bad, indeed. In this connection it must be remembered that sound changes, both in volume requirement and in quality, with changed atmospheric conditions.

Theatre managers who want the best results in sound must study sound, learning whether or not that produced in their theatre duplicates the original with respect to naturalness. The only way is to train oneself to observe sound critically.

As to equipment used in sound reproduction and projection, there are many things the theatre manager can and should do. It is the duty of the manager to employ a competent projectionist, confining himself thereafter largely to one thing, results.

It is perfectly proper for the manager to make occasional visits to the projection room, observing the general condition of equipment. Cleanliness is very important in sound equipment. Batteries, for example, should be spotlessly clean. If a projector mechanism is found smeared with oil or dirt, or the interior of lamphouses not at least reasonably clean, a severe reprimand is very much in order.

It is well occasionally to look at the motor generator commutators, which should be perfectly smooth, and when operating at load, present no sparking except possibly a very few fine ones. Unless the commutators have been cleaned off quite recently they should present a smooth, dark brown surface.

Feel of the brushes when not in operation. They should be free, but not loose in their holders. Pressure of brushes on commutator is of large importance. It should be approximately one and one-quarter pounds per square inch of brush contact surface. Less will make for poor contact, sparking, roughening of the commutator and inefficient operation. More will tend to groove the commutator surface and cause excessive wear. It is perfectly permissible for managers to ask the projectionists what the brush pressure is, and to ask him to explain, in detail, just how he knows the pressure.

While the manager is not presumed to be a projectionist, it is his right to determine whether or not projection affairs are being taken care of efficiently.

It is the height of financial folly to "save" money by refusing to supply needed replacement parts, or refusing needed repairs. Such procedure does not represent true economy. Instead, it means loss, for it brings about a lowering in quality in either visual results or sound.

The condition of projector mechanisms may be judged by holding the rotating shutter stationary, with the intermittent movement "on the lock" and rotating the intermittent movement flywheel. If it can be moved in excess of 7/32 of an inch, measured at the rim, the gear train and its various bearings are too much worn and in need of overhauling.

Arcturus' Attempt to Halt RCA Suit Dismissed

Arcturus Radio Tube Company's bill of complaint against Radio Corporation of America in which the former sought to have the chancery court at Wilmington, Del., enjoin the defendant from prosecuting a suit against it in the New Jersey supreme court is dismissed in an opinion filed by Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott at Wilmington.

RCA brought suit against Arcturus, one of 15 companies licensed to manufacture tubes under RCA patents, on July 24, 1933, to recover from the licensee the difference between five per cent royalties paid by the licensee in 1932 and the minimum royalty of $50,000 set forth in the license agreement. Arcturus contended that while the minimum royalty provision is in the agreement it had an understanding with RCA it was not to be enforced.

AN OPEN LETTER AND SOME ANSWERS

FINE ARTS THEATRE
BOSTON, MASS.

AN OPEN LETTER TO:

MR. TERRY RAMSAYE
Editor MOTION PICTURE HERALD
New York City

May I be permitted a little space to point out some discrepancies in Mr. James P. Cunningham's "Exhaustive Examination of Soviet Films in this Country" (February 23 issue of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD).

Mr. Cunningham lists the Fine Arts Theatre in Boston as one of Amkino's "foremost accounts." For your information, we played only two of their pictures the entire year of 1934 and none this year.

Russian Films at Fine Arts

5 in 1932
6 in 1933
2 in 1934
0 in 1935

Is that his idea of a "foremost account?"

(ANSWER: Being the Fine Arts in Boston—yes.)

He lists the Fine Arts' capacity as 750, while we only have 587. First he lists two theatres in Boston "showing Russian films regularly," and then he becomes enthusiastic with the idea and lists three. Where are these theatres in Boston? I know this town pretty well and I have no such information. The Fine Arts did show an occasional Russian film as stated above, but recently Matty Radin's group obtained from Amkino the Boston franchise, thus eliminating even our occasional Russian film, which leaves the Majestic Theatre as the only Boston theatre showing Russian films. What can he mean by "elsewhere?"

He lists twenty-five theatres "elsewhere" in Massachusetts showing Russian films regularly. Where is this place "elsewhere?" There are no theatres in Massachusetts, outside of the Majestic Theatre in Boston at present, that can be listed as "showing Russian films regularly." I challenge this "exhaustive examination." If he is going to give us facts, verify them first.

(ANSWER—A reporter asked Amkino.)

Again, he first lists eighteen theatres as "Amkino's foremost accounts," and then without rhyme or reason, he heads a list "Showing Russian films regularly," and increases the number to one hundred and fifty-two. How does he differentiate between "foremost accounts" and "showing Russian films regularly?" Is not any house that shows Russian films regularly a foremost account? According to Mr. Cunningham's own statement, "Russian films are generally shown in the so-called art theatres." I know about art theatres in the United States; he would be nearer the mark if he listed about ten, with two in New York showing a majority of Russian films and the others showing an occasional Russian film.

If he claims that "in audience hours, the red Russian product would appear to rate in the vicinity of one-half of one per cent," then why the panic about the "red" menace in the film industry? "One-half of one per cent" can't be much of a menace against 99½ per cent, can it?

(ANSWER—Mr. Kraska, like others, confused the Hearst newspaper excitement on the subject with the HERALD'S article of fact. The HERALD indicated no impression of panic, but quite the contrary.)

Haven't you underestimated the intelligence of your readers by encouraging Mr. Cunningham to dismiss such screen achievements as "Potemkin," "Road to Life," "Chapayev," "The End of St. Petersburg," etc., etc., by shouting "Propaganda?" No true student of the cinema can honestly deny the above named Russian films were a great contribution to motion pictures.

(ANSWER—The HERALD'S news story expressed no opinions on the quality of the pictures named. The editor will now, however, state his opinion that the pictures named, had they emanated from Hollywood, would not have rated or won a mention in the critical press.—T. R.)

In his efforts to create a "red menace" he ignored the fact that all Russian films are primarily made for Soviet consumption.

(ANSWER—Mr. Cunningham's news story had nothing to say inferring a "red menace". It, by recital of facts, showing trivial circulation for red pictures, could be intelligently read as indicating that there is no menace in that quarter. The HERALD has been editorially explicit in its statement that metropolitan critics have paid excessive and extravagant attention to insignificant product because of its red accent.—T. R.)

Here again I will quote his own words: "The Soviet cinema industry has enlarged its audience to include the very youngest members of society. 'The Dirtiest of Them All,' the first of a series of films for children, tells the story of little Vania, who refused to wash," and then he continues by saying that this film "comes at a time when the Soviet Government is trying to induce its adult citizenry to shave, wear clean collars, and wash their hands before sitting down to eat," then ends with a bit of propaganda by saying, "There is a bit of praise for Soviet hog raising thrown in." Since he admitted that this film is part of a campaign to teach its adult citizenry sanitary conditions, how can he intelligently criticize anything that concerns the Russians only?

(ANSWER—Again, we must point out, Mr. Cunningham expressed no opinions in his news article. As to Mr. Kraska's phrase "concerns Russians only", he is begging the question.)

Is not the attack on the critics far-fetched when he bases his claims on the facts that they praise films that receive only "one-half of one per cent in screen-time audience hours?" Does not the same situation exist in the showing of German or French films? Does not the same condition exist in operas any symphony concerts? Why attack the critics on the Russian films only? Who is guilty of propaganda now? Would Mr. Cunningham want the critics to analyze a film or production on the basis of the number of people in the theatre at the time the reviewer happened to be there? Is this his and your idea of a critic? Is that the basis upon which the reviews in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD are written?

(ANSWER—Mr. Cunningham made no attack on the critics, but the editor of the HERALD has written in criticism of the critics on the editorial page where opinions are expressed. Reviews in the HERALD are reviews for showmen concerned only with the qualities of the film as amusement merchandise. The policy is revealed rather directly to such persons as read the reviews concerned.)

To Mr. Cunningham this may be an "exhaustive examination." This is a rather comprehensive phrase, and one that will bear scrutinizing.

(ANSWER—Both Mr. Cunningham and MOTION PICTURE HERALD regret having stated that Mr. Kraska's theatre seats 750 whereas he finds its capacity to be only 587.)

Sears Heads New England Signal Corps Post in Boston

Richard N. Sears, with Pathe News in Boston, and a major in the Signal Corps of the United States Army Reserve, last week was elected president of the New England Signal Post, Boston, which is composed of members of various military and civilian organizations who are interested in any phase of Signal Corps work. Motion picture work is included. (Picture in Pictorial Section.)

Mr. Sears has just completed a term as commander of the Oliver Ames, Jr., Post of the American Legion, also in Boston.

"The White Rose," a Syrian picture that has been dubbed in English, will be roadshown in Boston by Alex Tradd, who is opening a new exchange there. He contemplates establishing an international distribution concern for Arabic and Syrian films.

Hurley Forms Screen Firm

Albert Hurley, former designer of the Ortho-Krome Screen, has formed a new screen manufacturing concern, under his own name, and located in Long Island City. M. A. Shea is associated with Mr. Hurley in the firm, known as the Hurley Screen Company, Inc.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended March 30, 1935, from 108 theatres in 18 major cities of the country, reached $1,450,625, an increase of $438,175 over the total for the preceding calendar week, ended March 23, when 98 theatres in 17 major cities aggregated $1,012,450.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Corpus Christi, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

We got here last night, and having just gotten here, and having seen no one on the road down here we, of course, don't have anything to write about, but we are going to do a little kicking just the same.

Shine Mason, the Longhorn who runs the theatres at McAllen, said he was going to write the boy who has charge of the theatres here that we were coming down here and for him to look out for us and to have everything locked up. He must have done it, for when we got here we found everything locked up but one fishhouse and a filling station.

He had the mayor, the city council and two brass bands out to meet us but we came in on a side street and were ushered to a chili joint by a Mexican fisherman.

Gulf Is Full of Fish

We don't know how big Corpus Christi is, but would judge it to be about the size of Muskegon, Michigan, and Muskegon, Michigan, is a pretty good sized town, and if Corpus Christi has as many fine people in it as Muskegon has we ought to get along all right, but there is one thing about Corpus Christi we have observed already, and that is that there are more fish here in the Gulf than there are in the Platte river in Nebraska. We haven't met any of the theatre boys here yet, probably because we haven't called on them, but most likely because they are all out fishing.

Before coming here we drove down to Harlingen to call on J. C. King again. J. C. runs both theatres in Harlingen, which accounts for the reason why the people of Harlingen wear such a contented look all the while. A well managed theatre will come about as near curing this depression as anything we know of. People must have something to think about besides mortgages and I.O.U.'s.

While we were down to Harlingen calling on J. C. King we met E. F. Brady, who operates the Rivoli and Palace theatres at San Benito. E. F. is the champion golfer of the Rio Grande valley and has held the belt for several years, and he came up there to Harlingen to play golf but King winked at him and shook his head at him to warn him not to play us, presumably because he wanted him to hang onto that belt. Not knowing, we presume most people would take E. F. to be a Pennsylvania Dutchman but that's a mistake, his parents were raised just three miles northeast of Belfast, Ireland, and they came to this country to help make it what it is, and that's why they sent E. F. down to San Benito to build up southeast Texas. They put Bob Smith and his Mission theatre up at the west end of the valley and E. F. Brady with his theatres at San Benito at the east end and then filled in with McAllen, Pharr, San Juan, Alimo, Donna, Weslaco, Mercedes, Laferia, and Harlingen between, and that's what makes the Rio Grande valley such an important place. E. F. says that havalenas don't stay around San Benito because they are afraid of the street cars.

SAM RIDGE, 61, SEES FIRST FILM

For a good many years, for he admits, when pressed, to 61, Sam Ridge, county commissioner of Fort Scott, Mo., has resisted the wiles of screen femininity, the red blood of film action, and the spectacle of the modern screen, but he finally fell last week, and it was the diminutive Shirley Temple who did it. It is expected in Fort Scott that Mrs. Ridge may have something to do with it. Whatever the reason, Mr. Ridge went to see Shirley in Fox's "The Little Colonel", thoroughly enjoyed it, by his own admission, and apparently did not damage in the slightest degree his "democracy", whatever that might be.

Miles of Red Tape

The San Antonio Express, in today's issue, has this to say: "When Miss Ada Erler, employe of a clothing store in New Ulm, Minn., was advised by a doctor treating her for stomach trouble to rest after meals, she asked her employer for an extra half hour for lunch."

Her employer petitioned the NRA advisory board for permission to grant her an hour and half for lunch. The petition went to all NRA advisory boards and the national retail code authority, the research and planning division, the legal department, the consumers advisory board, and having passed all, was signed by the acting division administrator and sitting deputy administrator, and permission was granted seven weeks after the application had been made. Some people get huckleberry pie, others get red tape. We are a little surprised to read this criticism of the Red Tape department in a Texas newspaper.

After the government gets to work on that "shelterbelt" and finds out that a tree on section four needs some water, they will call a special session of the advisory committee to inquire into the matter and they will then refer a complete record of the case to Washington, which in turn will refer it to the "Brain Trust" and after due consideration they will wire Bill Jones to put a bucket of water on the aforesaid tree. All of which makes a well man pretty damsick when he thinks about it.

Here in Corpus Christi they have one dock that is said to be nearly a half mile long, and there is tier upon tier of lead bars piled up in one shed pretty near the entire length of it, ready to be shipped across the water. It begins to look at this time like they would need it, but if they shoot all this lead away there won't be enough of 'em left to put in the garden, and should they shoot it all away what will we do when duck season opens? That's what worries us.

Jobs for the Party

When we left the valley we put a box of grape fruit in our car. They told us that we couldn't get by a quarantine station above Edenburg with it unless we had an inspection tag on the box, so we were sent to a packing house to get one and they gave us a half a pad of them and we put one of them on the box. When we got to the inspection station the officer in charge waved us to go on. He didn't even stop us to inquire what we had. All of which convinces us all the stronger that the whole thing is a lot of bologna. But then, somebody has to have a job, under these depressing times, especially if he belongs to our party.

Last night a party in the next room to us turned on their radio and got a symphony orchestra program from San Antonio. This station usually puts on a high-class program and we thought we were in for an enjoyable evening and that we wouldn't hear a love song crooner, but pretty soon one started and then the dogs began to howl.

Gala Week for the Town

This week is to be a sort of a homecoming week for the Longhorns down here in Texas. It is said to be an agricultural fair of some kind, but what we'd like to know is where are they going to get their agricultural products for a display. If they show any Nebraska stuff down here we are going to make a kick about it. This would be a fine place for a fish carnival. Betcha the theatre lobbies will all have a display of red fish. We are going to hang around here and see what they will do. Up home our agricultural fairs usually consisted of six pumpkins, three Hubbard squashes and a "hoss trot" with Cy Buck leading the race with "Old Smooky" that could trot a mile in thirty minutes without stopping for oats more than twice. This is probably going to be a gala week for Corpus Christi. Maybe we'll tell you about it next time. We told you at the start that we didn't have anything to write about and now we have proven it.

Start Better Films Group

A Better Films Council is being formed at Hamilton, Ohio, where the Parent-Teachers' Association is organizing a motion picture division.

Receivership Lifted

Federal Judge Robert R. Nevin, in Cincinnati, has lifted the receivership on the Shubert and Cox theatres, in effect since August, 1934, with Ben L. Hiedingsfeld as receiver.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—A dandy picture liked better by men than women. Did not have the universal appeal of "It Happened One Night," and not as good but it isn't fair to compare all pictures with this one. Step on it. It's good and will do business. Running time, 105 minutes. Played February 25-26.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

CALIFORNIA TRAIL, THE: Buck Jones—Just another western. The dialogue in this is too stiff and stilted, which detracts from the picture. Otherwise, it's a fair enough western and it did very good business here. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 20.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Walter Connolly, Fred Keating, Wynne Gibson—We're still wondering what it was all about. Pulled it out after one day. Offered it as second feature Saturday but the first nighters gave it such a panning that not one person stayed to see it.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones, Diane Sinclair—My 8-year old son said, "best Jones to date." In spite of bad roads this drew the most people we have have in the house for nearly five months. It is a pleasure to run a show for the country folks that really pleases them a whole lot as this one did.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier—The usual Buck Jones picture that always pleases the class of people that come out for horse drama.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural, small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Roger Pryor, Walter Connolly—Dandy entertainment that will please nearly everyone. Title is poor and business was the same. (The Columbia title writers seem to have a monopoly on most of the worst names for pictures).—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SQUARE SHOOTER: Tim McCoy—A good western but McCoy never did draw here like some of the other western stars. Running time, 57 minutes. Played March 8-9.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

THAT'S GRATITUDE: Frank Craven, Sheila Mannors—Far from what we expected. Could have been made into a good two reeler.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

WESTERNER, THE: Tim McCoy, Marian Shilling—Satisfactory western that gave poorest business on a "horse-drama" that we have had for nearly a year. Roads and weather partly responsible. However, I find it hard to "sell" McCoy here. The other western stars draw from 30 to 50 per cent more.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—Good heavy program. No appeal to the younger set. Needs plenty of shorts. Running time, 63 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

First National

BABBITT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Good comedy that pleased. Did extra business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BABBITT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Average program picture. Way behind "Big Hearted Herbert." Fair drawing power here. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 20.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—Good entertainment but not a special so far as entertaining qualities are concerned. The first half of this picture is fast and thoroughly amusing but the last half is slowed down considerably by several attractive but overdone musical numbers in which every chorus girl in Hollywood is used.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Everybody pleased. Has everything to make a good show.—L. G. Tewsbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LIVING ON VELVET: Kay Francis—Starts out well, but slows up considerably. Fair picture. Played April 24-26.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

LIVING ON VELVET: Kay Francis, George Brent, Warren William—A swell show that every one praised very highly. In fact, I think it to be the best picture that either of the stars have made in some time. Played March 11-12.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—Just a fair picture and nobody in it to bring them in. Very poor business for Friday and Saturday. Warner Brothers not delivering as good as last year, not by a wide margin. Hope the last half of their product is better than the first. Running time, 61 minutes. Played March 22-23.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—Lots of action, good for Saturday or double bill. Running time, 61 minutes. Played March 15-16.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—This picture packed with action and a lot of newsreel shots. A weak story but passable on Friday and Saturday. Running time, 61 minutes. Played March 15-16.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—Made to order. It should be a pleasure and great satisfaction to any exhibitor to show "Bright Eyes" for it contains about every known ingredient that goes to make satisfactory "mass entertainment." It should also be a fair barometer of a maximum business at the time of its showing in each locality. Played January 27-28.—Chas. Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Excellent picture to far above average business. Everybody pleased including myself. However, I like to hear and see Shirley dance and sing and there was only one short song and no dancing. I do not believe, however, that this fact hurt the picture for the general run of patrons. Step on it, it's plenty good. Running time, 83 minutes. Played March 20-21.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—Holds our house record for the past three years. Not a kick from anyone. Largest children attendance the house ever had.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Not a "Judge Priest" or "David Harum," but topnotch entertainment just the same; pleased everyone. Rogers very popular with my patrons; good business for three days. Played March 10-12.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR: Disappointing in that there were too many pre-war shots. Will go well in a double bill. Be sure to tell folks that it is not modern photography and has a back screen voice.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Not enough action to make it interesting.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS (1934): Rudy Vallee, Jimmy Durante, Alice Faye, Cliff Edwards—This is not a small town picture and this statement goes after just reading Mr. Fred Hinds article, "There Aren't Any Small Towns." A few high school children praised this, but the farmers and older people "squawked" and said "no good." My own opinion is that it rates about average for this type of show.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—My folks went for it 100 per cent. Nice Friday and Saturday business. Would have been better if there had not been so much rain in first part.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—Good air-action picture.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Like all Rogers' pictures—answers to a showman's prayer.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple—I was wondering if this would compare with "Bright Eyes." Had no doubts after the box office had been open one hour. This picture has everything that a showman could ask for. Passed "Bright Eyes" at the box office by a mile. Bear down on this one. You won't disappoint your customers. Every exhibitor that shows this picture should send Shirley a Christmas present in appreciation. Played February 27-28.—F. Bernard Money, Jr., Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—One of the finest pictures it has been my privilege to show. The color sequence left the audience gasping, it was so beautiful. It even outgrossed "Bright Eyes," so why say more. Played March 7-8.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian—Yes, brother, it is the title of a motion picture and regardless of its merit, it will be about as hard to sell as ice skates in the Canal Zone. Played February 6-7.—Chas. Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Ketti Gallian, Spencer Tracy—Played it in spite of warnings to leave it. I did a nice two day business. First nighters gave it a lift. Miss Gallian will draw when she comes here again.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: John Boles, Gloria Swanson—The worst picture I have ever received from Fox and my patrons said almost in unison, "the worst picture we have ever seen." Get rid of this one if possible, especially if you are in a small town. You can't imagine how terrible this really is but we all make mistakes and Fox has given us some good ones to make up for it. Running time, 81 minutes. Played March 4-5.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY WOMAN: Mona Barrie—Rather poor picture.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PURSUED: Rosemary Ames, Victor Jory—"Boiler Plate." Any concern that puts its trade mark on such offerings should know where to put them—but they don't. Played January 9-10.—Chas. Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Nothing big, but a good little program picture.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatre, Inc., Limerick Maine. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—We stood them up on this one and it pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

CHU CHIN CHOW: Anna May Wong, George Robey—A lavish picture. Did a flop at the box office. Had plenty of walkouts. It's a good picture of its kind but no good for us.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LITTLE FRIEND: Nova Pilbeam—The child actress was good. Picture did not do average business. —W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Mascot

CRIMSON ROMANCE: Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza—Did a nice two day business for me. Though rated as for adults it seemed to me OK for the family.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

LITTLE MEN: Ralph Morgan, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Junior Durkin, Cora Sue Collins, Frankie Darro—Should be played in every theatre. We played this picture one week to a capacity business. Pleased our patrons 100 per cent.—Ned Tweeden, Princess Theatre, Fargo, N. D. Family patronage.

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL: William Haines, Judith Allen—One nice little show. Netted more than any of the big musicals. Second night filled the house. —Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

MGM

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans, Ted Healy—Best baseball story we remember. Suited our Saturday night crowd. Running time, 72 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—A-1. First rate in every respect and fine entertainment for all classes. An audience picture. Played January 20-22.—Chas. Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—Excellent. Plenty of comedy and my patrons ate it up. Personally, I thought it just a trifle silly in spots but it was good just the same and had what it takes to bring them in. Running time, 74 minutes. Played March 6-7.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Una Merkel, Stuart Erwin—Nothing but a program. Second night flopped. Running time, 82 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye—A pleasing musical with the usual Metro exactness for detail; plenty of comedy for diversion. Running time, 82 minutes. Played March 13-14.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—In this the great Garbo acts like a real flesh and blood woman who is subject to human emotions even as you and I. The first half of the picture is real pleasing entertainment. The second half is given over to a cholera epidemic, showing the funerals and death of the victims. It is not a very pleasant subject to be dealt with in such lengthy footage. A happy ending helps considerable. No special drawing power to this.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker—One of the most remarkable pictures ever produced. "Sequoia" is unique in story substance, interest holding and appealing entertainment qualities as well as the most beautiful photography ever presented in an "out-door" picture. Give it a longer run than the other "stuff"—it advertises itself. Played March 22-23.—Chas. Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker—An excellent picture. Did better than average business and all comments were favorable. This picture is mostly concerned with the friendship of a puma and deer and the human love angle is merely incidental. It is refreshingly new and novel in theme but it is of the type that audiences would very soon tire of due to the preponderance of animal shots. About one or two a year of this type is okay. Running time, 71 minutes. Played March 16.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker—Beautifully photographed and cleverly produced picture dealing with the friendship between a puma and a deer. Pleased ninety per cent. Ideal for the family. Clean, wholesome and very suitable for Lent.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Charles Butterworth, Maxine Doyle, Jimmy Durante—Our patronage found this to be an entertaining program picture. The young people especially enjoyed it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne—A beautiful picture and a flop with almost a record low at the box office. I have a hunch that the Scotch accent is partly the cause of its lack of drawing power, as the trailer shown a week in advance gives a very liberal sample of the Scotch dialogue to most of our patrons. It is my opinion that this picture should have been made with clear American English. I know that it is a story with its locale in Scotland, but that is no reason why the characters could not speak English as we know it. When the characters are French or Italian we have them speak English instead of French or Italian except for one who is definitely a foreigner among English speaking people.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CONTRIBUTES TO AID OTHERS

"For some time I have been using this Department and as a whole find the HERALD indispensable," writes Sam Kimball, manager of the Cornish Theatres, Limerick, Me. "I felt that as I was getting so much from the columns that perhaps my contributions might aid someone else."

Monogram

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Play it, if it is a bit late. Through Maine it has done business wherever played.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

SING SING NIGHTS: Conway Tearle, Mary Doran —Quite an original theme that held interest all the way. Good sound and well photographed. Business average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Carl Brisson, Mary Ellis—Picture patterned after the "Guardsman." Only redeeming part of the picture was last 10 minute sequence, "Dancing the Viennese." Not a small town picture. Running time, 85 minutes. Played March 12-14.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross—Step on this one plenty. It has everything: snappy music, good dancing, and plenty of comedy. Joe Penner is a riot, Jack Oakie is excellent in his part, and the balance of the cast is good. It's just the right kind of a musical for small towns. It did excellent business for us and everybody came out smiling. Running time, 83 minutes. Played March 18-19.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE: Paul Lukas, Walter Connolly, Gertrude Michael—Average program picture. Was afraid of this due to adverse reports but in my opinion, it is a fairly good picture. The cash customers all seemed to like it and it did average business. Played March 13.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—A pleasant romantic comedy; Colbert successfully upholds her reputation as a great star. However, the studios should keep an eye on this chap MacMurray. The best new screen possibility for a long time. He should go a long way. Picture and story pleasant and entertaining. Running time, 82 minutes. Played March 3-5.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Randolph Scott, Jackie Coogan—Good business on this one. My patrons like the Zane Grey stories and I get some customers on these that usually do not come to see westerns. Running time, 55 minutes. Played February 22-23.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—The best W. C. Fields has made to date. Everyone liked this one and business was above average. Running time, 65 minutes. Played March 21-22.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—Very funny feature comedy. Majority liked it. In the pantomime scenes, Fields was just as good as Charlie Chaplin ever was.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone.—It's the tops. While this picture lacks a feminine star, the picture still has an appeal for the audience. A great story, marvelously produced by a perfect cast makes this an outstanding picture. Cooper's acting absolutely flawless. I repeat it's the tops. Running time, 108 minutes. Played March 24-26.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—Nothing but words of praise for this one from my patrons. Lavishly produced. Great cast. Plenty of action, etc, etc. Step on it.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Gracie Allen, George Burns, Joan Marsh, Veloz and Yolanda, Guy Lombardo and The Royal Canadians—I made the mistake of using this in place of a newer show. Most people like comedy, but this has comedy that does not go over as it is too silly. While it is not really a poor picture, it pleased about as little as any picture we have had for several weeks.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural, small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—A mighty nice picture; clean and down to earth. Schools and churches should endorse 100 per cent. Running time, 73 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple, Sir Guy Standing—This fell below my expectations. Not half the entertainment that "Little Miss Marker" was. The famous Temple kid isn't on the screen nearly enough in this one. If you haven't played it, don't expect too much. We played with road conditions very bad and did normal business, so it should be box office under ordinary conditions.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—Gave this a return engagement as we were stormed out of most of our business on the first showing. Comments were numerous and gave evidence that the picture went over in a big way. Business was about average in spite of it being a "repeat."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, "Chic" Sale—Paramount has strayed a long way from the once successful product of these money getting Zane Grey stories. Call them horse operas if you wish but last year's Zane Greys produced by Paramount outgrossed in nearly every instance their top pictures. "Rocky Mountain Mystery" is a poorly made picture and, in fact, hardly a western. A couple of these and Zane Grey won't mean a thing to the B. O. Running time, 65 minutes. Played February 17-19.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—George Raft again cast as a partner of famous dance team. It's too bad the studios in casting this possible star don't give him a story like he had in "Scarface" or "The Bowery." That's the type in which he is liked. Why miscast him Running time, 70 minutes. Played February 20-21.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant —A surprise picture. The picture clicked at the box office and pleased. A novel story with perfect supporting cast. Cary Grant is passable in this one. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 1-2.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack—Just a program picture played on Bargain Night. Helen Mack terrible in a blond wig. Running time, 66 minutes. Played February 27-28.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Is playing my theatre for its third night tonight and its big scenes with its pretty girls in glittering clothes make it an outstanding, gorgeous screen attraction. Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers will bring happiness to you. Very good in their great dancing parts they play in this picture. Edward Everett Horton is the same old expression man who gives a good many laughs to your audience. The Baptist minister of our little city is holding protracted meetings and, of course, our crowd is not so big. I had almost given up the pleasure I derived in writing "What the Picture Did for Me" through the kindness of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD but when I see a picture like "The Gay Divorcee" and the general public enjoy it so much then I want to come back and tell my story, hoping and honestly hoping that our producers will see it and do their very best to give us pictures that will draw for us a full, running-over cash register at our box office each night, 365 days in the year. Now, Mr. Picture Film Producer, if this is asking more than you can do then we exhibitors will have to make up our minds to string along with you and take what you give till its all over.—George W. Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

GIGOLETTE: Adrienne Ames, Ralph Bellamy—Played this with "La Cucaracha" for an Owl show and pleased. "Gigolette" better than average program from RKO. Running time, 72 minutes. Played March 9-10.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson—Ran this with the Dionne Quintuplets and "La Cucaracha" and did a good business. The picture pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—

The boys are coming back. We though it their best. —Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn—Very good. Mostly a woman's picture and will not appeal to the action fans. Did slightly better than average business. The photography in this is poor and so dark that you have to guess what's going on most of the time. Running time, 109 minutes. Played March 9.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—Grand from every angle.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

RED MORNING: Steffi Duna—Did OK on a double bill.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Reginald Denny—A good show that drew a nice first night's business and for some unknown reason took a terrible flop the second night with weather and road conditions decidedly favorable. Should be good entertainment in any theatre. Comedy, pathos, and romance mixed in about the right proportions.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—A little above average. A picture with gay parties, pretty clothes and plenty of drinking. Women liked it better than the men. Just average at box office. Running time, 76 minutes. Played March 11-12.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix—This is a dandy western picture and did the business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix—It brought them in and held them. If they like westerns step on it.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

United Artists

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor—Consider this one of Cantor's best. Lots of action, riotous comedy and a glorious color sequence makes this picture pleasing to any audience. Eve Sully is exceptionally good, supporting cast OK. Running time, 91 minutes. Played March 17-19.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou—A terrible flop at the box office and not as good as I expected. Beery not suited to such roles. He shines in such roles as he played in "Viva Villa" and "The Big House." Running time, 105 minutes. Played March 1-2.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Tom Keene, Karen Morley—The picture had a good story and well acted. Did not draw so well. Some scenes overdone.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE LIFE OF DON JUAN, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Sr.—This picture draws like a broken cigar. Eighty-four minutes of misery for the audience, the ushers and the operator. You couldn't break even with this picture if they shipped it out with a 10-dollar bill in the can. Certainly, recent publicity hasn't helped Fairbanks a bit. Running time, 84 minutes. Played February 13-14.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Universal

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—Played this in place of "Secrets of the Chateau," and it proved to be an excellent substitution. This drew more favorable comments than any midweek show we have run this winter. This has a little of everything in it with comedy predominating. Any exhibitor can play this in place of something on this year's contract and not make a mistake. A real hit for the midweek nights!—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural, small town patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—Margaret Sullavan deserves better story material than this picture offers. Frank Morgan good in this picture; however, picture drags its entre length. Patrons' reaction zero-zero. Running time, 95 minutes. Played March 5-7.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Jane Wyatt, Phillips Holmes—It is good for any time. Let the schools in on it.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

MYSTERY OF EDWIN DROOD, THE: Claude Rains, Heather Angel—Slow moving mystery type of story. Well cast and ably directed. Yet this Dickens story is just average entertainment. Running time, 85 minutes. Played February 27-28.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—Foreign setting, but went over very well in spite of that. Rather an unusual type of story that hasn't any draggy scenes. Will rate this as better than average program show.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—A very good program picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played March 16.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—Here is a real picture that you can make a fuss about. The story is different and it is extra well done. Roger Pryor keeps on improving. Get them in, the picture has what it takes to please the cash customers. Business a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard, Gloria Shea—Picked this one up in place of a percentage. Wish I had let it lie. Film was in bad shape. Did good business, but I did not stand around main exit, for I knew some one would be asking "Where did that junk come from"—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

STRANGE WIVES: Roger Pryor—A very poor picture that did not please. Played one day to fair business. Played March 6.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Binnie Barnes, Lois Wilson—Best all around picture we have run for several months. Many fine comments. Will please all classes. Business poor on account of two nearby "Fairweather" theatres opening up with highly advertised pictures. About a dozen reports on this rate it from very good to excellent (Motion Picture Herald). A picture has to be good to rate nothing lower than "very good."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Binnie Barnes—A fair program picture. They will like it if you can get them in, but it's not a family picture.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—A good western and drew well on Saturday. Running time, 64 minutes. Played March 23.—J. T. Justice, Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—An unusually good feature. Drawing power above average. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 18-19.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—This picture presents the famous pair of "Here Comes the Navy" in their usual scrappy style. An interesting plot filled with comedy and some interesting shots of the San Diego Marine Corps. Deserves a good spot. Running time, 85 minutes. Played March 10-12.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

RIGHT TO LIVE, THE: George Brent, Josephine Hutchison—A very slow class picture that did not gross film rental here. What few saw it did not like it and told me so. Played March 4-5.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne. Donald Woods—When I bought Warner Brothers pictures, I figured "Sweet Adeline" would be one of the best bets. It proved a miserable flop and the high-class singing does not go over here. Only musicals with popular and jazz music will draw in this town. Irene Dunne sings seven songs and the picture would have been better if she had sung about three. Running time, 82 minutes.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

RICHARD, THE LION HEARTED: Wallace Beery—This was an old silent picture and we had to cue it with our disc sound device. It went over fairly well and it was a good print and it ran through very well. Everybody liked it. Running time, 74 minutes. Played March 21-22.—Albert Hefferon, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

JACK AND THE BEANSTALK: Comicolor Cartoons—The audience seemed to enjoy this color cartoon. It is only fair.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LITTLE RED HEN, THE: Comicolor Cartoons—While this is far from being a "Silly Symphony," it is satisfactory filler material for your best days.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Columbia

BACK TO THE SOIL: George Sidney, Charles Murray—Our patrons enjoyed this comedy.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Educational

GIRL FROM PARADISE: Musical Comedies—Good peppy comedy with music.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOOD LUCK, BEST WISHES: Pickens Sisters, Sally Ward—Not as good as I expected and the songs weren't very good. However, we have played a lot of worse ones. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MELODY: Song hit stories—A very good musical act of its kind. Went over big here.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

ONE-RUN ELMER: Buster Keaton—If you really want a comedy try this one. Had more comments on this than on the feature I played with it. Would be excellent for Friday and Saturday or will help a weak program. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY: Musical comedies—One of the best musical comedies made.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatres, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

MGM

HEY, HEY FEVER: Happy Harmonies—Very good Bosko color cartoon which will appeal to youngsters and grownups alike.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LIVE GHOSTS: Laurel and Hardy—About the same as usual for the Laurel and Hardys. Where they like them, it's great and where they don't it's punk. Opinion seems to be divided here. Running time, 20 minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LIVE GHOSTS: Laurel and Hardy—The answer to an exhibitor's prayer for good comedies. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

NOSED OUT: Irvin S. Cobb—Just fair. I guess Irvin Cobb better go back to his writing and leave the movies alone and we will all be happier. Running time, 20 minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas. Wash. Small town patronage.

STAR NIGHT AT THE COCOANUT GROVE: Musical Revues—Very good musical revue. About the best one yet from Metro. Running time, 19 minutes. —B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

STAR NIGHT AT THE COCOANUT GROVE: Musical revues—The fact that the audience actually applauded this musical revue in color and I held it over for an extended run speaks for its quality. Book it and boost it. Running time, two reels—Roy

C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

STAR NIGHT AT THE COCOANUT GROVE: Musical Revues—Very good two-reeler with well done color by Technicolor. Singing and dancing with Bing Crosby, the highlight when he sings "With Every Breath I Take." Ted Fio Rito's orchestra helps a lot. Altogether, above average.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

ZION, CANYON OF COLOR: Fitzpatrick Travel Talks—Beautiful, with a couple of appropriate songs that add greatly to its effectiveness. Running time, eight minutes.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Paramount

BABY BE GOOD: Betty Boop Cartoons—This cartoon started out swell. Evidently the cartoonist that drew this was in a hurry to go on a fishing trip as the last half is a repetition of the first half in reverse motion. Running time, seven minutes.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

DANCE CONTEST: Popeye, the Sailor—One of Popeye's best.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

POOR CINDERELLA: Color Classic—Very good and the color is brighter than technicolor, but not quite as natural.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado—A really beautiful subject in color and the Spanish costumes and settings show up beautifully. Not much comedy and just a little high-class to be generally appreciated. Running time, 21 minutes.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: This is extra fine in color and it pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

RKO COMEDIES: Have not received a good comedy yet. Mostly very silly.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

United Artists

CHINA SHOP, THE: Silly Symphony—These color cartoons are nice, but are no better than some others we play and which cost us about half as much. The cartoons seem to go more for art than comedy and my patrons like them funny. Running time, eight minutes.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

Universal

AT THE MIKE: Universal Comedies—Very good. Our patrons like these acts better than the usual run of slapstick comedies.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

WORLD'S FAIR AND WARMER: Arthur Lake—This comedy received good audience response. It has plenty of action.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Vitaphone

BUSINESS IS A PLEASURE: Broadway Brevities—This is a fine musical subject in color.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

COUNTRY BOY, THE: Merrie Melodies—All color, Merry Melody of Peter Rabbitt. Swell—elegant. Running time, eight minutes.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

DARLING ENEMY: Broadway Brevities—A very good musical comedy. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

GOOD MORNING, EVE: Leon Erroll—Just fair. These musical shorts are not as good as they used to be, or my patrons are getting tired of them. I believe it is mostly a case of the former. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

I HAVEN'T GOT A HAT: Merrie Melodies—A fair cartoon in color.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE: Vitaphone Pepper Pot—These Little Jack Little one-reelers are as good as any we use. We have played two of them and both were excellent entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

MY MUMMY'S ARMS: Harry Gribbon—A very entertaining two-reel comedy. Lots of laughs.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

FIVE MORE JOIN RANKS

To the ranks of the reporters to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department have come five more contributors, from the northeast, the northwest and the south. They are:

SAM E. KIMBALL, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Me.

F. BERNARD MONEY, JR., Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C.

J. B. PATTERSON, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C.

ROY C. IRVINE, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash.

E. J. PENNELL, Berrien Theatre, Berrien Springs, Mich.

OH SAILOR, BEHAVE: El Brendel—Just fair. Not many laughs.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

OUT OF ORDER: Ben Blue—Just fair.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

PAREE, PAREE: Dorothy Stone, Bob Hope—Just average or a little below.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

PEACH OF A PAIR: Big V Comedies—Awful is the word. Running time, 20 minutes.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

PHIL SPITALNY AND HIS MUSICAL QUEENS: Melody Masters—A very good band act that seemed to please all.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

RADIO SCOUT: Big V Comedies—Reports swell. Running time, 20 minutes.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

SMOKED HAMS: Big V Comedies—The poorest comedy that Vitaphone has ever made. Nuf sed.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatre, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

SOFT DRINKS AND SWEET MUSIC: Broadway Brevities—A very good musical comedy. A little better than the average.—J. R. Patterson, Majestic Theatres, Fort Mill, S. C. Small town patronage.

STORY CONFERENCE—Lillian Roth—It's a shame to waste good talent on such shoddy story material as this. Poor.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

VACATION DAZE: Big V Comedies—A good comedy. Will please your Friday and Saturday audience. Running time, 20 minutes.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

WHAT, NO MEN?: El Brendel, Phil Regan—El Brendel does not have much to do, but this one is far above average and the color scenes are very nice. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

WHAT, NO MEN?: Broadway Brevities—All color musical featuring El Brendel. Very good. Spicy. Running time, 20 minutes.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Serials

First Division

YOUNG EAGLES: Boy Scouts—Very much pleased with opening chapter of this serial and if rest of serial is half as good, will be more than satisfied.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

Mascot

LAW OF THE WILD: Rex, Rin Tin Tin, Jr., Ben Turpin, Bob Custer—If you want serials get this one. I am on Chapter No. 5. It's 100 per cent ahead of "The Red Rider" and that's saying a lot.—Sam A. Kimball, Cornish Theatres, Inc., Limerick, Maine. General patronage.

Universal

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Noah Beery, Jr.—Have almost completed this serial, and having run serials almost without a break for nearly 10 years, feel that I know a little about them. This is one of the very best and has built up as we started the first chapter with a blizzard. The main reason why this is better than most serials is because it has a lot of comedy in each chapter.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Noah Berry, Jr.—Builds up in nice shape and has action enough for the most rapid serial fan. If you run serials, you'll make no mistake booking "Tailspin."—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Unusual Dispute Between Erpi and Owner in Courts

The United States circuit court of appeals at San Francisco will soon pass upon a petition of Electrical Research Products, Inc., for an appeal in a somewhat unusual contractual dispute, involving the awarding of damages to an exhibitor whose reproducing equipment had been replevened for allegedly violating his license. It was the first decision of its kind, and there will not be another like it for there exists no other similar license in any of Erpi's agreements with exhibitors for the rental of its equipment.

In the Summer of 1928, when exhibitors were asking for reproducing equipment, W. D. Gross, exhibitor in Alaska, requested Erpi to install reproducers in his Coliseum theatres at Juneau and Ketchikan. At that time the demand for equipments in the United States was so great that Erpi did not desire to extend its operations to Alaska. In the following January, upon Mr. Gross agreeing that the amount to be charged for service would be determined at a later date, Erpi accepted contracts from him. It was agreed that the amount to be charged for service would be above the scale of charges established in the United States but would be for a reasonable amount since the two theatres were 1,000 miles from the nearest servicing base at Seattle.

Later, it was concluded that the company would service Mr. Gross's properties at the same rate charged in the States. Thereafter, Mr. Gross, while on a film-buying expedition to Seattle, is alleged to have signed a separate memorandum agreeing to pay a specific charge, and on this basis made payment for servicing his theatres during the previous months when charges had been allowed to accumulate because of the non-existence of a payment scale.

The contract was subsequently violated, it was alleged by Erpi, when Mr. Gross neglected to make regular servicing payments. Erpi then replevened the machines.

The case of Electrical Research Products, Inc., versus W. D. Gross, reached Judge George F. Alexander's United States District Court at Juneau some few weeks ago, and embraced counter claims made by Mr. Gross totaling $300,000. The court, however, is said to have refused permission to Erpi to introduce certain evidence, including the letters in which Mr. Gross agreed to fix the amount of the service charge after the main contract was executed, and a jury found for Mr. Gross, awarding in all, damages of $58,436.

E. J. Moriarty, general attorney for Erpi in New York, associated with R. E. Robertson and Henry Roden, represented Erpi, while H. L. Faulkner and J. A. Hellenthal represented Mr. Gross.

"We are confident of a reversal on appeal," said a statement from Erpi headquarters.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

SHOWMEN GO STUDENT

What may be accepted as the reaction of hundreds in attendance at the first annual Show of Showmanship was the opinion of a visiting Round Tabler who exclaimed:

"Boy, it's an education!"

Extravagant praise possibly but perhaps not overly so to judge from the general attitude of those present. Pad and pencil seemed to be the order of the day as absorbed theatremen closely studied the scores of campaign books and photos which filled the exposition halls.

It cannot be denied that this response is gratifying. Although it was not the purpose of the sponsors to strive unduly for a classroom atmosphere, so to speak, the eagerness with which attending showmen sought to add to their store of theatre learning is comparable to the sincerity of any group of students intent on getting the most out of classes.

That the Show rated so high in educative value is perhaps another indication of the effectiveness of the Round Table pages from which many of these "lessons" were taken.

NEWS MAKERS MAKE GROSSES

Editors do not always confine their theatre stories and comments to the screen and the stage. Oftimes the newspapers realize the reader importance of the manager outside of his theatre activities.

For instance, Pete Egan, whose appointment to the presidency of a Calgary hockey league brought him a half-column story and picture on the sport page. Dominion sports writers find frequent cause to refer to the athletic background of this Canadian Round Tabler.

Louie Charninsky is also a source of inspiration to the Dallas news hawks who realize the reader interest in this colorful showman and devote generous space to Louie's vagaries.

Joe Dougherty was recently singled out to receive the distinguished service citation awarded annually by the Upper Darby (Pa.) post of the American Legion to that locale's outstanding citizen. The Philadelphia papers went to town in fulsome praise of the selection.

The advantages of personal publicity are gauged incorrectly by many theatremen seeing in it a form of self-aggrandizement injurious to themselves and their theatres. Too few realize that the manager often in the news more times than not is so because of his value to the community—an asset of distinct worth at the box office.

A manager who makes news also makes grosses.

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM

View with alarm does a visiting brother the number of managerial shifts made recently by nearby circuits. This must be discouraged, states he, lest conditions revert to the old days when managers were forced to make such jumps as from Dallas to Duluth, or longer, on five minutes' notice.

Be that as it may, we see no immediate cause for undue trepidation. Operation that depended for success upon wholesale and expensive shifting of theatremen from hell to breakfast and back again is happily gone from the scene. Today the merry-go-round moves at a more sedate and less screwy speed.

Moreover, any shift by any circuit is not to be regarded exactly with holy horror. For after all, gentle reader, there have been instances of mutual benefit come about by transferring managers for one reason or another to different situations.

Such shifts are to be regarded as incidental to the business of the theatre. In many instances they are the only milestones by which the manager may mark his progress

BALANCING THE SCALE

The smart manager isn't the bird who goes to town only on his sock shows. For our dough, we'd rather have the theatreman who knows far enough ahead how much he can expect of any picture and seeks to strengthen the draw by promoting inexpensive added local attractions to bolster the pull of his weak sisters.

It's being done right along with amateur nights, fashion shows, local talent revues and a flock of other slants that real managers employ to give full entertainment value when the screen show falters.

All pictures cannot be naturals at the box office. Patrons are educated to anticipate less than perfection week in and week out, but they have every right to expect something extra from time to time to balance the (admission) scale.

The manager who endeavors to the best of his abilities to fulfill these expectations is not only keeping the faith but also stands a better chance of keeping his job.

Schools Aid Bovim in Selling "Copperfield"

Through cooperation of superintendent of schools, Russ Bovim, Loew's Ohio, Columbus, Ohio succeeded in having "Copperfield" study guides distributed to all teachers, roto heralds and publicity stories posted on bulletin boards, and special invitations sent to selected group for opening. Several schools gave children afternoon off to see picture and came to the theatre in bannered busses.

Art gallery, reported oldest in America came through for a first-time window display (see photo) with various scene stills. For a street bally, Russ promoted bannered old-timey tally-ho which covered business sections. Five-foot star cutouts were used in various windows and miniature 24-sheets were scattered in stores around town.

Schools Cooperate with Edwin on "Little Minister"

Russell Edwin, Royal Theatre, Bloomfield, N. J., contacted superintendent of schools, who permitted questionnaire for children on "Little Minister" to be mailed to English teachers—25 tickets offered for best answers. In lower grades, essay contest was arranged with pupils writing synopsis of picture. Special one sheets were posted in all schools with theatre and playdate imprint.

Guest tickets were sent to all clergymen and Mayor approached for telegram endorsement which was enlarged in herald form and distributed. Three weeks before children's page of daily was tied up for coloring contest and tickets were sent to persons finding names on classified page.

Advance Four Week Drive Sells Star

What theatremen consider an out of the ordinary campaign to introduce a new star was the series of newspaper displays put together by Manager Stanley N. Chambers, Fox Uptown, Kansas City, Mo., and L. J. McCarthy, Fox Midwest division chief on "Evergreen" to promote Jessie Matthews.

Drive was started four weeks ahead, copy appearing almost daily asking a series of questions on "who is the new star?" etc. Star's identity was not revealed to opening day and then divulged in a smash three-column shot headed by "The Answer to the series of 'who' questions." This was followed with a series of smaller two-column displays further selling the voice, looks and ability of Matthews with smart copy calling her "the female Fred Astaire."

Radio was also employed to spread the word with the five local stations, the net results being sufficient comment and business to hold the attraction over for a second week.

The campaign is by all means worthwhile and Chambers has made up a series of these mats for use of other theatres in the circuit. He generously offers to furnish this material to managers on request, at cost, and readers who are acquainted with Chambers' background will immediately avail themselves of this opportunity.

McCormick Returns to Premier "Laddie"

The world premiere of RKO's "Laddie" at the Circle, Indianapolis, was further distinguished by the presence of the theatre's first managing director, S. Barret McCormick, Radio ad chief, who accepted an invitation to act as guest managing director for the occasion. It was 15 years since Barret left the old homestead and interest in the date was heightened by his invitations to old staff members to return to their old jobs for the night. Many responded and the accompanying photo shows some of "ye auld-lang-syning. Barret is in the center with hat in right hand.

McCormick personally supervised the advance that included the personal appearance of Virginia Weidler, juvenile star of the picture, who arrived on her birthday and was paraded to her hotel escorted by bands and banners. Also attending were the two surviving sisters of the author, Gene Stratton-Porter, the sisters being introduced from the stage by Barret McCormick, who also did the MC for the baby star and other invited prominents.

The premiere was according to specifications, with bombs set off from theatre roof, fireworks, sun-arc lighted lobby, radio hookup, introductions of celebrities, congested streets, and etc. Ed Holland, of McCormick's exploitation staff, was on hand and saw to if that the folks knew what all the shootin' was about.

Deering Holds Tea Party for "Clive"

Before Francis Deering left Loew's State, Memphis, Tenn., for a similar post in Houston, he put on a daily mezzanine tea party during his "Clive of India" run, merchant supplying beverage and plugging party in ads, in addition to posting streamers in all grocery windows using their product.

Calendar blotters with playdates marked in red and cut out of Coleman were distributed in offices and schools. Through tieup with Western Union red hearts were given out by messengers, copy reading, "You'll appreciate our service more if you see 'Clive,' in which a love letter posted in India was delivered in England one year later." For street ballys elephant in zoo was bannered with picture copy and ushers each carrying six-foot letters of title paraded business districts.

THEATRE FRIDAY

Indianapolis Welcomes Barret McCormick

Thank You, Friends

The "Show of Showmanship" is over, but the glow remains—a glow of satisfaction and gratification for the manner in which the industry took the show to its collective bosom. Showmen, advertising executives and others from near and far attended, many more than once. They were unanimous in proclaiming this first exposition an unqualified success in every respect. Round Table campaigns and photos, individual exhibits from theatres and producing companies all contributed their share in making this success possible.

We would be remiss in our obligations if those who toiled long and late to put over the exposition were not hereby credited. Our thanks, therefore, to Felix F. Feist, president, and the Motion Picture Club for generous aid. A bow also to Tom Wiley and Arnold Van Leer, for their wholehearted and invaluable assistance.

To the producer and theatre advertising heads and their capable organizations, another thank-you for the very excellent exhibits which commanded instant admiration. To the exhibitors who arranged for the attendance of their staffs, to the trade press, to the managers whose showmanly campaigns made up the major part of the exhibition, we bow our appreciation, as we do also to those who helped put the show together. And last, but not least, the executives and talented artists of the American Display Company for their inspiring cooperation and outstanding exhibits.

Detailed story and photos of the exposition, presentation of the Quigley February plaques to Managers R. E. Knight and Ed Douglas by Grover Whalen at the Motion Picture Club Forum, and other highlights will be found in the news section of this issue. —A-MIKE

Contests Publicize Entrance Reopening

Since editorializing upon Ben Cohen's shifty footwork in tieing up with the nearby Yale University on the reopening of a closed entrance to the College Theatre, New Haven, this manager has sent along some other angles of the campaign.

Two cash contests were featured, the first, a name for the promenade leading to the new entrance, and second, to discover the local with the longest record of attendance. It seems that before being rejuvenated as a picture house, the College, under another name was the legit stand, and thus the reason for the "oldest" slant. Two different dailies cooperated on the contests, which with the additional publicity, rolled up a gross of many good stories.

Other newspaper stuff included full page coop of congrat ads, full-page feature story on history of theatre in Sunday feature section, editorials in college papers and otherwise, and three-column shot of reopening ceremonies. Ben states over 2000 entries were received on the new name contest.

Grimes Engages Stunt Flyer for "Devil Dogs"

On opening day of his "Devil Dogs" campaign, Ken Grimes, Warner Theatre, Morgantown, W. Va., had airplane tow 75-foot banner (see photo) covering city and surrounding towns. After banner was released, plane returned to theatre, where stunt flying was put on. Small parachutes with passes attached were dropped over city.

Ken secured cooperation of local university fraternity on initiation ceremonies, students carrying "Devil Dogs" and distributing handbills. Passes were given to students of high school art classes, who turned in best drawings of airplane scenes and to mechanical drawing classes for best blue prints on plane construction. For part of his advance lobby display, model airplanes constructed by youngsters were shown on lobby floor with concealed electric fan providing animation.

Schools Cooperate With Hart on "David Copperfield"

Some sweet publicity was secured by City Manager Ed Hart, Reade's Plainfield Theatres, Plainfield, N. J., on "David Copperfield" highlighted by an essay contest sponsored by teachers, for guest tickets and prizes promoted from merchants. Ed also held Saturday morning preview for the teachers.

Roving cameraman in bannered car (see photo) took pictures of passersby for screen showing and circled faces were given tickets. Two characters, one dressed as Micawber and the other as Davey toured different parts of city. Box office was covered with oversized Copperfield book with cut in center through which tickets were sold. Parade of cars was put on with announcer in sound truck, and book store devoted window and counters to display of the book and counter cards.

Ed's auto parade was unusual, many old-time bannered models and new cars being shown, the tieup indicating the changes in style since the days when the book was new. Same idea was carried out in a furniture window display showing the different periods in vogue since the time of "David."

Effective also was Hart's handling of school children who were admitted at a special price. Youngsters had to fill out printed request blanks and these all included the name of picture and theatre. Countersignature of teachers and principals on each was required, thus obtaining for the date a lot of extra publicity in the schools in addition to support of local educators.

Neides Throws Dough On Street Bally

On "Whole World's Talking," Hal Neides, Orpheum Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., promoted a new Dodge truck which toured town (see photo) with girl tossing imprinted envelopes in which new pennies were inserted. Stunt drew mention in newspapers, was flashed over radio, and Hal promoted police escort for the dough-throwin' lady.

Postal Telegraph distributed inserts in telegrams and used streamers in branch windows. For lobby display, Hal used "I am the star," "I am the director," cutouts suggested in press book.

Governor Starts "Davey" Screening for Evens

The highlight of Harold Evens' "David Copperfield" campaign at Loew's State, St. Louis, was a special screening held in the legislature hall for members of the entire governing body of the Missouri Senate and their wives (see photo), with Governor starting the projection machines. Following screening, Governors Park and Harris and other prominent members of the body made brief talk over special hook-up with radio station.

Lobby display consisted of 20-foot shadow box with cutout figures of cast spotted in front. Schools heads were contacted, sent teachers' manuals and invited to special screening. Conservative newspaper came through with reported first editorial mention for any picture and roto sections used cuts of players.

THEATREMEN SPEAK A PIECE

George Kraska and L. V. Bergtold take the rostrum this week with letters that have to do with the articles by Herman Weinberg and Fred Hinds recently published in these pages. George agrees heartily with Herman, but "L. V." is not so unanimous in concurring with Fred.

NATIONAL "ART" FILM SOCIETY SUGGESTED

I fully endorse Herman Weinberg's analysis of the foreign film houses in this country. He has covered the field so thoroughly that anything I might say would be a repetition. I truly agree with him about the impracticability of showing a foreign language film one night a week in a regular run house—that would be suicide. However, my idea is to organize a national film society with clubs in each of the principal cities (that do not have a foreign film house) headed by local society representatives to secure enough subscribers for a three-month period to insure financial success. Only upon such a basis could the venture be profitable financially as well as morally.

Experience Similar to Weinberg's

My experience with the "intellectuals" has been as fruitful(?) as Herman's. The film programs must be outstanding or they will not respond. No truer estimation of their attitude toward our theatres could be given than Herman's when he described that, "They want their own house with a quiet distinctive atmosphere, etc., etc."

I just wish to strengthen this statement by quoting a patron of mine during the capacity run of "Man of Aran." Said this patron to me, "You are becoming like all the other successful theatres, no more seats, crowded houses all the time. No, it's not the same quiet place at all, where one could come in and always find a seat wherever he wanted and sit down to a nice quiet program."

Are comments required? That is their psychology. "The pampered darlings," as Herman calls them.

Favors Extended Runs

My house has also become an extended run theatre this season. Besides breaking every house record since we have been operating (4 years) we have established the long run for Boston, first with 5 weeks of "Power" and then 9 weeks of "Aran."

You can readily summarize the handicaps and the specialization required to arrange unusual programs and the handling of these "exclusive" movie fans.

I have tied up in Boston with the Adult Education Council of Greater Boston in an effort to strengthen our position financially, even offering a special discount to members of the council. But what has that done for us? Reduced our possible income from these members and not being able to show any substantial increase in attendance week in and week out. When we have a first rate ace film they respond with all the others; when it is a little short of a masterpiece they are absent. So what?—George Kraska, Art Cinema Guild, Boston, Mass.

HINDS "PARTLY RIGHT AND CERTAINLY WRONG"

Dear Mike:

You have probably already been besieged with protests on the article written by Mr. Fred Hinds—"There Aren't Any Small Towns." Like almost anyone that starts an argument—he is partly right and certainly wrong on a few of his conclusions.

Classing towns under 10,000 as small towns is hardly fair. I think one should drop down to about 2,500 for that classification. Nearly one-half of all the people in this country transact their business in these small towns (under 2,500).

For nearly 10 years I have been serving, what one can call a typical agricultural community, with their film entertainment. Briefly, my conclusion on "hits" is this:

There are three classes of B.O. shows: First, those that have general appeal for all classes (example, "David Harum"), and these of course are the real hits. Second type is the picture that has certain class appeal but is, nevertheless, a hit in the communities that have a large population of educated citizens ("Cavalcade" might be mentioned as fitting this class). The B.O. statements published every week prove conclusively that there are "hits" that are not small town successes. Then for the third class we have the much discussed (and cussed) western show.

Quoting Mr. Hinds—"Our personal B.O. discovery is that the time honored western is in a state of prodigious decline." That is perhaps true in the larger towns; let us say those from 5,000 to 10,000 and undoubtedly a fact in the city theatres.

Westerns Not Declining

I do not believe that the western picture is in a state of decline in the rural community and feel sure many exhibitors will back me up in that statement. As evidence (shall we call it exhibit "A"?), my record book shows that last August a Zane Grey picture (not an especially outstanding western either) gave me the second highest gross that we have had for nearly five years, and the greatest net for any show we ever ran. As for my authority in using the 2,500 figure in drawing the line between city and small town, I have the U. S. census department, which classifies communities of over 2,500 as cities, and towns with less than that as rural centers.

Perhaps I should add that regarding the "western" I mentioned giving me the big business, we did not give it any extra advertising nor did it play with vaudeville or with any Bank Nite of Jackpot proposition.

In conclusion I must say emphatically that a "hit is not always a hit."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

GETTING SET FOR EASTER?

Here Are Reviewed Some Proven Angles Already Found Profitable And Suggested for Use This Year

Spring in the air, Lent nearly over, with Easter in the offing, and what to do about celebrating that gladsome period? Many showmen are already set with their plans including the old reliables and some new angles. Well kept files should divulge the low-down on what to do and when, but for the good of the order, here are briefly reviewed some slants covered last year, and one or two last-minute reports.

Of Course, the Style Show

One of the first clothes campaigns for the season is that of Frank Boucher, at the Maryland, down in Hagerstown, Md. Frank has his leading women's stores all set to go at this time of the year, and put over his usually effective Spring style show, with cooperation from local school which supplied dance talent.

Entertainment and new models were mixed judiciously so that those who were not overly interested in the fashions were not neglected. Frank puts this on seasonly and finds it one of the most effective gags to usher in the gentle weather.

Then, by All Means, the Egg Hunt

Books have been written about the modus operandi of the egg hunt without which the Easter season is not official in many spots. School is out and the kids are rarin' to go.

Most showmen put this on with their Saturday kid clubs, Kiwanis, Rotary, or other civic organization, and local papers. Permission to stage the hunt at city park is usually not hard to obtain with police escort to keep order. Managers have also been able to sell the mayor or other officials on attending the doings, all of which is duly publicized.

Candy stores can be promoted to supply eggs and prizes of confections. Other merchants can also be induced to come along for other prizes of varying worth and this in the past has led to single and double coop pages with space for theatre attractions and all details of hunt.

To put it on right, children should assemble at theatre to parade to the hunt. Motorcycle police squads, band, banners and plenty of newspaper publicity to gather the crowds are other helpful accessories. Theatremen find that it makes things easier to give every youngster a candy egg and when this is announced, more interest is usually created.

Kid Easter Revue

Where style show facilities are not available, the Easter show serves well, preferably with juvenile talent. Dancing schools for the most part are the best leads, but some managers dig up outside talent by advertising, doing their own staging and producing.

With the current craze for the amateurs, the show idea might be tied in with some radio hour of this kind, winners to appear at the theatre. If local dance schools are tied in, the amateurs can appear in special spots. Usually the nut is low, as kids have their costumes and dance teacher contributes services in exchange for the break in all theatre ads and newspaper stories. Formerly managers made much of their Easter shows in cooperation with the free theatre dancing school, and where this institution still flourishes the idea still holds lots of weight.

How About the Lobby?

There'll be a lot of cutout bunnies, giant colored eggs in the lobby, but managers inclined to more real atmosphere may ponder the draw of live chicks and bunnies. While the chicks can't stand much handling and thus are to be effectively caged, attention has been drawn by a giveaway on the rabbits. When this is put on, they are displayed in cages and distributed from the stage. Whether bunnies are promoted or purchased, the stunt has been reported to click successfully and returned extra grosses.

And Then Flowers

Every manager can go to town on this slant, which might mean showings of flowers in lobby, windows at florists, flowers to women and children, and all the other reliables. Loew Theatres' New England division manager, H. M. Addison, used to put on some swell flower stuff when he was stationed in Cleveland, tying in with florists and nurserymen for permanent lobby and foyer displays as soon as Spring appeared. Full accounts of Addy's floral campaigns have been run in back issues, the last one detailed in issue of April 14, 1934.

Easter Bargain Carnival

Some time ago, Manager J. Daley, of the Croswell, Adrian, Mich., put on a bargain carnival that might be adapted to the Easter season. Daley rounded up over 60 merchants to cooperate, and local paper ran free page ad in addition to a co-op section.

Front page stories, auto parades, window displays and contests all helped to put the idea over, and this slant sounds profitable to greet the season, especially if encouraged by local organizations, Chamber of Commerce and leading citizens.

Easter Sunrise Services

Last year Tom Kane, of the Sequoia, Redwood, Cal., was called upon by the local committee in charge of the annual Easter Sunrise services to publicize the event over the nearby area, and Tom of course managed to do a competent job, which rather increased his standing with the neighbors.

Where there are facilities for this form of service and the weather allows, such cooperation might be welcomed by local committees in charge of such arrangements.

Special Garden Shows

More applicable in the warmer climes where gardens are already in bloom, this show idea may be made an exhibition or contest, as the circumstances allow. Prizes may be promoted for such flowers as crocuses, hyacinths, tulips, etc., and cooperation secured from local papers, garden clubs, nurserymen, seed stores and similar groups. Exhibits could be shown in lobby, foyer, where perhaps judging could be held.

Mark Time on 3 Antitrust Suits

Slight progress was made this week in furthering federal antitrust suits pending against distributors, and filed by exhibitors.

In St. Louis, Federal Judge Davis, acting on motion of United States District Attorney Blanton, postponed until May 6th arguments on the demurrer to the indictment of Ned Depinet, RKO distribution executive, in the case being sponsored by the Department of Justice against large distributors. Mr. Depinet's demurrer was made on the ground that the indictment does not state sufficient facts to indicate the commission of a crime by him. The case, involving St. Louis independent first-run theatres, was postponed indefinitely, probably until Fall.

Independent exchanges in Detroit, through counsel, David Newman, were filing briefs this week in the suit brought by Jacob Schreiber in federal court charging Co-operative Theatres of Michigan, Inc., and Detroit independent exchanges with conspiracy to prevent Mr. Schreiber from getting product for his Colonial theatre.

In Los Angeles, Fox West Coast Theatres and George Skouras, William Moore and Charles Irwin, as trustees, were preparing to move to dismiss H. L. Gumbiner's $1,520,000 antitrust suit on technical grounds. Date of a hearing had not been determined.

Fox West Coast, in answering Mr. Gumbiner's charges of conspiracy by the circuit and large distributors in order to eliminate the Gumbiner theatres, claimed this week that the complaint failed to state sufficient cause. Also, Fox claimed the action was not properly brought and contained a misjoinder of defendant parties.

Majestic Moves To Liberty Headquarters

The home office and sales staff of Majestic Pictures this week completed arrangements for moving into the offices of Liberty Pictures at 1776 Broadway, New York, where Budd Rogers, Liberty sales manager, will take over supervision of Majestic's sales.

E. H. Goldstein, recently resigned as vice-president of Majestic, is considering several positions with film companies and said this week he intends to make an announcement of a new connection shortly.

Last Open AMPA Meeting This Week

The last open meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers this season was to be held on Thursday at the New York Motion Picture Club. Among guests were to be Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of NBC and Radio-Keith-Orpheum; Al Jolson, Dorothy Mackail, Jimmy Durante, Eddie Dowling, Molly Picon, Robert Young and Jack Pearl.

RKO Signs Foreign Deals

RKO Radio has signed foreign distribution deals for its product with Cine Colombia of Medellin for the current lineup in Colombia, and with M. A. Schlessigner, acting for African Consolidated Films, Ltd., for South African distribution.

Distributors in Canada Reelect John Cooper

Colonel John A. Cooper was reelected president Wednesday at the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Distributors' Association of Canada, at Toronto, and the following were elected directors: C. Hague, Universal; A. W. Perry, Empire Films; J. P. O'Loughlin, Fox; M. A. Milligan, Paramount; Henry Nathanson, Regal Films; L. M. Devaney, RKO; H. M. Masters, United Artists, and H. O. Paynter, Vitagraph (Warners).

It was reported at the meeting that only a slight improvement in film rentals and theatre attendance is noticeable in Canada.

SMPE Spring Meeting May 20-24 in Hollywood

The society of Motion Picture Engineers this week announced its annual spring convention will be held in Hollywood at the Hotel Roosevelt, May 20-24.

A technical program of papers and demonstrations is being arranged, with special emphasis on studio technique, equipment and practices. The exhibits at the convention will feature equipment and studio devices, in addition to the usual commercial developments. Visits have been arranged to the studios of Warner, Fox and Walt Disney. W. C. Kunzmann has been named convention vice-president.

Pathe to Pay Funded Debt with Bank Loans

A. B. Poole, vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., said in Hollywood Wednesday that on May 1 bank loans heretofore agreed upon will be turned over to the company, serving to pay off the balance of the funded debt, amounting to approximately $1,900,000. The loan will retire the remaining seven per cent bonds of Pathe, saving about three per cent annually on the above sum.

Cuba Accepts "Rumba"

The Cuban Government this week consented to remove all official objections to the showing in that country of Paramount's "Rumba," on removal of a lottery sequence.

Goldwyn May Produce Abroad

Samuel Goldwyn returned from England Tuesday and indicated he may produce there, depending on the California tax situation.

Mae Murray Wins Appeal

The appellate court of New York has ruled that Mae Murray may institute a new action against Tiffany Productions, which she sued some time ago for $300,000. Justice Steuer dismissed the first action on the ground she had failed to show her pictures had made a profit, while the higher court ruled the case should not have been dismissed, because Tiffany failed to prove the films had not made a profit.

Bombay Studio Opens Soon

It is expected the new plant of Bombay Talkies, Ltd., film company in Bombay, India, will be completed this month. The joint management of Elphinstone Pictures and Universal Theatres has floated a large issue, planning to build a studio at Lucknow.

Studio Site Survey Still On: Schenck

The motion picture industry, "fighting for self-preservation," is going ahead with its plans to move from California, regardless of the outcome of the state's tax program, as a protective measure against the possibility of detrimental legislation in the future, Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, said last week upon his arrival in Los Angeles from New York. Mr. Schenck was accompanied by Al Lichtman, United Artists' general sales manager; William Phillips and A. C. Blumenthal.

The industry, Mr. Schenck said, will locate wherever it will be assured that at no time will its existence be threatened by tax legislation. The producer said he had received invitations, as previously reported, from Florida, New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, North Carolina and Delaware with assurances that no tax burdens would be placed on studios. He proposed an amendment to California's constitution guaranteeing studios an equitable taxation system.

"If the high tax program goes through," he said, "Hollywood and neighboring communities would lose thousands of film workers and a payroll of some $100,000,000 yearly to some other state."

Declaring that the industry always has contributed more than a normal share of expenses of government, Will H. Hays, in a statement issued on his arrival in Hollywood Monday from New York, expressed the hope that "wise counsel" will prevail in the California legislature.

Replying to Mr. Schenck's threat of moving regardless of the tax program's outcome, Assemblyman J. J. Boyle of Los Angeles said:

"What a bluff!"

Frederick Pelton, engineer, who has been investigating Florida's suitability as a studio locality on behalf of the industry at large, left Jacksonville Friday night for Hollywood to report his findings.

Assemblyman Frank D. Laughlin of Los Angeles, author of a bill providing for a tax on films, last week asked the Assembly revenue and taxation committee to fix an early date for a hearing, at which motion picture representatives may be heard.

The Central Labor Union, Wilmington, wired an invitation for the industry to locate in Delaware.

Rupert Hughes, novelist, speaking in Hollywood, said enactment of the motion picture tax legislation would cause bankruptcy to California business.

ASCAP Wins Seven Awards From Mississippi Houses

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has been awarded judgments in seven cases against theatres in Mississippi for copyright violations. They are the Drew, at Drew; Folly, Marks; Princess, Waynesboro; Palace, Newton; Palace, Crystal Springs; Hazelhurst, Hazelhurst; Royal, Rollingfork.

The ASCAP is reported ready to proceed against the Roosevelt and St. Charles hotels in New Orleans, the Roosevelt action understood to have been determined upon as a test case.

WABASH AVENUE

Herman Schoenstadt, founder of the Schoenstadt theatres, suffered a stroke while at Hot Springs over the weekend. His sons, Arthur and Henry, rushed to him. Schoenstadt is 81 years old.

Travelers: James Coston is back from the west coast. Jack Osserman of RKO is vacationing at Biloxi, Miss. So is Harry Lorch of Security.

Exhibitors and exchanges alike were speculating as to the next move of E. E. Alger, operator of ten downstate theatres, whose film service was ordered stopped as of April 5 for failure to comply with decisions of the local code board. It was reported Alger would seek a court injunction.

Sam Clark of Warner is spending some time in town in connection with exploitation on "Three on a Horse."

Charles House and Ed Johnson have taken over the Bijou and Rivoli theatres at Monmouth, Ill., from M. Hoffman.

Henry Fields has completed remodeling of the Roxy at Rock Falls.

Eddie Brichetto is now handling "Tango," making his headquarters at 831 S. Wabash.

Refrigerating equipment is being installed in five Essaness houses, bringing the total theatres so equipped up to fourteen.

Several sites for Loew houses were expected to be announced this week as word leaked out that a deal had been closed for the first theatre in Oak Park. Robert Lynch and George Schwartz are making headquarters at the Metro office, from where deals for various properties are being negotiated.

H. Fowler was in town with a print of his new picture, "The Tia Juana Kid."

Henry Markside, manager of the Crawford theatre, is the proud father of a new baby boy.

Screeno is being used two nights each week at two Essaness houses—the Vic and Sheridan.

Al Lichtman of United Artists was in town last week for conferences with Sam Horwitz, local manager, and Jack Goldhar, district manager.

W. F. Brasch & Company, Chicago real estate brokers, have negotiated a ten-year lease for the Broadway Capital theatre, Detroit. The lessee is M. W. Reinke and the lessor the Capital Building Company. Mr. Reinke also operates the Tower and Downtown theatres in Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. Reinke will open the Broadway Capital April 20th, with a combination of stage shows and first-run pictures.

HOLQUIST

Shubert Takes Bowl

J. J. Shubert has taken over the Hollywood Bowl for the month of June. He will stage "Blossom Time," "Lady in Ermine," and "Maytime," using New York and Hollywood players.

To Handle Hughes Reissues

Selected Pictures Company of Cleveland will distribute a series of six Howard Hughes features in Ohio for Atlantic Film Company. All are reissues.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

H-W Streamline Seating

IS A SURE-FIRE Hit WITH PATRONS

The new Heywood streamline theatre chairs pay off at the box office. This swanky modern seating is a sure-fire hit with patrons because it's extremely comfortable, trimly tailored, and has an air of class that's unmistakable. Heywood streamline chairs will put new life, new decorative sparkle into the old "house" that needs reseating. Heywood streamline chairs will lift a new theatre right up and away from ordinary and commonplace installations.

The OC 968 with streamline edges in a new high style color . . . a soft yellow enamel. Upholstery on the back is a modern diagonal-stripe, in deep-brown and yellow. Seat is in special Dupont fabric.

These new chairs have streamline metal back edges (either chromium plated or enameled) which eliminate the old bugaboos of chipped tops, upholstery cutting through, etc. They will stand up under abuse . . . wear gracefully through the years without expensive maintenance costs.

The streamline backs also help to quicken traffic all over the house. The gleaming chromium plated or enameled edges furnish a ready eye guide to patrons in finding their seats and in moving into rows. No more fumbling around in the dark and no more delays in aisles.

- If you haven't yet had an opportunity to see these remarkable, new, modern seats, ask your nearest H-W sales office to tell you about the many advantages of

Modernize with FORMICA

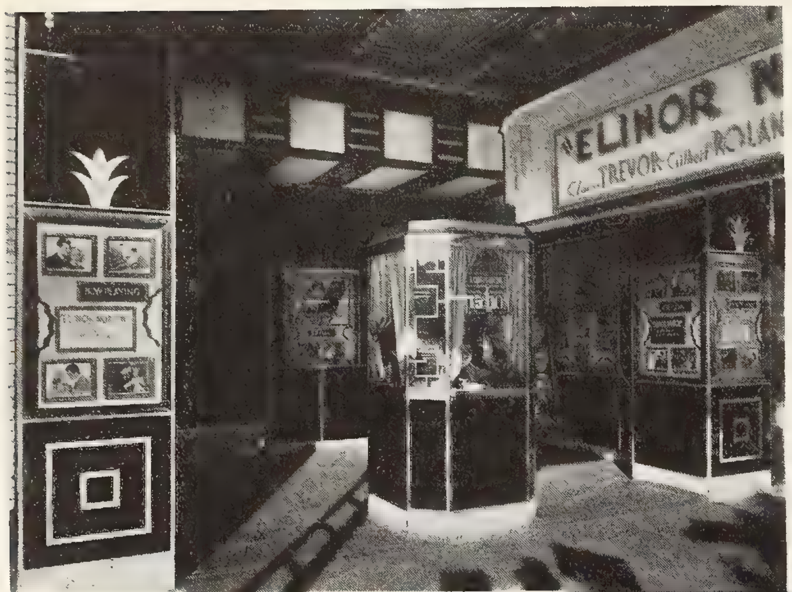
IT'S HANDSOME AND INEXPENSIVE

FORMICA with inlays is a most attractive and beautiful material for covering theater fronts and lobbies. It is very moderate in cost and simply and easily installed. The work can be done quickly with a minimum of disturbance to business.

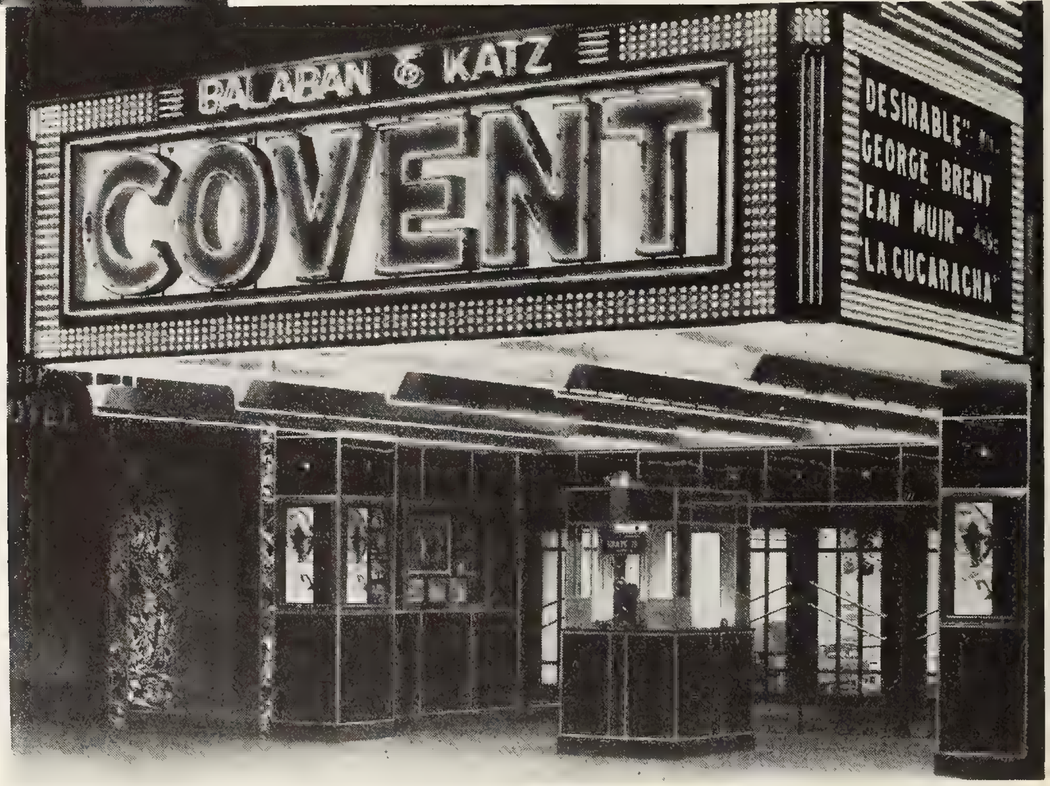
Formica is available in more than 40 colors, and inlays in metal and in one color of Formica over another can be provided. Formica is not stained by liquids or injured by washing solutions. It is an ideal surfacing material for doors.

No wonder hundreds of recent modernizing jobs on theaters have been done with this material.

Get the facts before you plan changes.



Alba Theater, Chicago; Balaban & Katz, owners; Rissman & Hirschfield, architects. Formica black paneling with bright metal trim on front and lobby walls.



Covent Theater, Chicago; Pereira, Senseny & Burdick, architects. Formica with bright metal inlays, and plain black panels with bright metal trim.

Better Theatres

GENUINE OR SUBSTITUTE?

Modern architecture has been developing not only through the originality of its designers, but through the opportunities offered in new materials. Indeed, modern architecture is partly characterized by the creativeness of the materials manufacturers themselves, who have been giving the architect a vast new set of building blocks made of glass, chemicals, metals, vegetable fibres and many other things strange to purposes long determined by the limitations of stone and iron.

The question has been asked: To what extent are these new materials merely cheaper or more available substitutes for the older ones? Perhaps our motives were originally those of substitution—seeking architectural materials that were more pliable, more plentiful, and cheaper—but the effort has realized the genuine, since the genuineness of anything lies in its efficacy in the use to which it is put.

INEXPENSIVE HELP FROM YOUR STAGE

It was once the custom to include a stage in all but the smallest of motion picture theatres. Today the screen provides the show and the "draw." Many a theatre manager, however, has found the stage interlude at least occasionally helpful in creating added interest and "relief." O. T. Taylor, who is writing a series on the mechanics of such casual stage productions in Better Theatres and who creates them for D & R Theatres in Aberdeen, Wash., has found such interludes effective as exploitation. His note accompanying his article in this issue is presented with apologies to Mr. A-Mike Vogel:

"I am doing the Style Revue idea (subject of a coming article) in one of our own theatres in about two weeks. Didn't have to go after it—plenty tie-ups. Began a Screen Talent Quest this week for children under 12 years of age, running for five weeks of eliminations with free screen tests in sound for four winners. We had about fifty entrants before the contests started, with interest running high, and the newspapers going strong on the idea."

WAYS OF THE TAXER EVER INSCRUTABLE

Notifications recently sent out by the department of internal revenue indicate that the federal government still has in mind the collection of the 5% excise tax on sound equipment. This tax, levied several years ago, was to have been collected from the manufacturer. It has yielded, chiefly if not entirely, mere protests.

In its great need for money from every available source, the government chooses to associate sound equipment with radios and phonographs, which, for the purposes at hand, are assumed to be luxuries. Now projector mechanisms are not eligible to such an elegant classification. It is only when the motion picture can be heard as well as seen that it becomes a luxury. Inasmuch as the motion picture today is as fundamentally vocal as pictorial, this industry has the distinction of dispensing luxuries to the great majority of this privileged land at Woolworth or Kresge prices. Which makes the Opera just what?

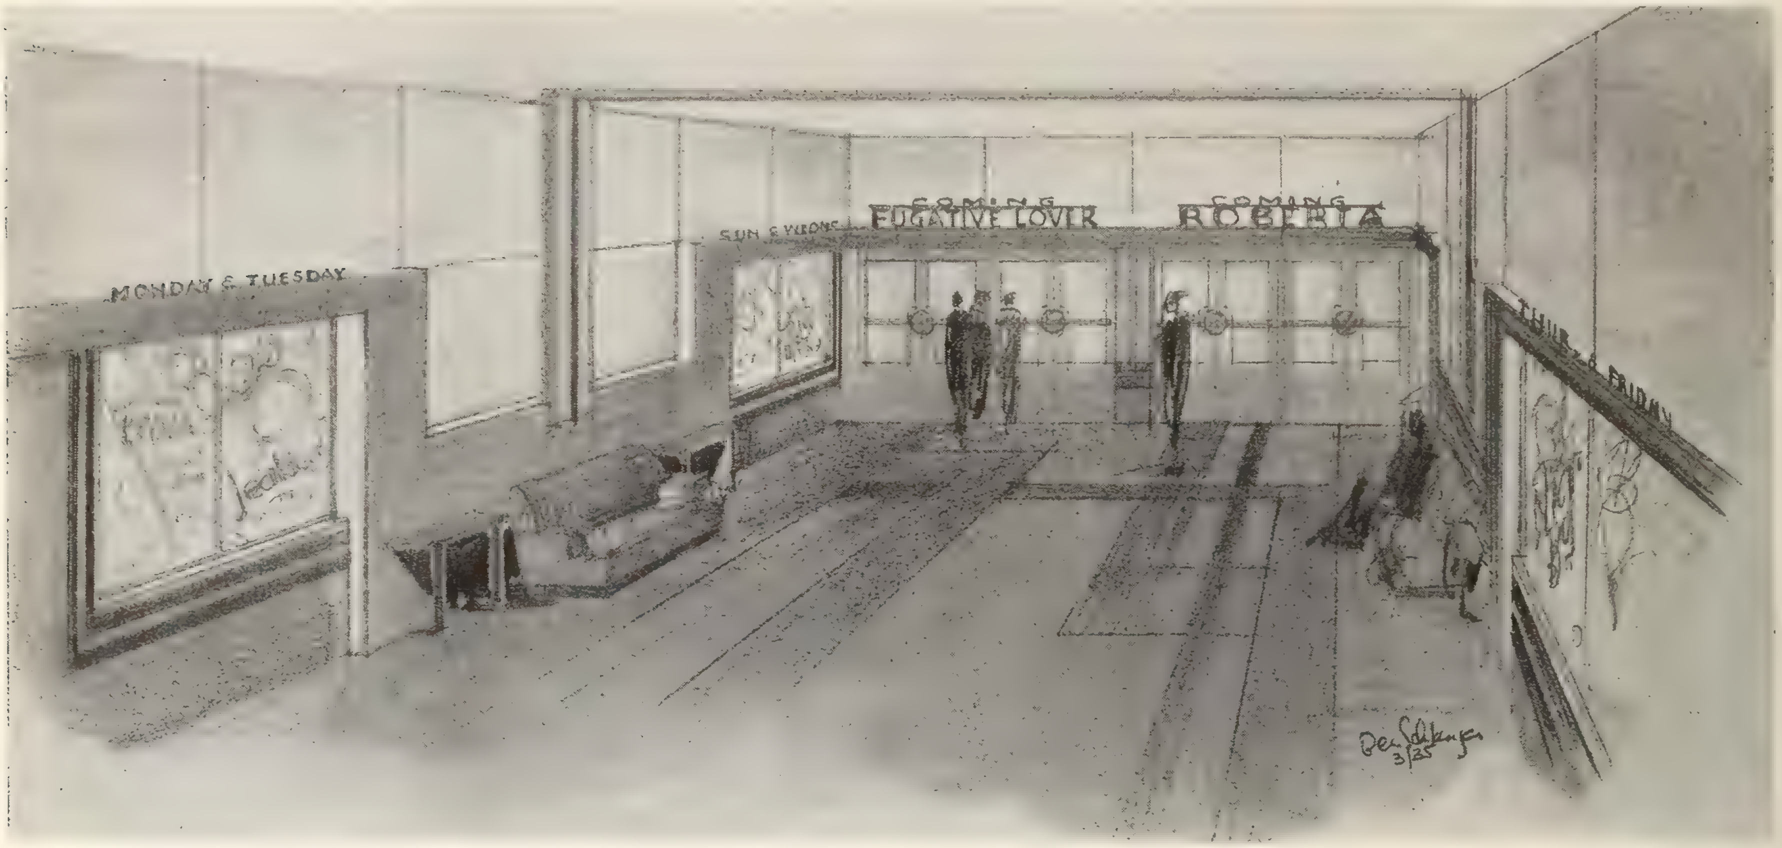
NEW THEATRES FROM OLD: THE LOBBY

THE SECOND OF A SERIES ON REMODELING, CONSIDERING IN SUCCESSIVE ISSUES: FRONTS, LOBBIES AND FOYERS, THE AUDITORIUM, AND LOUNGES



A lobby design by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, is sketched above. Intimacy is the effect of carpet and furniture. Displays appear at each end of the side walls. A projecting wall surface above, and adjoining one side of the displays adds a decorative note and conceals light sources. Tube lighting in a curved channel follows wall and crosses ceiling. Upper wall surfaces can be finished in plaster, colored glass, tightly joined mirrors, or Formica.

I.—METHODS and MATERIALS

By EUGENE CLUTE

THE MAIN lobby (or main foyer, as the case may be) of your theatre should be something more than a passageway from the vestibule, or ticket lobby, to the auditorium. This part of your theatre has a job to do besides serving as a means of entrance and egress; it should welcome your guests, the patrons. It should be in spirit extensions of the auditorium to greet them—invitingly and friendly.

If your theatre has a lobby cold and cheerless in appearance, with old-fashioned or tawdry decorations and a clutter of display easles along the sides, you are making an unfavorable first impression on those who have been drawn to your theatre. The lobby can be modernized for about as little or as much as you may care to spend.

There is no good reason why the patrons of a theatre should have to traverse a space that they regard as just so much distance between the ticket office and the place where they can see the picture. The theatre can begin right at the front doors. All that is necessary is to give the lobby an intimate atmosphere, to let it share in the air of comfort and elegance or smartness that is the aim in auditorium decoration.

Now that the modern style of design is in fashion, attractiveness is more a matter of ideas than of cost. The materials may be very inexpensive if the ideas are right. A clever designer who makes good use of the possibilities of modern materials can produce excellent results at small cost, if necessary. He can do much better, of course, with a liberal appropriation, but if the design and workmanship are good, if materials are well chosen, and if there is no sham, you can be proud of the job, even if it did not cost much. Very often an inexpensive treatment is best because it is in keeping with the particular theatre, as well as within reason from a business standpoint.

WALNUT FLEXWOOD

A very attractive treatment in line with what has been said above can be made at moderate cost by covering the walls of a lobby with walnut Flexwood veneer in horizontal strips and applying flat chrome metal-covered strips ¾-inch wide over the joints. These strips can be attached by "toe nailing" on a slant through the edges after first drilling fine holes through the metal. Very slender brads should be used. Or the strips can be fastened with chrome-finished rosette screws with flattened oval heads in which the cuts form a decorative cross. Display frames made of chrome-covered mouldings should be built into the walls at intervals. The wall base can be black Formica 6 inches deep. At the ceiling a board 5 inches deep by ¾-inch thick can be used as a finish. It should be enameled black with Chinese vermilion at lower edge. The inside edges of the display frames should also be vermilion. These touches of bright color supply accent.

Flexwood is fine wood veneer mounted on a fabric backing. It costs about 40c a square foot in walnut. The flat chrome metal-covered mouldings ¾-inch wide cost $5 per 100 feet. Flexwood comes in 18-inch and 24-inch widths, 8 feet to 10 feet in length.

A carpet of modern style pattern in walnut browns with a little black, vermilion and perhaps touches of other colors, would be good. Carpets are growing in favor for lobbies; they give an intimate note and help to create the impression of getting right into the theatre itself practically from the sidewalk. They are woven 9 feet wide, 12 feet wide and upwards, without a seam.

Linoleum inlaid in a special design in a simple combination, or in square rubber tiles of two colors (for example, tan and rich brown) would be a good choice for the lobby floor.

Aluminum paint, or metalizing with aluminum, by means of a gun that sprays molten metal, makes a good finish for the doors and trim, harmonizing them with the chrome strips on the wall.

A long Catalin or glass trough lighting fixture suspended on straight chromium-finished tubes in the center of the ceiling would be smart. The light sources, however, should be in harmony with the proportions of the lobby (this phase of the treatment is taken up later in my discussion). The ceiling might be painted in ivory color, or of sand-finished plaster, or in aluminum leaf.

Instead of walnut Flexwood, mahogany or harewood or one of the many other woods available, can be used. With mahogany, either chrome or brass-covered strips will harmonize, and the doors should match, either in aluminum or in gold bronze toned down with a brown glaze. The color accent may be jade green, the carpet in mahogany tones, with blue-greens and blues and touches of black and ruby red.

If the silvery gray harewood is used, the strips should be in chromium, the doors in aluminum, the base and top strip in black, the color accent an ultramarine blue lightened a little by the addition of white and softened slightly with black. The carpet coloring should be light and dark grays with medium and light blue and touches of black and rusty red. Harewood veneer in Flexwood costs about 80 cents a square foot.

FLEXBOARD TREATMENT

The idea of horizontal banding described above can be carried out economically if J-M Flexboard is used for covering the walls. It is of asbestos-cement composition in a number of plain colors and it has an interesting texture effect due to the fine shreds of white asbestos mingled with the coloring, which goes entirely through. Where the local building code calls for fireproof material Flexboard is especially desirable. Standard J-M Flexboard costs from 10 cents to 15 cents a square foot. It can be had in a waxed finish, which is easily kept clean. The best color for lobby walls is probably the light yellow, with which either chrome or brass-covered strips are good. The base then could well be black, and ceiling strip black, with edge in jade green, which color should be used also on inner edges of display frames for accent. The carpet—say, dark and light golden browns, with rusty red, jade green and touches of greenish blue and black. If rubber tile flooring is used, alternate squares of golden yellow and rich golden brown are suggested for such a scheme. Vermilion can be used for accent instead of jade green, in which case it should appear in the carpet with the browns, black, blue and touches of green.

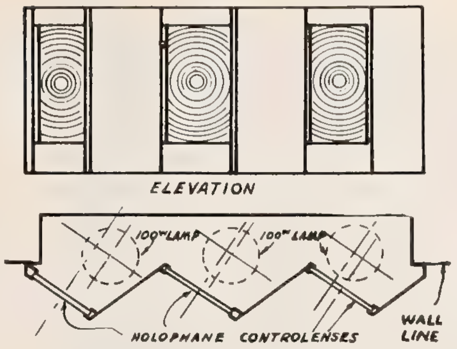


Diagram of wall luminaire that projects light over a large area on the opposite wall. This is a Holophane in-built unit. Three control lenses set on a saw-tooth plan are directed toward the auditorium end of the lobby. The housing for the unit should be of metal in modern style.

TREATING DIVISIONS

Since horizontal division of the walls tend to accentuate the faults of a lobby that is too long for its width, or that has too low a ceiling, vertical division, a plain surface, or paneling is often preferable, or one may happen to like it better. The Flexwood veneers, the J-M Flexboard and metal-covered strips can be used in working out equally attractive schemes of vertical division, and Flexwood can be applied with admirable effect in plain unbroken surfaces of wood grain.

The Flexboard lends itself to the making of curved surfaces, for it can be bent readily to a radius in nailing it to furring. A series of plain concave panels, like shallow recesses edged with chrome-covered, green or orange enameled mouldings, might be made from the light green material set in a plain wall of the light yellow J-M Flexboard.

There are innumerable ways in which to make use of the ease with which this board can be bent (for example, in the curved tops of the pylons in the lobby design by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, published in Better Theatres for September 22, 1934—a design since carried out in Flexboard by Mr. Schlanger in the modernization of a theatre in New York City).

FORMICA

Formica, which is a strong, handsome material similar in nature to Bakelite, comes in sheets and is widely used for covering lobby walls. It is employed in horizontal and vertical schemes and in paneling with or without pilasters. Snap-on metal moldings are usually employed, for accent and finish, over the joints. It comes in a range of good decorative colors, and in addition can be furnished inlaid in special designs and combinations of colors. It is often enriched with inlay of metal in lasting Alumalite finish, either silvery or in metallic colors. The mouldings can be obtained also in these finishes. The metal inlay, as well as that entirely of different colors of Formica, is formed in the sheet in the process of manufacture and forms an integral part of it.

This material is suitable not only for walls, but is excellent for lobby doors for which it is being used in a number of the better modernizations, decorated in inlay after special designs by the architects. Formica for wall treatments costs about 36 cents a square foot in a single solid color. If banded in two or more colors, or inlaid with a design in colors or metal, or airbrushed, the cost varies from 50 cents or 60 cents, upwards. The metal mouldings for covering the joints cost about 30 cents a running foot in aluminum, and 40 cents a running foot if in Alumalite finish. Dado caps, bases and corners and other mouldings vary in price.

The pictures reproduced below show two lobbies treated with walnut Flexwood (see text). The lefthand view shows the main lobby of the RKO theatre in Denver, Colo. This lobby has wall panels and reeded pilasters of walnut Flexwood. The other view is of the Metropole theatre in Brussels, Belgium, in which the lobby walls are covered with Prima Vera Flexwood in veneering.

VITROLITE

A practically unlimited variety of handsome lobby treatments can be made with Vitrolite opaque architectural glass, ranging from simple schemes of horizontal or vertical banding, or of panelling, to elaborately enriched decorations with sandblast-carved ornament, to which may be added color and metal leaf applied in the recessed portions. This material comes in excellent plain colors and in several beautiful agate colorings, which may be combined very effectively.

Vitrolite for facing interior walls is 11/32-inch thick and costs about $1.75 a square foot, set. The base, 6 inches deep, costs about $1.50 a running foot, set. Door trim, 7/16-inch thick by 4 inches wide, costs about $1.30 a running foot, set. Sandblasting ornament adds about 50c a square foot to the portions sandblasted, as pilasters, trim, etc.

A CATALIN LOBBY

A notable example of the use of Catalin, which has only recently entered the architectural field, is the modernization of the lobby of the Oritani theatre in Hackensack, N. J., a Warner house. The walls will be paneled in Catalin of a light orange color with black border lines, above the existing black marble base. Centers of interest will be formed on each side wall by two broad panels, each containing a circular gold mirror with a blue silvered band around the edge, and a Catalin cove following the lower curve of the mirror from which a violet neon tube spreads its light downward upon the wall. There will be Catalin coves surounding the poster frames which will throw violet light upon the wall. In the center of the ceiling will hang a V-shaped trough lighting fixture of translucent, mottled cream-toned Catalin in an aluminum frame work suspended by tubes in the same metal.

The ceiling will be in aluminum leaf with a patine of transparent orange glaze to make it tone-in with the walls. The floor will be carpeted in a large-scale modern style pattern of rectangles.

Sheets of Catalin with a wooden core —the form of this material chosen for the Oritani wall treatment—are about 3/8-inch in thickness and cost about $1.50 a square foot.

STONE, MOSAIC, TERRAZZO

A natural limestone that comes in thin slabs in standard sizes ready to set like tiles is known as Martstone. It is of agreeable buff color with natural color variations inclining to blue, yellow and rust color that give added interest. It conveys the impression of richness and value that attaches to genuine stone and would make an admirable facing for lobby walls. It should be used in the unfinished "raw" state for the value of the velvety texture, which brings out the tints of color to advantage, excepting where the polished surface is preferred because it is less likely to soil. It is excellent for floors, especially in the sand-rubbed finish. It would seem advisable to avoid monotony by not using it for the walls and floor of the same room. Martstone costs about $1 a square foot, including setting. It comes in ⅜-inch and ⅝-inch thickness in stock sizes up to 12 inches by 18 inches, and in crude, sandrubbed, and polished surfaces.

For points of interest, panels of mosaic may well be set in walls faced with Martstone. Silhouette designs in two colors would be effective, such as figure subjects or silhouetted leafy branches or vines appearing as though seen against the light through a window opening. Any decorative designs should be well drawn by a good artist, as the usual mediocre designing of such subjects only cheapens a theatre. They should be all different, not repeated. Display frames should be of brown statuary bronze.

If the panels are done in marble mosaic, which is known as Roman mosaic, rich blue Turquin marble on a salmon pink, Rouge Chagny marble ground would be effective with the buff of the stone wall facing. Or Belgian black marble might be used for the designs, and creamy white Blanc de Nimes marble for the background. Such mosaics are made from little squares of marble set in cement mastic and cost about $4 a square foot.

Suitable designs can be worked out in panels of Venetian mosaic, which is composed of small squares of opaque colored glass, called enamel, set in cement mastic. Venetian mosaic is capable of more lively effects than marble mosaics because of the brilliancy of the colors obtainable in the material, and its sparkle. Small pieces of transparent glass backed with gold leaf or silver leaf are often used in this kind of mosaic.

Figure I in discussion of lobby illumination by Francis M. Falge. The view is of the lobby of the Sheen theatre in London, in which are combined distinguished simplicity and use of the accentuating characteristics of modern architecture. In this spirit are the luminous elements at either side of the stairs, which, in addition to being decorative and illuminative features, serve by their location to guide traffic to the auditorium.

II.—LIGHTING IN TODAY'S TREND

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

THE FOLLOW-THROUGH is important in the execution of a good golf shot, and it is likewise important in building up and sustaining the interest and pleasure of the theatre patron. The sign and marquee may be termed the attention getter and the initial impression former of the theatre, but there must be no let-down in novel and interesting sights as the patron turns toward the door.

The lobby is one of the factors that determine the final appeal of the house. As a connecting link between the entrance and the foyer, or auditorium, according to the layout of the theatre, the lobby must follow through by fulfilling every expectation that the exterior invitation promised. For it serves not only as a traffic artery, but also as an active waiting room for those who are meeting friends or awaiting the finish of the picture.

The lobby thus requires, first of all, an abundance of light for the transition from marquee to foyer. More than that, it must be skillfully and artfully employed to produce the feeling of eager anticipation and have an atmosphere of charm different from that which is encountered in other interiors.

During the past few years, many new lighting forms have been developed. These units, termed "luminous elements," form an integral part of the structure and offer economical advertising individuality. They may be divided into two types—the enclosing type faced with diffusing material, and the open type utilizing the reflection from a light-colored background.

ENCLOSED TYPE

For the enclosed type there are available a considerable variety of glasses, such as flashed opal, solid opal, and configurated. There is also an ever-increasing number of plastic materials, such as Catalin, Vinylite and Lumanite, which duplicate the effect of some glasses and make possible still other effects.

OPEN TYPE

The open type elements comprise lamps concealed in a trough which is often used as a part of the decorative design. This method is quite inexpensive and simple to construct, yet unusually striking.

LOBBY DISPLAYS

Lobby displays serve at least two purposes. They tell of the coming shows, or they complete the selling job started by the exterior advertising displays. The displays of coming attractions, either in poster form or in more dramatic display form, should be well lighted. Spotlights, where used, should be masked into the display and so directed that no light from them strikes the patron's eyes.

Lobby frames, to be effective, should be lighted. This is satisfactorily accomplished

This is a design for a lobby in which the principal lighting features are Zazda Lumiline lamps at the ceiling, downlights on the posterboards, and a large luminous tile area in the background. Cove lighting along the outer edges of the ceiling unifies the entire lighting and decorative scheme. (C. T. Masterson, architect.)

by using either the new Mazda Lumiline lamps or the regular standard tubular lamps. For the more elaborate displays, the luminous elements that were shown on page 7 of the March 9th issue of BETTER THEATRES have great possibilities.

LOBBY TREATMENTS

The attractive modern lobby of the Sheen theatre in London, England (Figure 1), well illustrates the advantages of modern decoration and lighting. By the ingenious use of luminous elements and highlighted decoration, emphasis is placed where desired. With it, all is simplicity and a refreshing cleanness that wear long and well. For the lighting of luminous elements of this type the reader is again referred to page 7 of the March 9th issue of BETTER THEATRES.

The inner lobby, or foyer, shown in Figure 2, features a luminous element with a clever construction that is flexible and inexpensive. The elements of circular cross-section are composed of long narrow staves of flashed-opal glass lapped so as to prevent a view of the lamps inside. With this construction they may be designed into elements of many sizes and shapes to suit the particular treatment desired.

The suggested lobby design in Figure 3, utilizes the new Mazda Lumiline lamps, which make possible substantially unbroken lines of light. The lamps have separable end clips which are inserted into small moulded sockets, so that there is a very small break between lamps. Here they are shown mounted against the ceiling in an appropriate metal shape, which also acts as a wiring trough. The lamps are available in three sizes and in clear, white, straw, orange, surprise pink, emerald, and moonlight blue, thus offering the designer untold possibilities in the way of decorative effect.

At the rear of the lobby is an illuminated panel of translucent glass tiles. These are available in a wide range of tints, and when used in conjunction with clear or colored lamps, the range of designs is unlimited.

Louvered floodlights recessed in the lobby ceiling provide effective lighting of the displays. The reflected light and the units themselves contribute materially to the decoration. The overhanging ceiling conceals lamps and reflectors to add to the illumination of the ceiling.

Lumiline lamps appliqued in an appropriate design against the lobby ceiling (Figure 4) offer a form of decoration that is new and outstanding. The wide variety of tints suggest unlimited possibilities.

III.—SAFETY and COMFORT

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

SO FAR AS the theatre-going public is concerned, the mechanics of the lobby of a theatre are seldom noticed. This is as it should be, for the lobby is a part of the theatre which should be beautiful, peaceful or exciting, depending upon the created atmosphere, whereas the mechanics simply provide comfort and safety without attracting attention.

Ventilation is very necessary in the foyer, just as it is in the auditorium. This is especially true if patrons must wait there for seats in the auditorium. Frequently the ventilation is not positively provided for by special duct work, which is contrary to the best practice. To be absolutely sure that adequate air is provided, special ducts should be installed with adjustable louvers in order to balance the air in this space for complete comfort. Delivery grilles should be kept high, and exhaust grilles low, close to the floor. In order to make these grilles inconspicuous, they can be ornamental and of a design that will harmonize with the decorative or architectural scheme. Grilles may be of plaster or other composition, or of metal with various finishes; and frequently air may be introduced at the ceiling above ornamental plaques.

HEATING

For winter heating, direct radiators can be used either as the main source of heat supply, or as a booster supply to be used only in extremely cold weather. When radiators are used they can be recessed into the wall and faced with a metal grille. In some cases old types of radiators can be replaced with more modern and efficient copper or bronze radiators, which require much less space to recess. If radiators must remain exposed, carefully selected radiator covers improve their appearance and make them less objectionable.

LIGHT PLUGS

Frequently illuminated easel display frames, holiday garlands or wreaths, lanterns or other illuminated displays, are used in foyers, and these additional loads,

GETTING AN NHA LOAN FOR REMODELING

By FRANCIS L. BURT

The mayor and the banker tell Bill the Exhibitor how to cash in on his credit standing while it lasts

THE MAYOR hadn't seen his friend Bill for several days, which is quite a long time in a small town. Hearing footsteps inside the lobby of Bill's theatre, as he was passing by, the mayor paused. Bill came out, carrying some mechanical gadget under one arm, and a monkey wrench in his free hand.

"Well, if it ain't his honor himself!"

"Hello, Bill," responded the mayor. "Been wondering what you'd done with yourself. But I see you're right on the job."

"Got to be," said Bill.

"How's business? Pickin' up any?"

"A mite, maybe. But this place ain't what she used to be. If I could fix it up some I might stand a chance, but I can't figure out how I'm going to do it."

"Money, you mean?"

"Yes. Say, maybe you can tell me about this government loan law. I hear it's for business places as well as for homes. Know anything about it?"

"You must mean the National Housing Act. Sure you could get a loan to fix up your theatre. Don't know just how much, but some, anyway."

Bill set down his burden on the sidewalk and fumbled in his pocket for a smoke. The mayor went on:

"The bank's the people you ought to see. But I guess I can tell you something about it. How much do you think you'd need?"

"Oh, I don't know exactly. Maybe a thousand or so."

"Well, here's what you got to do. You see, the first part of the law provides for the insurance of loans made for repairing and modernizing homes, stores, factories, or theatres, of course, they being business places. These loans are made by banks, not the government itself—by some kind of lending institution. You can get a loan for as high as $2,000 and have it extend over a period from one to three years, or even five years. Al White over at the First National could tell you whether you qualify or not. His bank is approved by the housing administration in Washington. Al's known you for a long while. Why don't you drop in on him?"

Bill did, the very next day. The banker regarded him for a moment across the table.

"Well, Bill," he said finally. "How much money do you think you want to borrow from us?"

Bill leaned back in his chair. "I've talked it over with a contractor and he says that with $1,200 I could fix that theatre of mine up pretty decent. I think $1,200 will do. I've got to get an up-to-date effect outside and in the lobby, at any rate."

The banker did some quick figuring. "Well, if you borrow $1,200 for three years, that would cost you $156.34 in interest. We would deduct this amount from the $1,200 and give you $1,043.36 in cash. Then you would pay off the loan in monthly installments."

"I don't know if I could manage the improvements on around a thousand, but maybe I could."

"If you need more I think it could be arranged," commented the banker. "I guess you rate as a pretty good risk, Bill. You own some other property, and you've always been regular in meeting your obligations.

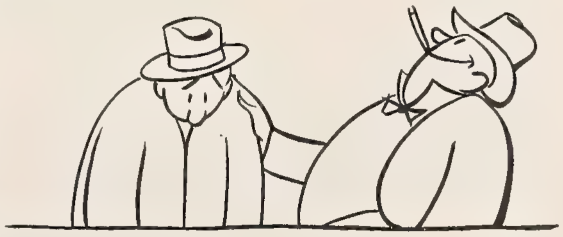
"I noticed your theatre from the street the other day. Can't say about the inside. Frankly, Bill, I haven't been to one of your shows lately. Have you been finding patronage falling off?"

Bill gave him a look of mock pain. "Have I? Another year like the last and I'll be through."

Banker White bit off the end of a cigar. "Do you think fixing the place up would help?"

"It ought to. We put on good shows for this town. Trouble is, the place is all run down, and those that don't go to the opposition stay home or maybe drive over to Mason City."

"Then I'll tell you what I'll do," responded the banker. "I'll let you have anything up to $2,000. Up to that amount the bank is insured against loss—that is, up to twenty per cent of the total. The average losses of a bank on loans of this kind do not run over two or three per cent, so I would consider it a conservative business deal to lend you money under the National Housing Act without collateral. You see, the insurance protects me."

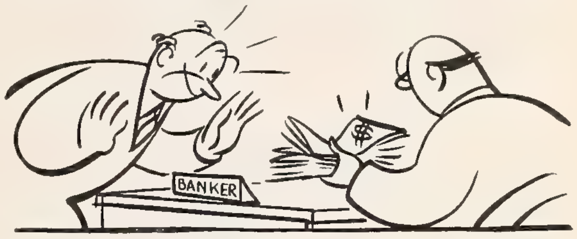


"All right," said Bill. "Now suppose I want that money, how do I get it?"

"First," explained the banker, "you fill out a Property Owner's Credit Statement. Here's one right before me. Now, you sign that statement and I would like to have your wife sign it. You don't require any other signatures on that statement. Take this home with you, talk it over with your wife and if you want the loan, bring that statement around with you tomorrow, or any day. Then sign a note and the money will be here waiting for you."

Bill grabbed the banker's hand and began uttering thanks.

"Don't thank me," smiled White, "thank Uncle Sam. This National Housing Act was put through to help people of moderate means to better their homes or their places of business. Now, for instance, if you want to fix up that home of yours—if you want to put in a new kitchen or bring the living room or any other rooms up to date with parquet floors or new lights, you could do it under the National Housing Act."



"You know," said Bill, "I thought the United States Government loaned money under this National Housing Act."

"Not at all," smiled the banker. "You see the purpose of this modernization credit plan is to speed up business, to help bring about recovery. The Federal Housing Administration merely insures loans and then says to the banker, 'Here's a chance for you to lend money with very little possibility of losing anything. We insure your loan.' Don't you see how that will help to bring about business recovery?"

"It might help the bank," said Bill.

"It does much more than that," said Banker White. "For instance, if you need this loan to repair your theatre, it means a lot of men are going to be put to work on that job—carpenters, plumbers, painters, decorators, electricians. Now when all those men go back to work, more money will be put into circulation. Besides that, building material will be sold for repairing your place. Suppose one hundred people of this town set about repairing or modernizing their homes or places of business. Suppose there was an average of six men working on each job—that means 600 idle men put back to work. It means more customers for your theatre. So you see the banks are not the only ones to benefit under the National Housing Act."

As stated by the banker to Bill, the government does not make the loans. This is strictly up to a banker who has been approved by the Federal Housing Administration. Any theatre owner desiring a loan should get in touch with any local bank, building and loan association, or other reputable lending institution. If he is unable to obtain information through these sources, he can write to the Division of Modernization Credits of the Federal Housing Administration, Washington, D. C., and the information will be sent to him. In close to 5,000 cities and towns throughout the United States Better Housing Committees, sponsored by the Federal Housing Administration, are now carrying the message of modernization. It should not be difficult to get in touch with one of these Better Housing Committees. Every committee is supplied with Federal Housing Administration pamphlets telling how property owners and business men can take advantage of the National Housing Act.

The above discount table, which has been prepared by the Federal Housing Administration, shows the proceeds of notes for various amounts, and the monthly payments at maximum interest according to periods.

Frequently the question has been asked as to whether loans will be made under the National Housing Act for theatre seats. The answer is, "Yes," provided these seats are permanently installed in the theatre. There is a ruling by the Housing Administration that loans can be made for all immovable equipment installed in homes or places of business. It does not, however, apply to projection machines, which are not considered immovable equipment. Air conditioning equipment, of course, is eligible, as is any equipment or furnishings or materials similarly permanently attached to the building—in general, those things legally called fixtures.

In the little fictionized account above, reference was made to the Property Owner's Credit Statement. Therein, in addition to providing information identifying the property and the applicant, such information as the following must be given:

Total income.

Extent of any mortgages.

Existing loans and interest due.

Whether taxes and insurance are paid up.

Whether applicant has any judgments, suits or legal proceedings against him.

Exact manner in which applicant will make payments on the loan. Payments may be made monthly from the day on which the loan is granted, or monthly following a certain approved date, or at other approved periods.

Details of proposed alterations and repairs.

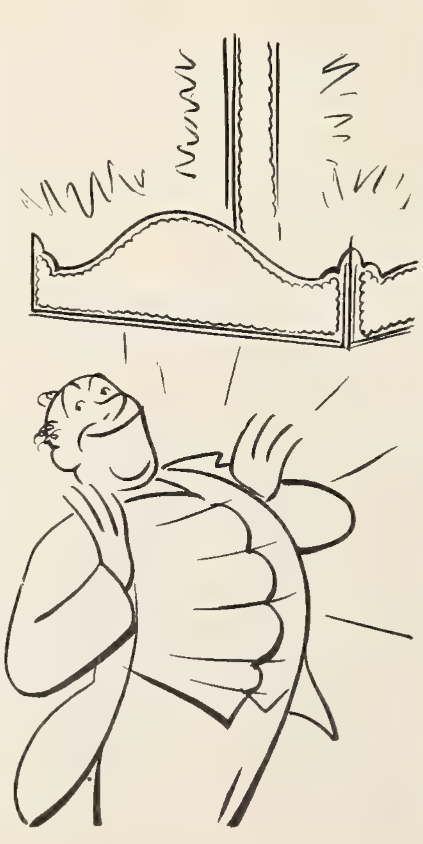
The highest rate of interest that can be charged for a loan under the National Housing Act is 5%. (See Discount Table.) The ratio of income to amount of loan necessary for a loan rests with the lending institution, but in general it may be said that an exhibitor needs to have a net annual income of only five times the actual payments due annually. Thus, for a loan of $2,000 over a three-year period, the exhibitor need show a net yearly income of $3,310, or $63 net a week.

It is to be pointed out that these loans are made entirely on the exhibitor's note, without endorsement. No mortgages or other liens are placed against the property in security of a loan.

The total number of lending institutions which have so far been approved by the National Housing Administration is in the neighborhood of 12,000. These institutions include banks, building and loan associations, companies making personal loans (which otherwise than under the National Housing Act, require co-makers or chattel mortgages), contractors and builders who have filed with the Administration a statement of financial responsibility.

The maximum term of a loan rests with the lender, but banks are required to make advances for from three to five years. The full amount of the loan may be repaid at any time, and when this is done the interest is canceled at the end of the year in which repayment was made. During the life of the loan, the interest is reduced as the principal is reduced—in other words, interest applies only to the amount owed.

Just as Bill did, the exhibitor who is thinking of applying for a loan should have a frank talk about his financial condition and plans with the proper official of a bank or other lending institution which is listed among the establishments approved by the government. The bank at which the exhibitor usually does business is generally preferable, but if such an institution is not available, inquiry among conveniently located banks, or a letter to the Federal Housing Administration in Washington, will reveal one likely to prove suitable.



In the event that there are charges against the property that the exhibitor feels might prevent him from being granted a loan, he should approach the lending institution before getting a contractor to look over the theatre or even before taking the time to make any preliminary plans himself.

In such situations, however, it may well be found that the bank will be able to point out ways of overcoming this impediment, and the mere existence of it should be allowed to deter the exhibitor from making the proper inquiries.

THE LEGAL AUTHORITY OF A MANAGER

By LEO T. PARKER

How an employe variously makes himself or the theatre operator liable by his acts—a discussion based on recent cases

THE COURTS have consistently held that all employes are duty bound to perform only those acts intended to be advantageous to their employers. Moreover, all employes may be personally responsible to their employers for injurious or damaging acts performed under certain circumstances, and in other instances these same employes may be personally liable to others who suffer financial loss or inconvenience.

Therefore, it is important to know that using recently decided leading higher court cases as a basis, a rule has been formulated by which theatre owners, managers and other employes may quickly determine the circumstances under which a manager, or other employe is personally liable for illegal and injurious acts performed while in his employer's service.

A review of these many higher court cases discloses that a manager or other theatre employe is personally liable (1) where he knowingly makes a false written or oral statement or representation of his authority with intent to deceive a person who intends to transact business with his employer; (2) where he performs unlawful acts with or without authority of his employer; (3) where he performs a damaging act believing, without justifiable cause, that he has authority, but actually has none; (4) where under all circumstances he wilfully performs an act which results in damage to any one; (5) where he performs damaging acts outside his scope of authority, although he intends to render his employer a valuable service; (6) where he intentionally assumes an obligation for his employer; and (7) where he unintentionally but legally assumes an obligation while performing services for his empoyer.

LAW OF CONTRACTS

FREQUENTLY litigation arises where a theatre manager makes a contract intending to bind the theatre owner when in fact he makes himself personally liable without obligating the employer in any way. Sometimes a manager is solely liable for obligations created by a contract made for his employer. In other instances, his employer also is jointly liable. However, as a general rule the employer is relieved of liability where the employe exceeds his authority and affixes a signature or issues an order outside the scope of the employment, but the employe may be liable for resulting damages.

CASE

For example, in a higher court case (101 Pa. 311), it was disclosed that a manager exceeded the authority given by his employer and signed a contract which did not bind his employer. The court held the employe personally liable, and said:

DECISION

"The reason why an agent is liable in damages to the person with whom he contracts when he exceeds his authority, is that the party dealing with him is deprived of any remedy upon the contract against the principal."

CASE

Many other courts have held that managers are solely liable on contracts which they signed by authority of employers. For instance, in a leading case (17 O. S. 215), it was shown that a corporation official authorized his employe to sign a valid contract. The employe failed to include his employer's name in the contract, but signed it as "Agent." The employer refused to assume the obligations under the contract and the other party filed suit.

DECISION

This court held the employe personally liable and stated that an employe is personally responsible on a contract which is written and signed in a manner which indicates to the other contracting party that the employe intended to be bound especially if the employer's name is not in the contract.

Another important rule of the law is that an employe may be personally liable on a contract, although the body of the contract contains his employer's name, if the signature indicates that the employe intended to be personally bound.

PRESIDENT HELD LIABLE

NOT ONLY IS a theatre manager, or other employe, personally liable on a contract made outside the scope of his authority, or where his signature does not indicate that the contract is being made for his employer, but this same rule is applicable to corporation officials. Also, although the contract may contain the corporation's name, yet if a corporation official personally signs the contract without other indication that he is signing it for the corporation, he may be held liable on the contract.

CASE

For illustration, in Strauss v Berman (147 Atl. 85, Philadelphia), it was disclosed that a contractor consulted with the president of the Independent Theatre Corporation regarding constructional improvements for the theatre building. Later the contractor submitted to the president a written proposition to perform certain repairs for $4,275. The president finally affixed to the offer his initials "L. B." and opposite the word "Approved" signed his name "Louis Berman" after the words "Independent Theatre Corporation."

The contractor performed the repairs and sued the president personally for the value of the services rendered, on the contention that the president's signature affixed to the contract did not indicate conclusively that he was acting for the theatre corporation. It is interesting to observe that the court held Berman personally liable, stating the following important law:

"Furthermore, the written acceptance on the face of the contract was that of the defendant (Berman) rather than that of the corporation. His individual signature personally and not as president or for the corporation was written opposite and to the right of the word 'Accepted,' while the words 'Independent Theatre Corporation' were written one line above, the names being in form as follows: 'Independent Theatre Corporation Accepted: Louis Berman.' Had the written offer been made to the corporation, Berman, being in fact its president, the names as written above might perhaps be construed as an obligation of the corporation. But, being addressed to Berman personally and so accepted by him, the corporate name written above did not release him from personal liability, in the absence of an agreement to deal with the corporation."

In this case the president may have avoided liability by inserting the word for before the name of the theatre corporation at the time he signed it. Also, if he had introduced testimony proving that the contractor knew that he was signing the contract as representative of the theatre corporation then, of course, the president would not have been held personally liable.

CASE

For example, in Williams v Carnation Company (287 Pac. 50, Seattle) it was disclosed that an official signed a note without including the name of his employer.

However, it was understood between the official and the holder of the note that the employer and not the official was to be liable. Later the holder of the note attempted to collect the amount of the same from the official. However, the higher court held the employer solely liable on the note, saying:

DECISION

"The fact that this contract was 'accepted' by the company's manager without adding after his signature words indicating his representative capacity does not, when considered together with all the other facts shown by the record, require a holding that the loan was not made to the company."

LIABILITY FOR DEBTS

STILL ANOTHER well-established law is that a theatre corporation official may be personally liable for payment of corporation debts authorized in excess of the amount specified by state laws. If, however, the creditors fail to file suit within the time specified by law, then the official may be relieved from payment of the excess debts. These points of the law were discussed in the late case of Preston v Howell (257 N. W. 415, Des Moines, Ia.).

In this case it was shown that a state law provides that in no case shall the debts of a corporation exceed two-thirds of its capital stock. Another law provides that claims against debtors shall be filed before the expiration of five years from the time the debt was assumed. The creditors failed to file suit against the official before expiration of the five-year period. Therefore, the higher court refused to hold the official personally liable for debts of the corporation assumed in excess of two-thirds of the capital stock. However, the court indicated liability of the official, if the suit had been filed within five years after the debt was assumed.

LEGAL DUTIES OF EXECUTIVE

THE COURTS in general have held that the duties of a theatre executive relate to active participation in the control, supervision, and management of the theatre business, providing no contract exists which defines the legal duty of the executive.

In construing contracts of this nature it is a fundamental rule that the courts may interpret the language employed in the contract and, also, construe the subject-matter and the surrounding circumstances. So held a higher court in Arkansas Amusement Corporation v Kempner (57 F. [2d] 466, Little Rock, Ark.).

The facts of this case are that a man named Kempner was employed by a theatre corporation under a contract which provided that the corporation agreed to employ Kempner "either as Vice-President or, at its option, in other executive capacity, and Kempner agrees to accept said employment" and to give such of his time, attention and services as were requested of him.

A corporation official wrote a letter to Kempner stating that his services and presence was required at an executive meeting at a stated time. Kempner replied that in accordance with the terms of his contract he was not required to attend such meetings. Soon afterward one of the corporation's officials wrote notifying Kempner that no further payments would be made on the salary account. Kempner filed suit to recover the agreed salary and to compel enforcement of the contract. This court clearly defined the duties of an executive, as follows:

"It is our conclusion that Kempner bound himself under the contract in suit to serve as vice-president or 'in other executive capacity,' and that he was compelled in carrying out his contract to perform such reasonable services in that capacity as the company required of him in connection with the picture theatre business. . . . He is obligated to do what he contracted to do, whether the position be soft or hard."

CORPORATION CAPITAL STOCK

By M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

A CORPORATION obtains capital by the issuing of capital stock. The capital stock is divided into equal shares, and by law, in most states, may be issued only for money or property received by the corporation or services rendered to it. Stock may not be issued for less than its face value, and if the face value is not fully paid by the equivalent in cash, property or services, the holder may be made to pay the difference, unless, of course, he is an innocent purchaser for value.

Ownership of capital stock in a corporation is shown by the issuance to the stockholder of a certificate of stock. The certificate is not the stock itself, any more than a bankbook is a bank account, but shows that the holder is a part owner of the corporation to the extent of the number of shares mentioned in the certificate.

The amount of capital stock which a corporation may issue is fixed by the terms of the charter or certificate of incorporation and may be changed only by amendment of the charter, by consent of ordinarily no less than two-thirds of the stockholders. Also fixed by the charter are the types and value of the shares.

As to value, the charter may provide that the shares of stock are to have either par value or no par value. In case par value shares are to be issued, the value is fixed by the charter at whatever figure may be desired by the incorporators, the most common figure being one hundred dollars. In recent years it has become popular to issue stock without par value, in which case the shares of stock have no fixed worth. The actual worth of either par value or non-par value stock, can be found only by dividing the net assets of the corporation by the number of shares of stock outstanding, the resulting figure being known as book value.

With reference to type, shares of stock may be either common or preferred. Common stock is the ordinary stock of a corporation, giving to the holder no special privileges. Ownership of preferred stock on the other hand, carries with it privileges not possessed by the holder of common stock, such as the following:

1. Preference as to assets: Upon the corporation winding up business, the preferred stockholders, if entitled to preference as to assets, must be paid the full par value of their stock before the common stockholders are paid anything.
2. Preference as to dividends: The preferred stockholders, if given dividend preference are entitled to be paid dividends before any dividend is paid to common stockholders. This preference may be cumulative, which means that if a preferred dividend is not paid when due, such skipped dividends must be paid in full before the common stockholders are paid anything.
3. Participation privilege: Sometimes, preferred stockholders who are entitled to preferred dividends, are given the right, after payment to them of their dividends to share in the profits equally with the common stockholders.
4. Conversion privilege: Preferred stockholders are often given the opportunity of converting their preferred stock into common stock at a fixed price. This privilege may often be valuable, because while the preferred stock provides a fixed annual dividend, after this has been paid, the preferred stockholders do not ordinarily share in the common stock dividends which may sometimes be greater than the preferred dividends.
5. Redemption: A corporation issuing preferred stock often reserves the right to call in such stock for redemption at par or at a price above par.

One of the privileges of a stockholder, common or preferred, is the opportunity given him by law to subscribe to any new stock that may be issued in proportion to the amount of his existing holdings in the corporation. So that if A holds 100 shares out of a total of 1,000 shares of issued capital stock, and the corporation floats a new issue of 1,000 shares, A is entitled to subscribe to 100 shares in the new issue, so that he may still maintain his 1/10th interest.

AIR CONDITIONING

Succeeds Only When

CONTROLLED

THERE are six factors* vital in year-around Air Conditioning. These factors are ineffective and elusive without perfect co-ordination. Automatic Control is the guiding hand to provide the means by which they become that great contribution to the success of the modern theatre — Air Conditioning. Automatic Control makes possible proper humidity and ventilation in winter, and effective cooling in summer, compensating for shifting crowds and varying outside temperatures.

Minneapolis-Honeywell, pioneer and leader for fifty years in the development of automatic controls, manufactures the Modutrol System, which will automatically control any Air Conditioning installation, large or small. The great versatility of this system makes it readily applicable to any standard or specialized installation. Under Modutrol guidance, that installation will operate at its maximum efficiency.

Minneapolis-Honeywell has available a brief, informative book on the vital subject of Air Conditioning and its automatic control. Your request to Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Company, 2822 Fourth Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minnesota, will bring you your copy.

PRACTICAL AIR-CONDITIONING ROUTINE

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

A timely discussion of systematic methods that assure effective and economical operation during the summer season

FOR THE MANAGERS and engineers of theatres now equipped with air-conditioning equipment we are now on the threshold of another season—a season of headaches and trouble, unless the necessary precautions are taken, and the repairs are made so as to preclude breakdowns and to some extent assure uninterrupted operation. Perhaps there is one thing worse than not having an air-conditioning plant—to have a broken-down plant! Pre-season overhauling by competent mechanics, and if at all possible, operation throughout the season by a qualified engineer, are the best protections against interruptions of service. Owing to the great variety of plants in service, any attempt to discuss operating troubles must of necessity be of a general nature, as no one can forsee the particular pitfalls that lie ahead for any particular theatre. The best approach toward an estimation of the possible difficulties is a very careful examination of all records available of the particular equipment. Study the repairs that have been made to the plant with an eye toward those that might indicate intrinsic faults which cause recurring failures. Examine carefully the records of lubrication in order to be sure that the proper oils or greases are used. If there is any doubt, now is the time to call in a lubricating engineer of one of the large oil companies and have him prescribe the proper grade oil. Another way is to write to the manufacturer of the equipment and get the correct information from them. Cheap lubricants are false economy any time, especially so when used on compressors for air-conditioning purposes.

The engineer should have in his possession a complete history of the operation of the plant of the previous season, such as lubrication, cost of minor and major repairs, and every other detail of operation. In addition to this diary record there should be a daily operating log which should include periodic readings of all gauges and thermometers, including outside atmospheric conditions and the resulting inside conditions. Such records, accurately and carefully kept, are of inestimable value in determining the most practicable operating capacity and flexibility of the plant, and if not accurately kept, it is a waste of time. If the particular operation requires the services of more than one engineer, then one of them should be appointed chief engineer and be held responsible for the plant and the records of operation.

CLEANING THE EQUIPMENT

DIRT IS THE cause of much trouble in all air-conditioning plants, especially in those plants where spray type air washers are used for dehumidification purposes. Dirt in the cold circulating water clogs up spray nozzles and blocks screens. Much of this dirt comes from the air being conditioned, or is the scale from the corrosion of metal surfaces. The cleaning out of spray heads is a daily job. It is excellent practice to have twelve or fifteen extra spray heads on hand, clean and ready for installing. Before show time each day, the engineers should turn on the washer and inspect it for clogged nozzles, then shut it off and immediately replace the clogged ones or clean them. This is a tedious operation and frequently not attended to. Clogged nozzles materially reduce the efficiency of the washer.

SCREENS

The screens on the return water line should be cleaned daily. Screens should be cleaned when the air washer pump is not running, preferably at the beginning of the day before the water has been agitated by the pump and spray operation. Once each week, or at least once every two weeks, the entire washer tank should be drained down the sewer and all of the sediment in the tank removed. After this flush the tank out with a hose. While the removal of this dirt and sediment is a simple job, it's importance cannot be over-emphasized, and yet it is frequently neglected.

SCALE

Up to this point I have discussed dirt and loose scale only superficially. Here are a few facts: Scale is the result of corrosion of the metal surfaces constantly or intermittently in contact with water or dampness from the spray. Each year the metal surfaces in contact with water or spray should be scraped or brushed with a steel brush, and those surfaces not forming part of the heat exchange system should be painted with corrosion-resisting paint. There are several very good paints manufactured for this type of paint work, one is especially good because it has a rubber product as a base.

In some installations the expansion coils or cooling coils are located right in the path of the incoming air, and these pipes are either flooded by water from troughs over the top of them or have the usual washer sprays, spraying water on them. In such plants do not paint these cooling coils. The surfaces of these coils play a part in the cycle of heat exchange and any coating of paint will only minimize their efficiency. However, in such systems the corrosion of the expansion coils can be reduced or controlled by using proper water treating compounds or liquids. No general advice can be given concerning water treatment as the water must be tested by a competent water treatment engineer. If after a test the water is found to be acid in reaction, proper chemicals must be added to make and keep it slightly alkaline. Theatre owners and operators have not generally accepted water treatment as a necessity; however, it works silently and pays its way in higher efficiency and reduced maintenance cost.

OPERATING PROCEDURE

AT THIS POINT it is interesting to note divisions of an air-conditioning plant: the compressor, the condenser and the cooling coils. The condenser and the cooling coils are the two points where the real work of cooling is done. It is here where the transfer of heat takes place; yet so frequently, because there are no rotating or moving parts to these two divisions of the equipment, they generally receive little attention until leaks occur which are so obvious that a blind man could detect them.

PLANT ACTION

The heat picked up and taken from the air by the refrigerant as it is expanded into the cooling coils, plus the heat of compression of the refrigerant as it is acted upon by the compressor, is transferred to the condenser water, and the condenser water carries it away down the sewer. This is the procedure unless the theatre is equipped with a water cooling tower or spray pond, then the condenser water is pumped up to the tower, usually installed on the roof where the heat of the water is released to the atmosphere.

This partial review of the refrigerating cycle is given here in order to emphasize the importance of water in air-conditioning. As water passes through the condensers, the problem of dirt arises. Much, at least in principle, that has been said above about keeping spray tanks clean, applies to condensers. Clean condensers actually pay dividends in the operation of air-conditioning equipment. The efficiency of the condensers directly affects the head pressures required, and head pressures directly affect the required power consumption per ton of refrigeration. Where condenser water is discharged directly into the sewer, it is impractical to use any water treatment, but dirt traps can be installed ahead of the condensers which will relieve the situation depending upon the particular type of condenser in use. In many types of equipment, the condensers are not designed to facilitate cleaning during the operating season, consequently it is vitally important that in such cases the condensers be thoroughly and carefully cleaned before putting the plant into operation at the beginning of a new season.

COMPRESSOR

The refrigeration compressor, like all other pieces of high-grade machinery, requires constant supervision by a competent man. The lubrication system should be thoroughly cleaned and flushed out with kerosene, then filled with fresh oil before the start of the season. The lubricating system is often equipped with oil strainers or dirt traps. These parts should be cleaned daily after regular operation starts. Packing or stuffing boxes must be tight and well lubricated in order to seal effectively the machine and not overheat. On the rotary compressors the metal seals must fit properly and remain tight at all times. The engineer must test all valves and assure himself that they all function properly. The manufacturer of each type of compressor leaves on the job charts or a hand book which gives certain exact facts not only about the mechanical feature of the machine but its correct operation. Such instructions should be followed explicitly. Each manager would find it very much worthwhile to give careful study to this information.

Operating pressures, as prescribed by the makers of the equipment, should be accurately adhered to. Especially during the first season of operation of new equipment, any failure on the part of the equipment should be reported immediately to the manufacturer. He should be expected to assume the responsibility of making the necessary changes until satisfactory results are obtained. Remember that in practically every case, air-conditioning equipment is only guaranteed against mechanical defects for one calendar year from date of installation, so all necessary pressure should be put on the manufacturer to fulfill this guarantee in the smallest detail.

CONTROL INSTRUMENTS

The automatic control instruments, another division of the plant, should receive careful attention before the beginning of the season and during the operation period. Properly operated electric automatic controls perform quicker, with greater accuracy and more efficiency, than the most conscientious and capable engineer. The somewhat older types of pneumatic controls are not at all satisfactory when compared with the electrical type. The good points of the pneumatic controls are to a large extent offset by high and frequent maintenance costs. However, regardless of type, the control apparatus must be checked and calibrated at regular periods in order to be sure that desired conditions are maintained. When it is necessary to maintain the temperature and humidity within narrow brackets, conditions must be checked at short intervals by the engineer on duty. During normal operating conditions such checks at hour intervals should be sufficient, but during very hot weather, and especially during hours of peak business, checks should be made at shorter intervals. These checks as suggested definitely present the problem of keeping an operating log.

RECORDS

It is suggested that in cases where log record sheets are not provided, the manager of the theatre, with the help of his engineer, develop a form using some or all of the following headings, written in on some type of standard blank ruled paper. The headings may be arranged down the side of the CLEANING BOILERS (answering T. K.): There are several portable vacuum cleaning outfits which have proved very successful in cleaning the tubes of practically all types of low pressure boilers. The general price of this equipment is approximately $125 and some of them run higher. In our experience this was found to be too expensive to buy for just one theatre. I have never attempted to hook up the compressed air of the Johnson Service System to use as a blower in cleaning boiler tubes. I question very much whether your reserve tank is sufficiently large and your compressor sufficiently large to maintain adequate pressure should you pipe this for boiler cleaning purposes. If it is not too expensive it would be very interesting for you to make this connection and we would be very much interested to know how it works out. I have never found it absolutely necessary to clean the tubes of boilers daily. If the tubes of your boiler are sooting up to that extent I am inclined to feel that you are not getting the results from the down-draft type of boiler that brought about that particular design. Soot usually indicates incomplete combustion. The down-draft type of boiler was designed to obtain more perfect combustion than the up-draft.

FOUL ODORS: Go into your theatre some morning early, before it has been aired out or the ventilating fans started, and visit all rest rooms and toilets and janitors' closets. If you detect objectionable odors, certainly something should be done to eliminate the unsanitary conditions causing those odors. The presence of odors is undeniable proof that certain locations and plumbing fixtures are not receiving proper care, or if properly cared for, the wrong materials are being used. The public associates odors with filth, germs and unhealthy conditions, and unfortunately most patrons are so built that rather than complain they just stay away from the theatre.

In deciding upon the proper deodorants and disinfectants to be used, consider: First, safety. Products of a poisonous or caustic character must be used with the greatest care, if used at all. Second, general patron reaction. People don't want theatres to smell like hospitals. Third, demand from the company supplying your material a test according to government specifications—that establishes its true disinfectant qualities. Fourth, economy. This includes the plan of treatment as well as the cost of materials.

The practice of blanketing one odor with a stronger odor is a waste of time and money. To destroy an odor it is absolutely necessary to apply the deodorant or disinfectant directly to the object that emits the odor. Deodorants sprayed into the air or into ventilating ducts are ineffective. With the coming of warmer weather odors and insects including flies, present very serious problems in theatre management and managers will do well to check this situation in their theatres now.

INSPECTIONS: Inspections, regularly and constantly made, are the only way to determine the ever changing conditions of buildings and equipment. Inspections are the only positive means of knowing the actual value of the investment in theatre and equipment. Owners and circuit executives cannot afford to overlook the advantages of a regular inspection program. Inspections at regular intervals will establish a physical history that allows checking actual deterioration against that on the books.

PHYSICAL CHANGES IN TODAY'S PLAN

By ROBERT O. BOLLER

The second of a group of articles by a leading theatre architect on outstanding features of theatre modernization

ANY PROGRESSIVE country demands in its motion picture theatres efficiency and comfort, and to these, as we have previously pointed out, America proposes to add beauty, through a combination or moderne simplicity and sincerity with the traditional ideas of our native land.

Since the introduction of the talking picture, efficiency in the modern showhouse requires perfect acoustics with no confusion of tone, as well as proper projection without distortion. There must be no poor seats from which the patron is asked to view the screen at an impossible angle. The facile circulation of crowds, with conveniently placed exists, should add to the safety of motion picture patrons.

One demand for the patron's increased bodily comfort is being met by the use of roomy and fully unholstered chairs with spring backs. Seats are laid out in wider rows than have previously been used in many houses. Lighting has undergone as great an evolution as any single item in the motion picture theatre, and is now placed with more care than ever before, so that it not only prevents eye strain but does not detract from the screen.

Modern heating, ventilating, and comfortable air-conditioning are taken for granted in practically all well planned theatres today. In cases where the owner's appropriation does not allow all these features at the time he builds or remodels, his architect plans ducts, outlets and conduits for the construction so that the addition of the desired mechanical equipment will present no difficulty at a later date when this expense is justified.

Stairways are planned so that the ascent is easy and gradual, with all long flights entirely eliminated. Women's lounges have been increased to include smoking and poudre rooms. As always, the creation of an attractive general atmosphere throughout the theatre is used to promote enjoyment.

Periodically, we encounter floating propaganda to the effect that motion picture architecture is a mere addition of certain gadgets and frills to a building perfected by engineering skill alone, and the latest choice bit of fancy is that with the introduction of the moderne style the architect's services can be dispensed with, since the simplicity of the new design removes so many features, such as lavish ornament, formerly used in interior and exterior treatment. This notion, where entertained, is essentially a fallacy, for the specialist who successfully plans an efficient building to present the motion picture must be above all things an engineer with a broad knowledge of all phases of this particular type of construction, and in addition he should have the skill, imagination, and background knowledge of architectural history to enable him to use this engineering knowledge to create an artistic building which will lead up to the screen as the supreme and focal point of interest in the entire structure. The physical comforts and efficiency of the mechanical aids in his creations should be so subordinated, so inconspicuous, and so taken for granted that their very presence is forgotten in the patron's concentration upon the drama unfolded upon the screen.

Without careful architectural handling, the moderne style tends to glorify the machine-like aspects of building construction. rather than to induce relaxation. However, the supposition is that the public comes to the motion picture theatre not to study its mechanics, but to enjoy the picture.

Changing ideas in theatrical design we have mentioned in a previous article (BETTER THEATRES for March 9, 1935). Materials for use in exterior and interior remodeling will be discussed later. In addition, certain physical-changes in the building plan have taken place which are noteworthy, as they reflect the trend of the times.

BOX OFFICE AT STREET

Starting from the street, most exhibitors agree that the ideal location for the box office, under existing conditions, is at or near the front property line, whether the ticket vender is housed in the "island" type of inclosure, or one of the attached varieties connecting with the lobby (See Diagram 1.).

THE LOBBY SHRINKS

One of the greatest physical changes in the modern picture theatre plan has taken place in the lobby [Present ticket lobby or vestibule.—EDITOR.] which has shrunk considerably from front to rear, with the space thus gained thrown into a more roomy foyer.

The large lobby in the motion picture theatre is one of the last remnants of the legacy willed to it by the legitimate playhouse. In the early days when the movies were considered a sort of "poor relation" of the stage, the limited lounge space in the theatres of that time would not accommodate all the men who crowded out during intermission to smoke or to gossip about the star of the production, and the lobby was the popular meeting place between acts. The spacious entrance was also useful during advance seat sales, when a long line of customers moved slowly toward the box office while the man behind the window painstakingly "dressed" the house after lengthy consultations over charts with a discussion of the merits and prices of various seats. The ladies, if present, stood or sat in the lobby, well protected from the weather as they waited for their escorts. There was use for a large lobby then.

But when the motion picture became so popular that a whole new industry was founded on its production and exhibition, reserved seats became largely a thing of the past, and ticket vending machines speeded up the process of selling tickets. Since that time the lobby has gradually shrunk to a point where it is now little more than a stormproof warming area, heated by forced indirect heat, to prevent drafts of wintry air from reaching the foyer, or a buffer between summer's torrid heat and the air-conditioned comfort within the auditorium. As the function of the lobby has changed, so have its finishes changed. Wall space is still utilized for the advertisement of coming attractions, but the expensive marbles and tiles formerly used in this floor area are being replaced by recessed spaces for rubber or cocoa mats.

THE FOYER EXPANDS

Following plan in Diagram 1, it will be noted that as the lobby contracts, the foyer [Present main foyer or main lobby.—Editor.] gains the space thus relinquished, (See Diagram 1), and does some enlarging on its own part by pushing the foyer wall, which is the modern version of the old standing rail, toward the stage. This wall, separating the foyer from the auditorium, has been closed in to prevent noises of the street or the waiting crowd from causing tone confusion in the auditorium proper. In many cases the foyer has increased as much as 50% in the past few years, as exhibitors have discovered its usefulness for holding waiting patrons. With the help of lounges it has completely taken over the function of the old time lobby.

Some owners may disagree with this seemingly reckless enlargement of the foyer, protesting the loss of seats at the rear of the orchestra seating. But even in large cities, where seats are at a premium, the exhibitor should remember that he can hold three standees in the space occupied by one seated patron; and in smaller towns where the SRO sign is hung out only on rare occasions, the rear row or two of seating will seldom be missed, and a wider foyer will go far toward making the house more attractive and comfortable. The consensus among owners with whom I have recently discussed this problem seems to be that the comfort of a satisfied patron is more important than increased capacity gained by more or crowded seat rows.

While discussing the area where foyer meets auditorium, it might be mentioned that to meet an exit problem peculiar to many larger communities, additional seats have in some instances been removed at the rear of the orchestra floor, to make room for a cross-aisle connecting with exits at either side of the building. This effectually prevents confusion in trying to hold back an incoming crowd while exiting the outgoing patrons. (See Diagram 1.)

Another possible arrangement for ease in handling crowds is the placing of the lobby at one side of the front, rather than in the center, with the crowd fed in at this point and exited at the opposite side of the building. (See Diagram 2.)

PROSCENIUM WIDENED

Moving forward toward the stage, we find the modern proscenium arch a much wider affair than in the days when the "legitimate" play and vaudeville acts necessitated considerable shift room at either side of the opening. Because of this change, the audience now feels closer to the stage, and a more intimate atmosphere prevails. The painted drops of the past have been replaced by soft draperies and rich fabrics which mask in the screen. The screen is set farther back on the stage, allowing a better view line with less chance for distortion.

CEILING LOWERED

The removal of the old fashioned dome—that bugbear of proper acoustics—and the use of the smaller balcony now advocated, has brought down the auditorium height, with the proscenium opening lowered to conform to this new ceiling level. The sounding board has all but disappeared. The spandril walls which formerly accommodated the boxes of legitimate days and later the dummy pipes of the organ, are now used as a background for full-length drapes or ornamental features. Eventually these, too, will be eliminated as we become more and more freed from the form and bondage of the plan inherited from the "legitimate" theatre.

LARGE BALCONY GOING

The greatest change of all in the modern auditorium has occurred in the second floor layout. Although it may possibly still have a place in congested districts where property values are prohibitive, designers have for years rebelled against the discomfort of the necessary climb to the large balcony, the hazards involved in case of fright, and the fact that the steep pitch raised the booth to a height which created an extreme angle of projection. The overhang of the balcony of excessive size occasionally caused acoustical trouble in the section underneath. Added to these drawbacks is the fact that the patron seated at the rear of the orchestra floor may come and go without having seen more than an under balcony ceiling of doubtful architectural treatment, as this is an area very hard to deal with in a satisfying manner. With the introduction of the huge balcony with exaggerated overhang a few years ago, patrons who formerly liked to sit in any part of the first floor became conscious of a crowded or "shut-in" feeling in this confined under balcony space which sent them up to the front rows of the balcony when the front half of the orchestra seating was filled.

THE SMALL BALCONY

The most radical change in physical arrangement of the modern plan is the greatly reduced balcony. As mentioned before, in larger centers of population, it is sometimes necessary, because of the high cost of front footage, to build vertically instead of using more ground space, but in smaller communities where the price of real estate presents no great obstacle it is far better, and often in the long run more economical, to invest in a larger lot. The desired capacity is then obtained by planning a theatre which will accommodate a greater number of patrons on the first floor, instead of clinging to the older plan which makes up the capacity in a large balcony.

The advantages of the smaller balcony are numerous. As the front retreats toward the rear of the auditorium, the balcony sight lines are dropped and the whole

LIGHTING THE STAGE FOR EYE-APPEAL

By O. T. TAYLOR

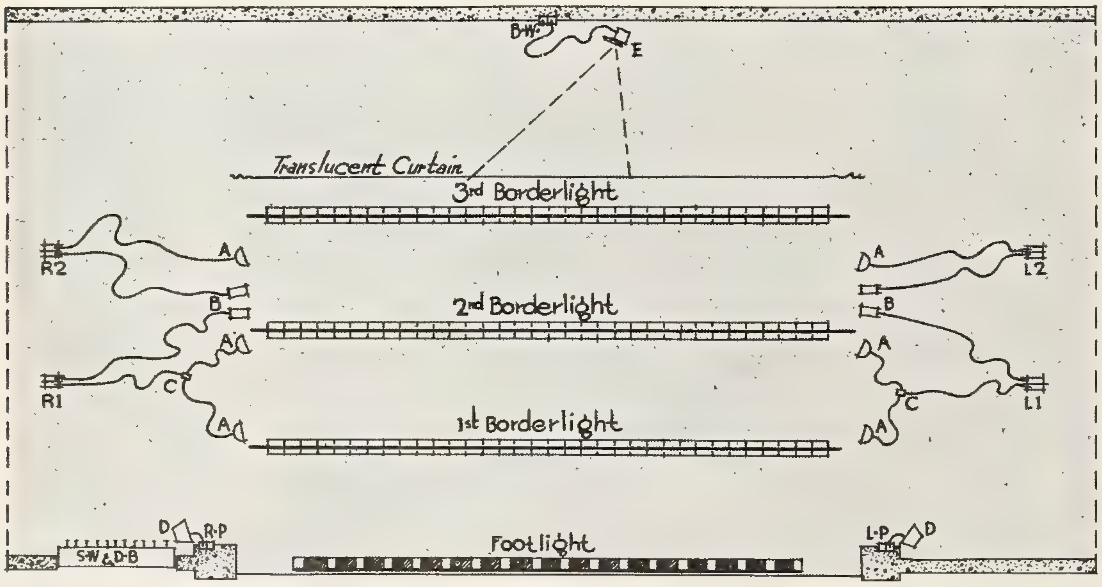
The proper equipment and its use in creating inexpensive interludes in the screen program with local talent

IN SHAKESPEARE'S time, when people went to the theatre only to hear, not to see, the play was the thing. Little attention was paid to costumes. Scenery, if any, was crude. Today theatre patrons look for eye-appeal—they go to see as well as to hear. Those who are satisfied to hear alone need not go to the theatre—they merely tune in on the radio. Today more than ever must the theatre cater to those who look for eye-appeal, for color, for ocular beauty.

The talking picture appeals to the eye as well as to the ear. Improved and mechanically perfected, it will remain, as did the silent picture, the foundation of the motion picture theatre program. But the personal element, the stage show, will still be found a desirable and business building addition. The stage performer "plays up" to his audience; he feels its moods; he joins in its laughter; he acknowledges its show of appreciation with still greater efforts. The audience enters into the spirit of the entertainment, and by applause and laughter, participates in the show.

The desire to participate goes even further than this. Children and young people, especially, want to take active part. They want to sing, dance and play for the entertainment of others and for their own pleasure. Never before has interest been so universally manifest in the dance, in music, in song and drama. All of these arts are now being taught in many of the public schools. Private schools of stage dancing in all of its branches are growing, and increasing in number. Symphony orchestras composed of talented and accomplished performers have supplanted the "silver cornet" bands of years ago. Glee clubs and choruses are as popular as ever. The younger generation, the school boy and school girl of today, accept mechanical entertainment as a matter of course. To them the talking picture is no longer a novelty—they have come to accept it as a regular part of their lives. By way of diversion they plan their own entertainments, their own theatricals, and perform in the school auditorium, and in the theatre when opportunity offers, demonstrating their interest in the arts by serious application, their approval by personal efforts, accepting the mechanical while commending the real.

The progressive theatre manager finds it profitable to co-operate with the dramatic departments of schools, to stimulate interest in the stage by producing prologues and presentations in which the more accomplished local talent is given an opportunity to participate. He will co-operate with dancing schools, dramatic clubs, and musical organizations. He will strive to make his theatre the center of entertainment in his community. To co-operate by merely "putting on the show" will not be found sufficient. The entertainment, be it a local-talent presentation, style show, concert or dance recital, must be staged as carefully and painstakingly as the most pretentious professional offerings. If a drab, poorly lighted stage is detrimental to a professional attraction, it is even more so to local talent. If slip-shod, careless presentation can ruin a professional act, a home-talent attraction can not be expected to prove a success when presented under adverse and difficult conditions.



Schematic plan of lighting equipment on the average stage. Footlight, borderlights and proscenium lights (D) for general illumination. Floodlights (A) and spotlights (B) for localized lighting and effects. Spotlight with effect slide (E), here shown used for rear projection on translucent drop. All circuits controlled through switchboard and dimmers (SW and DB) Three circuits—white, red and blue—on dimmers, direct to footlight and to each borderlight. Two circuits, each right and left, to proscenium pockets (RP-LP), and floor pockets (R1-L1 and R2-L2). One circuit to back wall pocket (BW). Extra lights connected by means of branch connectors (C).

A dance revue, for example, consists principally in eye-appeal—in color and action. The music is incidental. Here lighting plays an important part, and efficient lighting equipment becomes a major requisite.

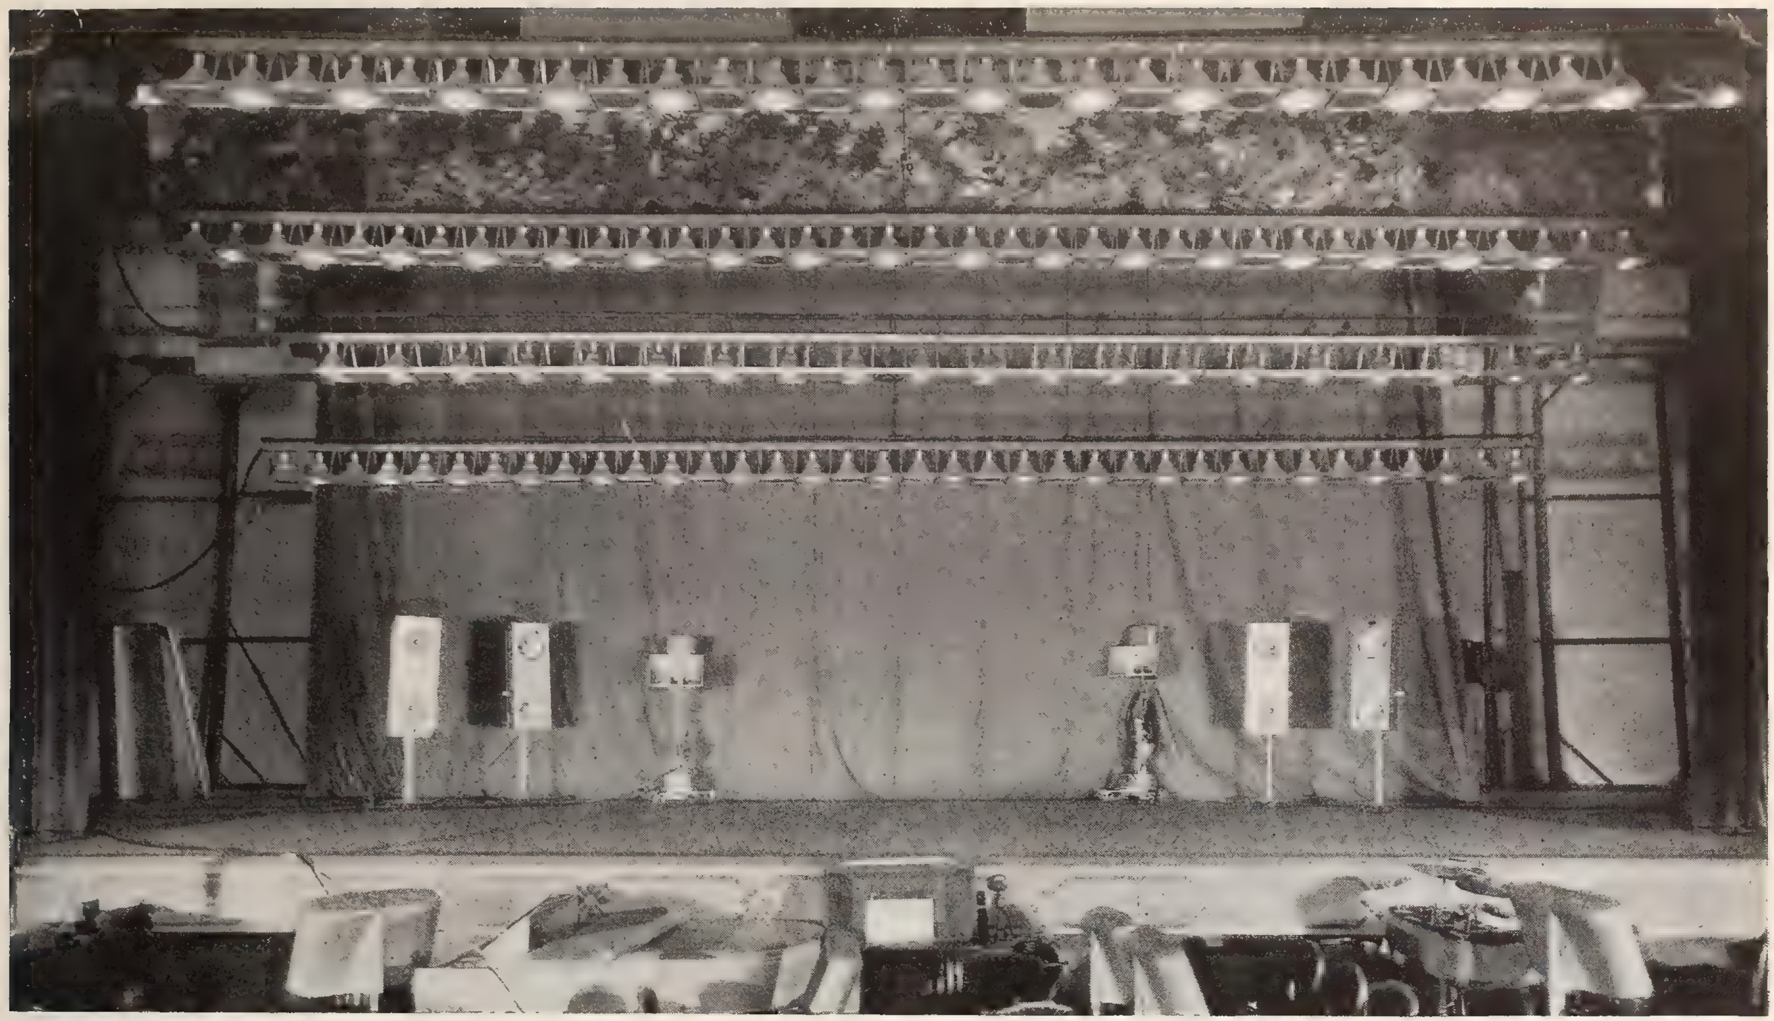
GENERAL ILLUMINATION

Standard equipment for general illumination include footlights, proscenium lights and borderlights. For localized lighting, the more useful devices include floodlights and spotlights, and effect machines, or sciopticons.

In the former group are found many types and styles of border lights, from the simple open trough with exposed white and colored lamps, to the new improved types featuring spun aluminum, or silvered reflector units equipped with 500- to 1,000-watt lamps, and furnished with protective screens—and glass color-slides. Proscenium or strip lights are virtually small borderlights hung in vertical positions. Borderlights are the more important in general illuminating equipment, furnishing light from the natural direction, overhead.

FOOTLIGHTS

The footlights intensify facial expression with a rather strong light from below. Classed as necessary equipment for general illuminating purposes, they are accepted as such more because they are customary rather than because they are necessary. On the presentation stage, where the orchestra is placed on the stage instead of in the pit, the footlights act as an undesirable barrier between the performers and the audience. With the footlights eliminated, and steps or platforms built down from the stage and over the pit, a connecting link is effected



A four-borderlight installation of 500-watt units of spun aluminum reflectors, with screens and glass color slides. The third borderlight is of different construction in that every other reflector unit is eliminated. The two color slides, blue and red, are set in separate grooves, one above the other between the reflector units, and glide lengthwise. The magnetic control, contained in the box at the extreme left of the borderlight, is operated from the switchboard. While in the common borderlight all three circuits—white, red and blue—can be used simultaneously, this type of borderlight is either one of the two colors, or white—it cannot be all three at one time. The advantage, however, is that twice as much light is available in the blue and red circuits when either one is in use. For example: In a common borderlight of 40 units there are 20 white, 10 blue and 10 red units. In the automatic borderlight there are 20 units which are either white, blue or red, as required. Furthermore, one dimmer only is required as there is but one circuit. The common borderlight, however, has so many advantages over the automatic borderlight that it is problematical whether the latter will ever be universally adoped except as an extra bordlight to be used principally for special effects. The double floodlights also have color slides in grooves between the two units. These slides are manually operated by levers.

between the stage and auditorium that can be made a real feature. Some of the most artistic and successful stage productions of recent years have eliminated footlights from their lighting schedule.

This does not mean that footlights, as standard lighting equipment should be dispensed with, but rather that they should be of the concealed or disappearing type that sinks under the stage floor and is covered with a flush panel, making an unobstructed floor surface to the edge of the apron when the footlights are not required.

OPEN-BOX FLOODLIGHT

The most popular, and perhaps most useful, device for localized lighting is the open-box floodlight. This is a reflector or hood made of sheet metal, well ventilated, provided with slide-grooves for color mediums, and wired to accommodate 300- to 1,000-watt lamps. An adjustable support and telescopic stand permit the light to be raised, lowered, and set at any desired angle. The bunch light or olivette is similar in construction to the open-box light, except that a number of smaller lamps are used instead of one large lamp. The bunch-light is sometimes preferred to the open-box light, especially on a small stage, for the reason that the smaller lamps are less expensive to replace, and if one burns out during the performance it causes no appreciable difference in the light.

SPOTLIGHTS

The spotlight is used to direct the attention of the audience to an individual performer or to a special part of the scene, accomplished by means of a strong, concentrated beam of light. The spotlight is fitted with a single condenser lens making it possible to adjust the size of the light beam or spot at will. Spotlights include a wide variety of styles, from the small footlight or "baby spot," which can be plugged in at the footlights or suspended from the borderlight to throw a concentrated beam of light of uniform intensity upon some person or object on the stage, to the large spotlight fitted with color wheel or scenic effect slide. The spotlight, also, has grooves for a color medium.

DIMMERS

Most of the present day stage lighting effects would be impossible without dimmers. The lighting effects and variations made possible by modern dimmer equipment are unlimited. Blending, brightening and dimming are controlled at will from a single point, available for every change of scene. Through dimmers, the volume of light from any group of lamps is controlled and color changes wrought smoothly and gradually. For intimate effects, portable dimmer banks and small portable spotlight dimmers are available.

ACCESSORIES

Pockets, plugs and cable are other essential stage paraphernalia. Stage pockets are provided on the modern stage to permit the "plugging" in of portable lights for general and localized lighting, and for effects, at points close to positions from which such lights are to be operated. The stage pocket is a floor or wall outlet of special construction, requiring a special plug. The average-sized stage should be equipped with at least two double floor pockets on each side of the stage, one double wall pocket centrally located on the back wall, and a pocket on each side of the proscenium opening. Each pair, right and left stage, and back wall pocket, are on a separate circuit and dimmer.

Plugging boxes are used to provide extra plugging facilities and to permit inde-

[The modernization project here discussed is of unusual interest because it represents so completely the application of modern materials and planning to a theatre so antiquated it was, in view of its size, truly of nickelodeon type. What was done to permit continuance of operation is told in the following description prepared by Bennett & Straight of Dearborn, Mich., the architects.—THE EDITOR.]

THE VIRGINIA theatre in Detroit, owned and operated by Joseph G. Portell of the Portell Theatres Company, fronts 42 feet on Hamilton Avenue and has an overall depth of 100 feet. The old front was faced with a white glazed brick, and stucco plaster was applied over metal lath, which in turn formed the recessed portion back of the brick arch. Various signs were serviced by exposed conduit pipe, all of which presented a most antiquated facade.

The old interior contained one small toilet room, a very small office, a 5x8-foot vestibule, a small projection room (which was entirely supported on wood joist construction), and an auditorium, stage and boiler room. The walls in the auditorium were furred plaster and painted, while the ceiling was covered with an unsightly dull gray plastic acoustic material.

The entire front of the present building was removed for the new construction, which is of steel frame and reinforced concrete, therefore fireproof. The facade is of macotta, furnished and manufactured by the Maul Macotta Corporation of Detroit. The general color scheme is worked out in a jade green, while the stencil motifs are carried out in chinese red, blue, light yellow and green. The jade green center portion terminates against a light blue band of a 30-inch depth, while the coping is a dark blue. The light blue band is broken by recalling the yellow and chinese red colors in the form of narrow vertical strips over stencil motifs. The macotta blocks are 4 and 8 inches thick, and each has an edging of stainless steel.

The marquee recalls the colors of the building and consists of a combination of neon tubing and colored bulbs. A chase effect has been accomplished with the bulbs and tubing to render the desired agitation. The soffit has light bulbs concealed by flashed opal glass, which form a series of rectangles. The marquee weighs 9,100 pounds, is 38 feet wide and is supported by cantilever construction of steel. The interchangeable letters are of silhouette type against flashed opal glass, behind which is neon tubing, rendering a flashing four-color effect.

The seating arrangement was not changed by the alteration. The capacity is 500.

PROJECTION

The projection room is entirely of new fireproof construction. The room is 12 feet, 4 inches by 11 feet, 6 inches, and has an adjoining generator and toilet room. There is also a general storage room. The floor is of reinforced concrete construction, and the walls are built up of double 4-inch cinder blocks. An inch space was allowed between the two tiers of block and filled with the old asbestos acoustic material removed from the auditorium ceiling. The ceiling is gypsum plaster on metal lath. By leaving the cinder block walls exposed a more quiet condition has resulted, due to the acoustic qualities of the block. The walls were painted with a sunflex paint.

VENTILATION AND HEATING

At the south side of the stage and over the stage exit is located the fan room. This room was newly constructed with a solid reinforced concrete slab, and walls of cinder block. Fresh air is taken into the building from the same opening as originally. The air is drawn over new copper heating or cooling coils and blown into the auditorium by the re-installed original fan. The auditorium being limited in size, it was necessary only to force the air into the auditorium at the one point on the side of the stage through a diffusing grille. Air is exhausted from the floor level through four ducts and discharged through roof ventilators, or may be recirculated for quick heating, depending upon outside temperature conditions. Three ceiling domes have been constructed which are both ornamental and practical. The domes were

Accounting Systems

BOOKKEEPING systems taking into consideration specific requirements of the theatre have been developed. These may be had either in loose leaf form or in solid book form covering an entire year's operation. They are variously designed to cover daily expenses, assets, daily cash receipts, yearly income tax forms, films used from the various exchanges segregated, dates paid, check numbers, etc. Some systems are designed for all of these items covering a period of two years, others a period of one year.

Acoustical Products and Engineering

PROPER acoustics is today a subject of outstanding importance in motion picture theatres. Talking pictures require specific acoustic conditions.

Almost all problems of poor acoustics may be solved by applying the proper type and amount of acoustical (sound-absorbent) materials on walls or ceiling. The necessary acoustical correction may be calculated upon exact scientific basis, and precise recommendations may be made from a study of plans and interior furnishings, even in advance of construction. Acoustical materials of various types are available and can be quite readily harmonized with any style of interior.

Advertising Novelties

THE thing to be accomplished through the use of advertising novelties, of one type or another is the chief consideration in their selection. Among the popular novelties, however, which have been used by theatres for stimulating matinee business, building up juvenile performances or bolstering business on week nights are balloons, thermometers on which are imprinted pictures of stars, buttons, badges, pennants, confections, toys, etc. A popular children's matinee stunt can be obtained by giving away a variety of novelty toys. These can be had in boxes containing toys ranging in value from 5c to 15c.

Air Conditioning and Cooling Equipment

AIR CONDITIONING in the theatre has already arrived at a degree of importance making it one of the necessary adjuncts of the modern motion picture theatre. Because in the theatre people are closely associated physically in great numbers, and for the purpose of realizing enjoyment, the atmospheric conditions of the auditorium especially must not be dependent upon the weather or on any other chance factor. Enjoyment of the entertainment is closely connected with comfort, and the popularity of the theatre is of course influenced by its effect upon health.

Air conditioning does not only mean facilities for cooling a theatre during the hot months, but involves distribution of fresh, clean air at proper temperatures and pressures, and without drafts in the breathing zone. This may mean that the system should be capable of functioning in connection with the heating apparatus as well as with the cooling facilities.

Local conditions influence to some extent the kind of an air conditioning system required in any specific theatre. Some could achieve comfortable, healthful air conditions with simpler, less costly ventilating equipment. Others require more elaborate systems, perhaps employing mechanical refrigeration.

Anchors for Chairs

THESE ARE KNOWN as Theatre Style Expansion Bolts. In a leading type improved anchor consists of an especially long tapered fin head bolt, conical cup, lead sleeve, washer and hexagon nut. For best results these should be placed into a hole ½-inch in diameter. It is suggested that one use a 17/32-inch diameter drill to allow for wear. The bolt is set head downward into the hole. The setting tool furnished with each order, is a hollow piece of rod, which is slipped over the bolt against the washer, and when driven with a few blows of a hammer, expands the conical cup which spreads out, increasing the diameter of the head of the bolt to the absolute diameter of the hole and thereby allowing no lead to be driven past the head of the bolt, and at the same time expands the lead sleeve into every crevice in the concrete. This feature makes this new bolt hold more, even though the hole in the concrete has been drilled oversize to make up for drill wear.

These bolts come packed 100 to the box, and are completely assembled with the ex-

CORKANSTELE
THEATRE BUILDINGS

A CORKANSTELE theatre building has a steel frame with walls, roof, and floors of pure corkboard insulation. A CORKANSTELE building can be air-conditioned for one-half the cost of other types. Exterior and interior design to meet your requirements. Erection anywhere in six to ten weeks. Total cost compares favorably with other types of well-built insulated structures.

Write for information. We invite correspondence from theatre architects and owners.

ception of the nuts which are placed in a separate container inside the box. Assembling the bolts in this fashion, without the nuts, saves considerable time in installation by eliminating the necessity of removing the nut from each bolt. After the bolt is securely set in the concrete, the hole in the chair leg, is placed over the bolt and the nuts screwed down tight.

These bolts are made in ¼-inch diameter, in 1½-inch or longer lengths. These expansion bolts will hold chairs tight to the floor up to the breaking strength of the bolt, which is in excess of 2,000 pounds direct pull.

Arc Regulators

AS THE NAME implies the arc regulator regulates the voltage at the arc through automatic feeding as the carbon is consumed and the gap between the carbons increases. The result of this automatic action is a steady light on the screen pronounced superior to that which it is possible to produce by hand. The arc control, as it is frequently called, feeds the carbons in an even manner.

Architectural Materials, Decorative

THESE ARE to be obtained in great variety today, owing to additions made through modern chemical and manufacturing technique. The average person is familiar with such decorative architectural materials as marble, terra cotta, etc. Available now are such other products as those made from glass, chemicals and metals. Prominent among those representing the chemical group are Formica and Catalin, which are known as phenolics. They may be obtained in a variety of colors and patterns. Among the glass products, such materials as Vitrolite and Carrara are colored throughout their composition, while in the case of a glass material like Fyrart, the color is painted on the outer surface and baked in.

Materials made of wood or having the appearance of wood are also being widely adapted to modern decorative schemes. Flexwood, for example, is a veneer available in a number of different woods. Flexboard, on the other hand, is of asbestos composition and is therefore fireproof.

Tiles of ceramic type and also of glass are obtainable for a wide variety of decorative uses in the construction of theatres. Glass tiles are particularly effective in the construction of theatre fronts, being well adapted to novel illumination displays in connection with program advertising.

Batteries

BATTERIES FORM important units of sound reproducers and are generally furnished by the manufacturer with the sound apparatus. Non-synchronous devices do not use them, but synchronous methods must have them in order to eliminate the hum of the alternating current. Any standard make of batteries can be used, but it is always best to use the make furnished or recommended by the manufacturer of the sound apparatus.

Another important use of batteries in motion picture theatres is in emergency lighting systems which augment the regular source of light power as a safeguard against breakdown of the local system. They are installed for instant service upon such a breakdown, being placed in operation automatically. Besides giving the necessary power for lighting, they are capable also of affording the projector motors power for some time. Prices depend on the nature of the installation.

Box Offices

KEEPING PACE with advancement in theatre design the box office has been developed from a rather unsightly necessity to a thing of beauty, modernly equipped for speedy and accurate sale of tickets. It is frequently designed in harmony with the design of the theatre and the display frames.

Attractive box offices are now available to exhibitors as separate units, which means that a theatre owner may obtain a modern ticket booth without necessarily remodeling his entire theatre front. These new box offices are constructed of materials designed to give life and color to an otherwise drab entrance. While it has been an accepted tradition that box offices should harmonize with the general architecture and treatment of the theatre exterior, development in box office construction indicate that the separate box office can be fitted suitably into any theatre design.

Brass Rails and Ornamental Bronze

BRASS RAILS have many uses in motion picture theatres—for separating sections of the lobby and foyer for proper control of traffic, as a means of protection at the edge of the balcony, around the orchestra pit, and so on.

Ornamental bronze has extensive use in motion picture theatres, sometimes merely decoratively, as in the form of plaques, but most commonly for a combined utilitarian and decorative purpose, as represented by organ grilles and other gratings, box office wickets, lighting fixtures, display cases, etc.

Carbon Savers

THESE ARE devices designed to permit the use of positive carbon stubs otherwise too short to be adapted to the requirements of the projection arc lamp. The technique of their use consists essentially in the clamping of a copper cap to the carbon stub, then attaching it in proper electrical contact to a rod having dimensions similar to those of the original carbon. In this way carbons may be used up to within an inch of their original length.

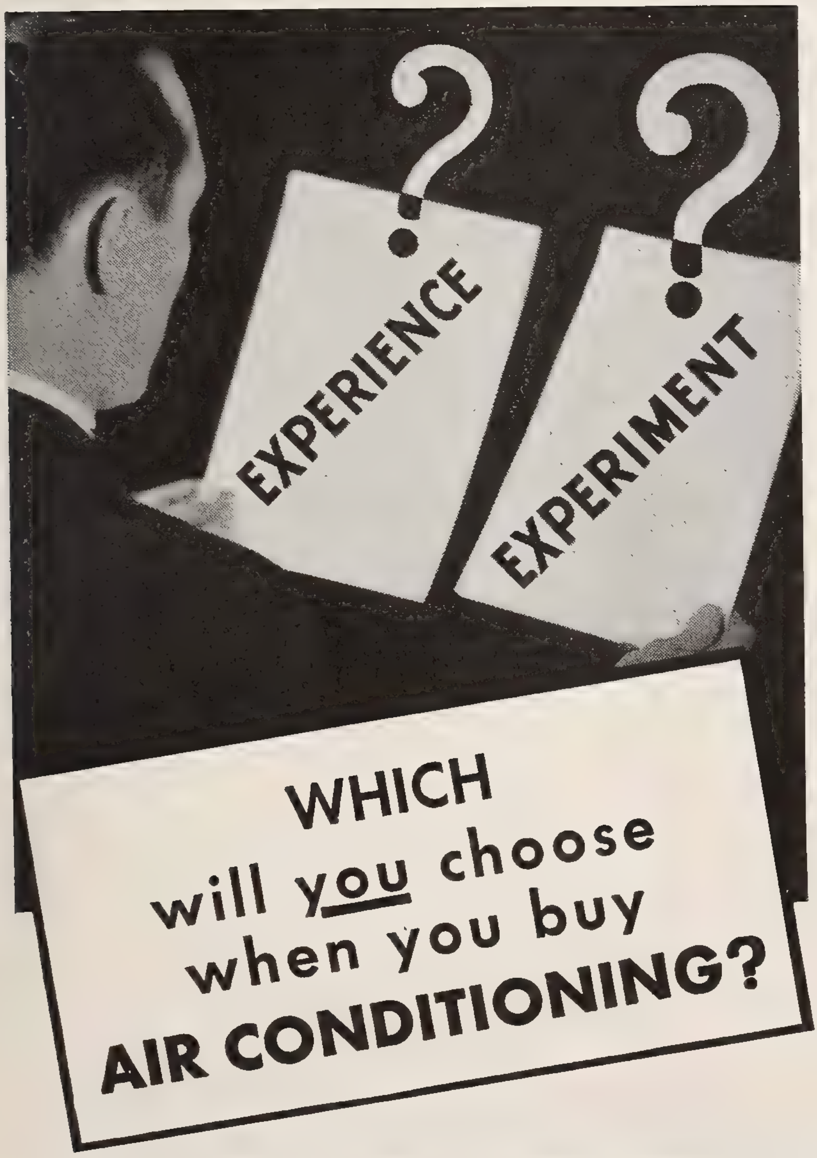
Carbons

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons are required for projection in most motion picture theatres (all except those using Mazda light sources).

Modern projection demands the best in quality in projection carbons today, and this demand is being met by the carbon manufacturers through their scientific and research departments with products that have kept pace with modern progress.

The newer development of a positive carbon of different core composition than previous types, smaller in diameter, and non-rotating, has resulted in the attainment of a much whiter projection light at low and medium amperages than is obtainable from low-intensity and hi-low arcs. This carbon, used with a negative carbon of adapted type, is the source of the so-called "suprex" arc. A report of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, has stated:

"A comparison of the Suprex carbon arc with the high-low arc at a current of from 50 to 60 amperes, showed that the Suprex carbon arc provides a light of equal intens-



WHEN you rent a "feature" or buy a new projector, experience is your guide. It's just as important when it comes to air conditioning. You look to a leader for your box-office attractions. Then look to the leader for your Air Conditioning.

Carrier offers you 20 years of air conditioning experience. Twenty years devoted exclusively to the development and manufacture of equipment designed to control indoor air.

In fact, Willis H. Carrier is the man who developed the fundamental principles of what today is universally accepted as true air conditioning. And the Carrier organization has been the leader in modern theatre air conditioning with hundreds of famous installations to its credit. In variety, scope and number Carrier air conditioning installations exceed all others put together.

The experience which this represents is yours when you call in Carrier. Carrier "application technique" assures an installation that will meet the particular requirements of your theatre whether it be large or small. Before you let your air conditioning contract be sure to see what Carrier has to offer. Address: Carrier Engineering Corporation, 850 Freylinghuysen Ave., Newark, N. J., for full information.

AIR COOLING AND CONDITIONING

MR. THEATRE OWNER: WE REPEAT! NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT

Our previous ads stressed the fact that in 1934 we equipped fifteen (15) theatres in the Chicago Area with Cooling Plants. From present indications, and from theatre jobs already booked, it appears that we will far exceed this total in 1935.

Why not follow suit and profit by the experience of those successful Theatre Operators who have placed their cooling problems in our hands with complete assurance that their needs will be properly engineered and carried out with all guesswork eliminated.

Let us make a survey of your requirements and give you an unbiased opinion of the system best suited for your purpose. This entails no obligation whatever. We are an organization with over thirty years of experience. After all, there is no substitute for Experience.

Carpets

BECAUSE of the hard wear to which theatre carpets are subjected it has been found that there is no saving in the selection of cheap carpets. Generally, floor coverings and carpets should give an impression of stability and foundation upon which one may walk with security.

The following are standard weaves of carpets, listed in order of price from the highest to the lowest:

1. Chenille.
2. Saxony.
3. American Oriental.
4. Winton.
5. Axminster.
6. Velvet.
7. Tapestry.

Any of the grades from Saxony to Axminster, inclusive, have been used successfully in theatres.

Carpet padding used under the carpet not only provides a softer and more comfortable feeling to the foot but reduces friction and adds many years to the life of the carpet by keeping it away from direct contact with the hard floor.

Carpets also should be selected with a view to the acoustics of the theatre.

Chairs, Theatre

CHAIRS should be so chosen and the seating layout should be so planned as to ensure the maximum seating capacity consistent with comfort, safety, facility of entrance and exit, compliance with local or state building requirements, proper sight lines, elevations and other mechanical adaptations and adjustments.

Talking pictures have injected another element into the problem of seating for higher efficiency, i. e., acoustics. The acoustical properties of the theatre chair are now very important, and for sound-equipped houses upholstered seats have become a necessity due to their sound-absorbent quality. Veneer backs and seats are likely to induce sound reverberation of obnoxious character and may easily mar an otherwise perfect acoustical condition.

Chair Covers

IN ADDITION to giving a pleasing and inviting appearance to the auditorium, chair covers serve the practical purpose of coolness and sanitation. An interior otherwise drab may be transformed into a cool, clean, cheerful looking place through their use.

There are several things that should be borne in mind in connection with the use of chair covers. It should be remembered that auditorium and balcony chairs as a rule require two distinct and different styles of covers. The auditorium chair should be equipped with a cover which covers the entire chair back while the balcony chair need only have a quarter back. This is because of the slope on which balcony chairs are placed.

Working from blue prints provides the most satisfactory way of assuring a perfect fit of the cover for each chair.

Chair pads for veneer seats are also obtainable, and there are also special chair materials which are intended to be used as aids to acoustics.

Chair Fastening Cement

CEMENT of this kind is for firmly attaching into the floor the metal pieces to which the theatre chair is bolted. Into a hole made in the floor, the metal piece itself, or bolt for its attachment, is inserted, then around it is poured the melted cement. In about ten minutes this cement hardens and holds the metal piece or bolt firmly in place.

When used in reseating, the old metal piece or bolt is removed, a new one inserted and the cement poured around it.

Change Makers

SPEED AND ACCURACY are obtained at the box office through the use of coin changing machines which in addition to their time saving facilities offer a valuable protection against annoying mistakes in making change to patrons. With the coin changing machines a light touch at the keyboard is all that is necessary to deliver the correct number of coins to the patron who easily scoops them up from a cup at the side of the change maker. Coins may be delivered either from the right or left side and these automatic cashiers as developed for theatres have been improved in recent months until now they are available in sizes which occupy only about 81 square inches of space in the box office.

Changeable Sign Letters

CHANGEABLE SIGN LETTERS are widely used by theatres in the marquee and have proved especially popular, because of the flexible manner in which they permit billing of a current or coming attraction. Changeable sign letters are generally made of cast aluminum with the letter part cut out. When used on the marquee these letters can be moved to make an attractive announcement. They are obtainable in large and small sizes and, in addition, numerals, characters, word plates and spacer panels of the same character are also available.

Composition Flooring

MANY PARTS of a theatre are suited to use of floor covering other than woven materials, and often composition flooring may adequately take the place of expensive tiles, terrazzo, etc.

Composition flooring is made by a number of companies specializing in this product, and all have their own processes. It may be said, however, that the basic materials are cork or rubber, and natural gums.

Composition floors, due to their resilience, afford comfort underfoot, durable and easy to maintain. Manufacturers offer them in a wide variety of colors and designs so that it is possible to harmonize them with the color scheme and decorative plan of any interior. Special designs can be executed in practically all of these materials, thus giving the floor distinction and individuality. Among the areas where resilient composition floors may be used are the following: lobbies, lounges, smoking rooms, dressing rooms, hallways, foyers, executive offices, etc.

Condensers (Lenses)

CONDENSERS are single glass lenses, unmounted. They are made in various diameters from 2¼ inches to 7¼ inches in diameter; the 4½-inch and the 7¼-inch are the sizes used mostly in motion picture work. The condenser is located in the front end of the lamphouse to gather the rays of light from the light source, and bend them, or condense them into a spot of light on the aperture. They are made in different shapes, some being Plano Convex, some Meniscus or Moon shape, and others Bi-Convex.

Focal lengths for motion picture work are usually 6½-7½-8½ and 9½ inches; condensers 5 inches, 6 inches and 8 inches in diameter are usually used for spotlight projection.

Curtain Control Machines

FEW THINGS leave a finer impression on the theatre audience than the smooth and silent opening and closing of the curtain. This is accomplished by curtain control machines which operate automatically. The curtain can be controlled from the booth or from back stage by the simple process of pressing a button.

Curtain control equipment consists of track equipped with cable and snaps to which the curtain is fastened. In opening and closing the curtain may be stopped at any desired point across the stage and may also be reversed at will.

The motor for operating the curtain is usually placed on the stage or it may be placed in the grids or mounted on a platform. This permits the machine, track and curtains to be flied in addition to open from the center.

A type of curtain control machine specially designed for small theatres with tracks up to 40 feet in length, has been put on the market at a price considerably lower than that of the larger machines.

Cutout Machines

THIS IS A DEVICE for making various kinds of exploitation cutouts and lobby and marquee displays. The design for the desired cutout display is traced on ordinary wall board and with this device, the cutout is easily made by guiding the machine over the pattern. A small motor is used and the current from the electric light socket furnishes the power. The machine is convertible into a saw by substituting a saw blade for the chisel to handle harder and thicker materials.

Effect Machines

EFFECT MACHINES are an integral part of motion picture exhibition, especially when a policy of stageshows has been adopted. The effect in lighting which may be obtained are almost phenomenal, are always a source of curiosity and pleasure on the part of the public. There is a wide range of prices on these machines, depending upon the effects desired. There is also a new product which not only produces the usual effects but a wide variety of others.

Electric Measuring Instruments

THE DEVELOPMENT and improvement in theatre lighting and projection have thrown onto the shoulders of the electrician, as well as the projectionist, many responsibilities. At their command are factors which make or break the show. With enormous switchboards to control, emergency lighting plants, motors, generators, arcs, dimmers, transverters, magnetic appliances and many other involved and sensitive electrical instruments, it devolves on the theatre to provide adequate equipment for their correct operation. In the list of necessary measuring instruments are ammeters, voltmeters, vacuum tube testers and the like.

Film Cabinets

THERE ARE various types of film cabinets having storage capacity from three to twelve reels per unit of various forms of construction so that the reel is elevated or brought within grasp by the opening of the cover. They are generally of double metal wall construction, so that should one reel become ignited in the cabinet, the others are insulated from this heat, and thus saved from any damage. Some of them are constructed so that they can be ventilated to the outside by means of piping.

Film Rewinders

THIS DEVICE is used for rewinding films after they are run through the projectors, and are made in two general patterns, the bench and fire-proof enclosed type. The bench or open rewind is made in one piece types with the dummy and geared end complete in one unit, and others are made so that they can be clamped to a bench or shelf, while some are permanently fastened by means of bolts. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings.

The enclosed rewinds are made in various patterns, both hand drive and motor drive models. The motor drive type is generally automatic in its operation, stopping at the end of the film or should the film break. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings. Some motor drive types also have multiple speed ranges and accommodate either one- or two-thousand-foot reels. One type also has a detachable grinding and polishing attachment.

Fire Prevention for Projectors

IMPORTANT equipment has been developed which it is said definitely prevents a film fire in the projection machine. This equipment is a safety control device, that is easily installed and which is operated on the regular line voltage. The main control unit and dowser are mounted on the cone of the lamphouse and act as the main light cut off, taking the place of the regular dowser. The dowser is operated from five distinct points of contact, covering every avenue through which a fire could start in the projector while it is in operation or at a standstill with the film in it. All contact points are very sensitive, and the dowser is instantaneous in its action, yet does not depend upon springs to actuate it.

Fireproof Shutters

AGAIN ENTERING into lower insurance rates are fireproof shutters for the projection both. Such equipment in the modern theatre has placed the patrons beyond the danger line, so to speak. These safety shutters are so constructed that they drop when film breaks. Certain designs work automatically, while others operate through a release effected by the projectionist. The list price of the shutters range from $9.00 up, depending on size.

Generators, Motor

MOTOR-GENERATOR sets are used almost exclusively for converting a.c. supply into d.c. for the projection arc. They consist of a motor of suitable type for the service available as to voltage, phase and frequency and of the proper horsepower, connected through a coupling or on a common shaft, with a d.c. generator armature. This latter may be of a size to furnish from 15 to 600 or more amperes, and at a voltage of from 80 to 100. Ballast rheostats are used to drop this voltage to that of the arc, which varies from about 50 to 70 volts, depending upon its character. These generators are designed to hold their voltage very steady regardless of load and should be quiet operating and free from vibration.

The above describes the Multiple type unit which operates any number of arcs up to its full capacity in multiple and is almost exclusively used in this country. Where only two arcs of the same amperage are burned alternately, as on two projectors, the Series type with its higher efficiency can be used and is still sold largely outside the United States.

Heating Systems

THERE ARE a number of types and arrangements of theatre heating systems, each designed to fit the individual building. One of the systems is known as the fuel-to-air method whereby the transmission of the heating effect from the fuel is obtained without the intermediate processes of transmission through piping and radiators. The volumes of outdoor air entering the system are heated quickly and uniformly, producing comfortable heating and invigorating ventilation in all seasons of the year. The heating units most generally used to warm the incoming air are commonly known as unit heat generators.

Horn Lifts and Horn Towers

A HORN LIFT is an automatically controlled electrically driven elevator to raise and lower sound horns to their proper places behind the screen. They operate on the hydraulic, cable and drum and screw lift principle, and when the stage is needed for acts, the lift lowers the horn down under the stage. The portion of the stage flooring directly above the lift is attached to the lift, becoming a part of it, and any stage setup located over the lift goes up with it and is ready for use the instant the lift returns to the low level.

Horn towers are structural steel towers on which the horns are fastened. These towers are generally on rubber-tired, ball bearing casters so that they may be moved about silently to properly locate the horns behind the screen. When the horns are not in use the towers can be pushed out of the way.

Lamps, Exciter

THE PURPOSE of exciter lamps is to supply the light energy which actuates the photoelectric cell. It is located in the sound head in such adjustment that its beam of light rides upon the sound track, transmitted or interrupted according to the variations of the track. It is a basic element in the mechanism of sound-on-film reproduction and should be durable and precisely adapted to the particular design of the apparatus used.

Lamps, High Intensity

HIGH INTENSITY projector lamps are of two types—reflector type, and condensing-lens type. Their selection depends on the size of the theatre and other local factors. The condenser-lens type (so-called super-high intensity) is generally operated at from 115 to 130 amperes. The reflector type is generally operated at from 70 to 80 amperes. Lamps in the high intensity class are of the larger type or represent other conditions requiring a higher degree of screen illumination.

Lamps, Incandescent, Projection

INCANDESCENT LAMPS for theatre motion picture projection are usually of the low-voltage type for added efficiency and greater source concentration. They cannot be used on the ordinary lighting circuit without a transformer or regulator. The 900-watt, 30-ampere, T-20 bulb lamp usually provides acceptable results on good screens up to 16 feet wide at throws not greater than about 100 feet.

There are also available 1,000-watt prefocus base, and 1,500-watt bipost base, 100-120 volt, T-20 bulb lamps employing the biplane type of filament construction, which is inherently of higher cost but makes possible the requisite source concentration at ordinary circuit voltages and thus saves the cost of auxiliary apparatus. They are preferred where operating schedules are relatively short, and for projectors of the semi-portable type. Screen results equal or surpass those from the 900-watt lamp. The 1,500-watt lamp requires forced ventilation.

For portable 35-mm. projectors there are the 500-watt monoplane filament, and the 750-watt and 1,000-watt biplane filament lamps in short T-20 bulbs with medium prefocus bases. All are of the 100-120 volt type. The 750-watt and 1,000-watt lamps require forced ventilation.

For stereopticon projection there are the 500-watt, short T-20 bulb, medium prefocus base lamp; and the 100-watt, long T-20 bulb mogul prefocus base lamp. Both of the 100-120 volt types employ monoplane filaments.

Lamps, General Lighting

THE MANY TYPES of lamps available today make it possible to have light of just the proper quantity and quality. The types of lamps used to a great extent influence the cost of lighting. Lamps themselves vary in cost. Special, expensive types are often used where the more standard types would be satisfactory. Poor and inefficient lamps use up energy and do not give the light they should. Old, dirty and blackened lamps waste energy without a proper return. Lamps of the wrong voltage give too little light, or burn out to quickly.

Incandescent lamps are usually designated by wattage, voltage, bulb shapes and diameter. The diameter of the bulb is given in eights of an inch.

Colored lamps are available with inside spray finish and with natural colors in several sizes. The natural-colored lamps are specially desirable for indirect cove lighting; the inside-colored lamps for exterior displays and where the lamps themselves are seen.

Spotlight and floodlight lamps have filaments that are as concentrated as practicable, and in the prefocus types, placed very accurately with respect to the base. The lives of these lamps are 200 and 800 hours, respectively—the shorter the life the greater the light output for a given wattage. In general, the lamps have round bulbs with wattages of 250, 400, 500, 1,000, 1,500, and 2,000.

Lamps, Low Intensity

THIS CLASSIFICATION is rather general, inasmuch as it refers to all types of projection lamps designed for theatres requiring light of lower intensity. Lamps in this class are Low Intensity, Hi-Low, Alternating Current Reflector Type and Suprex (the latter using alternating current carbons with direct current). All of these lamps are of the reflector type. The operating amperage for these lamps ranges from 15 to 80.

Lamps, Suprex

THESE ARE projection lamps designed for the suprex d.c. arc, which gives, through the use of a non-rotating carbon of specific composition, a much whiter projection light at low and middle amperages than is obtainable with low-intensity and hi-low arcs. At 45 amperes, the d.c. arc has a light intensity as high as 7,000 lumens, as much as hi-low develops at from 70 to 80 amperes, while the low-intensity arc has a light intensity of only about 2,000 lumens at 25 amperes.

Lenses

FOR MOTION PICTURE theatre service there are projection lenses and condensing lenses. The latter are also used in projection but are placed in the lamphouse and condense the rays to a spot on the aperture. Projection lenses are objective lenses placed in the projector head.

The prime requirement of a projection less is to give a bright, well defined picture on the screen without any distortion or color rays. These lenses are made in four sizes: Eighth, quarter, half and three-quarters (diameters, respectively, of 1 11/16, 1 5/16, 2 25/32 and 3¼ inches).

The one-eighth and one-quarter sizes are furnished in equivalent focii of two inches E. F., to eight inches E. F. The half-size is furnished in equivalent focii of four and a half inches E. F. to ten inches E. F., and the three-quarters in equivalent focii of from six inches E. F. to ten inches E. F. There is also procurable a bifocal projection lens with a range of from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in focal length, designed to eliminate the change of lenses in shifting operation from sound to silent films, and vice versa. All the sizes named are standard. Focal lengths are determined by the size of the picture desired.

Lifts and Elevators for Orchestra, Organ, Stage and Horns

WITH THE ADVANCE in showmanship many new types of equipment have become factors in motion picture presentation and its supplementary entertainment. Not the least of these new factors are the lifts and elevators which play such an important part in the success of programs today. The modern theatre has this equipment.

Lighting Control Equipment

THE MODERN theatre with a well balanced and effective lighting system, has made many demands on the manufacturers of lighting control equipment. Elaborate color effects must be possible and to change the lighting and gradually merge the light from one color to another without attracting the audiences a very flexible control system is required. Even the small control systems permit the operator to produce hundreds of color shades.

Specify Lumotrons

With every Lumotron Photo-Electric cell you get "matched - uniformity," an exclusive quality developed by General Scientific Corporation projection engineers. The sound output of every Lumotron cell is carefully measured. By using Lumotrons you eliminate frequent amplifier adjustments, as well as any possible differential in sound intensity when fading between projectors. And you can be sure of ample protection against ionization, because every Lumotron is checked against ionization up to 125 volts.

Ask your supplier for Lumotrons and use them always for perfect sound.

Pictures Equal Lens

The quality of the pictures on your screen is actually equal to the quality of your lens. Your next projection lens should be a Graf Super-Lumo. Constructed under Graf patents, it gathers all the light, giving maximum illumination on the screen.

Lighting Fixtures and Decorative Lighting

WHILE lighting fixtures constitute one of the outstanding features of the theatre today their style and application are obviously best determined by the individual treatment of the theatre and its requirements. It is significant, however, that a number of leading manufacturers have established special departments to give time and attention to the subject of theatre lighting and fixtures.

Lighting and Power Plants

EMERGENCY lighting plants are equipment designed to furnish power for supplying illumination and operating the show in the event of a failure of the local power supply.

Emergency lighting plants are made in several types such as the gasoline engine type, water turbine type, motor generator and battery type. In the case of the motor generator type several sources of power are provided to meet every contingency, which, together, form an interlocking type of protection.

Lights, Spot

ARE MADE in arc and incandescent types for use on stage—in the booth—in cove lighting, and for head spotting. Most spotlights on the market can be used for spot lighting and for full flood. The arc types are made in sizes of 3 ampere up to 150 ampere. They come complete with stand and attachment cord and connector. Within the last year, the high intensity spot has appeared. It is an adaptation of the high intensity lamp to spot and flood lighting.

The incandescent spotlights are in sizes of from 250 watt to 2,000 watt, The sizes usually used are 250, 400, 500 and 1,000 watt.

The small head spots of 250 watts are used for cove lighting or spotting the head of a singer or organist. The incandescent spotlights come either with floor standard or pipe hangers for border lighting batons.

In stage work spotlights are frequently banked one above the other on a stand and used for flood-lighting from the wings. Prices range from $12 to $500.

Lobby Display

AN ATTRACTIVE lobby is a boon to business. To conform to the beauty in lobby decoration, colorful and attractive lobby displays have been created. Automatic poster displays in polished bronze are constructed for convenient display of standard stills and photographs, featuring current and coming attractions. Art glass today is advantageously used, making a striking and effective display. Many artistic endeavors have been directed toward the lobby with the result that today few shoddy lobbies greet the patron.

Lobby Display Frames

LOBBY ADVERTISING is an obviously effective business stimulant and in this connection the use of lobby display frames easily ranks first in appearance. With the effective display frames now available it is possible not only to obtain a maximum advertising value from their use but also to add materially to the appearance of the lobby. The front of the theatre may now be "dressed up" in excellent fashion with these frames. In the case of new theatres it is common practice to design lobby frames in conformity with the architectural style of the house.

Marquees

USE OF MARQUEES BY motion picture theatres is general. They serve a number of practical purposes. They offer theatres an excellent advertising medium while giving to the house an attractive and inviting entrance. During inclement weather they offer protection to waiting patrons.

Marquees are usually constructed of sheet metal and may be obtained in a variety of designs. They are furnished with glass roof or with steel ceiling and metal roof. Numerous interesting standard designs have been developed by marquee manufacturers especially for theatre use. These are easily installed and are shipped to theatres in convenient sections. Suggestions for attractive designs are available. Inquiries should be accompanied by approximate measurements of the front of the building where the marquee is to be used.

Microphones

MICROPHONES in theatres have a variety of uses, ranging from stage program presentations, regular and emergency announcements, to reports to patrons on sports and other timely items of interest. In most cases microphones can be added to the amplifying equipment used for sound-on-film service with little accessory equipment.

Several types of microphones are available. Carbon button and condenser types are most suitable and the least expensive for all-round theatre use. Although carbon microphones may be obtained in both single and double button types, the double button type is usually recommended for casual use in theatres as it gives clearer reproduction than the single button model and costs only slightly more.

Condenser microphones are quiet in operation and are preferred for use in stage productions. Although the condenser microphone is more expensive than the carbon button type, condenser microphone reproduction is free from the slight hiss, known as carbon noise.

Organs

ASIDE from detail considerations, the important thing to bear in mind in the purchase of a theatre organ is whether or not the instrument is designed and built to meet theatre requirements. Demands upon an organ to be used in a theatre and in a church, for example, are obviously at variance. The result is that organs for theatres are built along exacting lines, expressly for the work they are intended to perform.

Perfumes and Perfumers

DISAGREEABLE odors are unfortunately a usual concomitant of crowds, particularly in such compact enclosures as the motion picture auditorium. These odors may be effectively eliminated by the use of highly aromatic perfumes, method of diffusion is the simple one of which are diffused throughout the air. One placing the perfume in decorative cones, resembling a vase, at various places along the walls. These cones are made of clay and readily absorb the perfume, which may be said to saturate the cones, and the odor radiates from the latter to quite a large area beyond.

Another widely used method is to spray the air with a perfume at suitable intervals.

A trifle less simple and perhaps more effective method is that of placing perfume in a disseminator located at the ventilating fan so that the evaporated liquid or solidified perfume will carry its fragrance through the auditorium along with the fresh air.

Plastic Paint

PLASTIC PAINT is extensively used for decorating auditorium walls, lobbies and foyers of theatres. With this paint almost any sort of rough texture can be developed from the most refined stipple to the shaggiest Spanish palm finish. Sand swirl, two-tone and other effects can also be obtained in a number of colors and color combinations.

Plastic paint comes in the form of a white powder. Before application it is mixed with water; sometimes, also, with coloring matter. It may be tinted with dry colors before application, or the plastic paint may be sized and then glazed with an oil glaze tinted with oil colors. It may be applied on any type of surface and when thus properly applied and treated it can be washed from time to time with soap and water.

Pop Corn Machines

POP CORN MACHINES offer an excellent opportunity for theatres to increase their revenue, according to information from exhibitors who are operating them. One exhibitor states that in one week he cleared $59 with a corn popper in his lobby. Figures provided by another exhibitor state that in six months he took $967.91, out of which his expenses were $296.94, leaving a profit of $670.97. One theatre circuit in the east is using pop corn machines at five of its houses.

Pop corn machines may be had in a number of sizes and styles, ranging from small models to elaborate machines which also include peanut warming facilities.

Portable Projectors

PORTABLE PROJECTORS are motion picture projection machines which are designed to be set up only temporarily and not for permanent installation in a regular theatre, as a rule, although used there. They are particularly adapted for use in schools, clubs, etc., and may be obtained for installation in connection with leading makes of sound equipment or with sound apparatus built in. There is a model with a heavy pedestal for permanent installation.

Semi-portable projectors are standard motion picture machines which may be utilized for either temporary or permanent installations. That is to say, these machines, while sturdily constructed, are comparatively light in weight and may be moved from rooms or buildings easily. Sound apparatus specially constructed for portable machines is available. Also available are sound-on-film unit projectors of portable type for both 35-mm. and 16 mm. film.

Poster Projectors

THESE MACHINES are projectors operated similarly to stereopticons, except that instead of employing transparent slides, matter printed on opaque surfaces can be projected upon a screen. They are used in the making of posters for lobby displays and similar purposes. The artist projects a drawing or photograph from a press sheet or other prepared advertising matter, upon the surface on which he is to make his own drawing, controlling the image size by moving the projector nearer to or farther from the objective. The system of mirrors and lenses in the projector gives an image of the same direction and proportions as those of the original. The artist then merely traces along the projected lines, filling in the colors as indicated.

Poster projectors usually allow the use of original subjects as large as six or seven inches long by five or six inches high. Subjects larger than that can be projected and copied in sections.

Projection Booths and Equipment

THE PROJECTION room, or booth, because of the fact that it is one of the nerve centers of the motion picture theatre, is becoming standardized. Not in size, naturally, but in general construction, and the high standard of equipment, etc. The projection room, because of the very nature of the purpose it serves, must be fireproof and ideally ventilated.

There are many things to keep in mind in the purchase of projection room equipment. Certain parts of this equipment must conform to the building codes, it must be practical, it must satisfy the projectionist and it must lend itself to better projection.

The design and layout of the projection room should have the careful attention of the architect or builder at the time the plans for the theatre are being prepared.

The desirable projection room may vary in size but to accommodate two projectors, it should be at least 15 feet by 10 feet, with 12 foot ceiling. This size will also care for a spotlight and slide dissolver. By all means toilet facilities should be provided and a shower bath is highly desirable.

Projection Machines

PROJECTORS HERE referred to are the standard non-portable machines designed for permanent installation, usually in theatres. It is the expressed belief of theatre owners and projectionists that practically ideal projection is possible with equipment available at present, provided it is in the hands of a competent operator. Modern projection machines are the result of many years of improvement and development to meet the ever-growing requirements for the best possible screen results.

All late model standard projectors are either constructed specially for sound picture projection or are readily adapted to any make or model of sound apparatus, either for sound-on-disc or sound-on-film.

Projectors, Advertising

EXPLOITATION IN THE theatre lobby by means of an advertising projector using trailers from current or forthcoming attractions is a means of theatre publicity that is growing in popularity. Projectors for this purpose are available together with a trailer service. By means of recessing the screen daylight projection has been made possible. Continuous and automatic action is a feature of many of the advertising projectors now available. They may be had with or without facilities for sound.

Public Address Systems

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEMS provide a means of electrically amplifying the voice. The microphone picks up the ing to the original sound waves, these "words" are carried through amplifiers to the speakers, where they are transformed into their original physical form as sound waves, only now of much greater intensity than when merely created by the human vocal mechanism. Public address systems are used principally in the theatre for announcements, though it is adaptable to many related purposes. Microphonic attachment may be made at several points in the system, making its function available to the manager in his office as well as backstage.

Rectifiers

RECTIFIERS are devices for converting alternating current to direct current for both the projection arc and for the sound system. Some employ Tungar tubes as the essential rectifying agency. Others are of the copper oxide (dry) type. Rectifiers used to transform current for the sound system are much smaller than those supplying current for the arc, and are also equipped with filters.

Reels

THERE ARE VARIOUS types of these made, from the 10-inch, as used by film exchanges, to the accurately constructed type used on the projector machines. Some have machine embossed sides, wire welded sides, and still another type has die cast sides. Most of the types offered for use on the projectors have large diameter film hubs, which greatly aid in relieving the strain on the projector as well as giving more even take-up tension.

Rheostats

AN IMPORTANT item of projection equipment is the Rheostat. A rheostat may be described as a resistor provided with means for varying resistance (opposition). The resistance may be varied by having a contact lever or slider moved over a number of stationary buttons or segments between which sections of the rheostat are connected, by compressing a number of carbon or graphite disc or parts, by using a number of levers or knife-switches for cutting in and out resistance.

Safe, Box Office

THIS IS A SAFE anchored inside the box office into which the cashier may drop silver coins and bills as received from patrons beyond what is needed for purposes of making change. This type of safe has been developed as a result of the many "stick-ups" of theatre box offices in which the robber has obtained receipts running into several thousand dollars. It is widely used in several other trades, the idea, in brief, being that with this type of safe in the box office a theatre is likely to lose only the amount which it is keeping exposed for making change.

Box office safes are made of steel and provided with a slot into which surplus receipts are placed as received, or are equipped with a chute through which the surplus receipts may be dropped. Safes of this type usually make possible the lowest rates of burglary insurance.

Schools

THEATRE MANAGEMENT and theatre organ playing are no longer hit-or-miss propositions. Both have become highly specialized. The theatre manager must be trained in administration duties, advertising and technics, and the organist must be able to dramatize the music to accompany the screen attractions. So valuable do chain organizations consider the trained man or woman that they are demanding those persons who have become skilled through graduate work in schools.

Screens

THERE ARE FOUR types of motion picture screens. This classification is based on the character of the finished surfaces, as follows: Metallic, Matt White, Beaded and Translucent (or rear projection). The latter type is not in general use, and for the purposes of this description will require no further mention.

Sound screens are of two types, porous and perforated. A porous screen is one on which a reflective surface is built on a loosely woven fabric, leaving the openings in the cloth unobstructed to permit the passage of sound. A perforated screen surface is applied on a closely woven fabric, first making an opaque sheet, which is then perforated with minute holes to permit the passage of sound.

Screens should be selected largely by the width of the theatre and its projection equipment or light source.

Screens are again classified as to their reflective properties into three general classes: Diffusive (matt white), semi-diffusive metallic (silver or gold fibre), and directive (beaded). The white is the only one of the above types which could be used satisfactorily in a theatre of any size, and only then with high intensity projection. Because it diffuses the light almost equally to all the seats, it is a necessity in the extra-wide auditoriums. Due to their higher reflective properties, the metallic and beaded surfaces will produce satisfactory brilliance and detail when used in conjunction with the more economical projection units, making a substantial saving in current. Since the beaded screen has the highest reflective surface, it should be used with incandescent projection lamps.

Screen Masks

LARGER SCREENS HAVE come into rather general vogue recently, due to the elaborate type of productions now being produced which, with the use of special lenses have enabled theatres to present outstanding scenes with greater effect and scope. The many opportunities to use the full screen to give added value to important scenes have brought about the development of the screen modifier, or mask which, automatically operated, permits framing of the screen at any desired size. The screen modifier, or mask, was first used in connection with sound-on-film to compensate for the sound on the edge of the film. This equipment is now being used in many other ways, especially in achieving ingenious opportunities for titles, announcements and special trailers.

Screen Resurfacing

TO INSURE proper screen illumination without increasing power consumption or incurring the risk of glare, the screen surface should be kept as reflective as possible. In spite of regular cleaning routine, however, screens gradually get soiled, and in instances in which it is not felt that a new screen is warranted, one has recourse to resurfacing.

Exhibitors have used a flat white paint to resurface their screens. However, due to the greater necessity today for an immaculate screen, the practice of resurfacing is increasing, and as a result specific materials and expert methods are available. One of these materials is sprayed on, after

Seat Patching Materials

A SMALL HOLE—made by accident or wear—soon becomes a big tear when nervous fingers find it. Chair seats may be kept in repair and worn or maliciously damaged coverings quickly made usable with quick patching kits now available.

Recent development in fabric glues has made possible these patching kits that may be used by even inexperienced help.

Shutters, Metal Fireproof

THE PORT SHUTTER is made entirely of metal with a metal sliding suspended on a cord in which is connected a fusible link. In case of fire, the fusible links melts and the fire shutter automatically drops over the port hole in the booth. They are made to fit standard openings, such as projection port holes, stereopticon port holes and spotlight port holes. Prices range from $9 to $25.

Signs, Directional

SIGNS MAY be considered in two general groups—those that are illuminated and those which are etched on metal or wood without illumination. The illuminated signs, which are highly artistic in finish and construction, are made to read either from one side or both. The lettering in the signs is chipped into the glass and silvered, making it easy to read in daylight. The letters glow in a soft greenish color. Illumination is accomplished with 25-watt showcase lamps. Signs are fitted with lamps, cord and plug ready for attaching to light socket.

Signs—Electric

MOTION PICTURE theatres are extensive users of electrical advertising, the usual electric signs at some of the metropolitan houses being the most elaborate of their kind. Since the sign must necessarily be made with consideration for the size of the theatre facade and facilities for anchoring it, the matter is usually given individual consideration, and sketches prepared for the specific building to which the sign is to be fastened.

Slides

SLIDER ARE DIVIDED into four different classes: Song slides, advertising slides, announcement slides and special advertising slides. Song slides have come into vogue within the last few years.

A patented slide, having a paper frame and a composition transparency flexible enough to be placed in a typewriter, permits the management to prepare its own slides, at a moment's notice if need be, and is thus particularly useful for special announcements.

Sound Equipment, Complete

MUSIC and sound reproducing devices are of two types, synchronous and non-synchronous. The latter use phonograph records, which are cued to the picture. The majority of these machines, which have from two to four discs for the records, are operated from the pit or other location in view of the screen. The synchronous type, however, is operated from the projection booth, employing disc records or film recordings made in conjunction with the picture.

Among the developments in motion picture sound is the increase in the employment of the sound-on-film method of reproduction. Experiment has eradicated many of the disadvantages of this method and increased its advantages.

Speakers and Horns

HORNS AND SPEAKERS used in sound installations are air columns with a belled outlet, or magnetic or electro-dynamic cones (in baffles or horns), used to project the sound waves created by the amplified electrical pulsations. They are attached to amplifiers and usually number two or more, depending on the size of the theatre.

Stage Scenery and Draperies

DRAPERIES ARE an important feature of theatres today. They accent color and give softness and richness to an interior. Architectural lines of doorways and archways are usually distinctively hard and draperies are the mediums by which these lines are softened to give a pleasing appearance.

Switchboards

CONTROL OF LIGHTING through the use of switchboards makes possible the wonderful lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres today. Switchboards for this work are built in many capacities. Scenes for unusual lighting effects may be pre-selected by such a board and the theatre flooded with appropriate lighting scheme at a proper cue by the simple method of throwing a switch. Lighting control systems are being adopted by theatres of lesser size that heretofore have considered such installations as being only for the larger metropolitan houses.

Manufacturers of this type of equipment are glad to furnish engineering service and consult with exhibitors and architects on various phases of these lighting control systems.

Switches

NEVER in the history of the theatre has electrical equipment played as vital a role as it does today. From projection room to stage and to manager's office, electricity to a large extent runs the show. Temperature Control Apparatus

TEMPERATURE control apparatus of the automatic variety can be installed on any type of heating, ventilating or air-conditioning system to maintain desired conditions. Apparatus sensitive to temperature, either inside or outside, or relative humidity, or pressure will operate instantly or with time lag, valves and dampers, or start and stop oil burners. There are two main classes of equipment, pneumatic and electrical. Pneumatic equipment requires a small compressor, a storage tank for the air which operates the various units, and the necessary pipes or tubing connecting the units. Electrical equipment requires either a low or high-voltage source of power and wire connecting the various units to be operated.

Upholstery Material

USE OF SOUND absorbing upholstering on theatre seats has come into popular demand since the advent of sound pictures. A popular fabric used in this connection is mohair, which combines beauty with important sound properties. Upholstering material of this nature may be obtained in a variety of colors and executed in interesting patterns and designs. It is claimed for this material that it will not fade, does not mat down, and can be kept fresh and clean with little effort. Use of mohair for upholstering is said to produce a marked elimination of reverberations in the theatre auditorium.

Usher Signal Systems

THE USHER SIGNAL SYSTEM provides a sending station at each aisle, equipped with numeral push buttons that give any total of seats that aisle might have. The usher registers on this station the number of vacant seats available, which information is transmitted to the floor or head usher, depending on the size of the theatre. In the larger houses the floor usher relays the information to the head usher. The head usher sends total of all aisles and floors to the doorman who directs the people to the different sections of the house where the vacant seats are waiting.

Vacuum Cleaning Equipment

APPARATUS FOR cleaning carpeting and fabrics by suction is to be considered more or less necessary for proper maintenance of the theatre. Brooms and brushes are useful, but cannot be considered substitutes for suitably designed vacuum cleaning equipment, which not only cleanses more effectively, but does so with less time and labor.

The unusually large and elaborate theatre is sometimes best served by stationary equipment with pipes leading to the various levels, where the hose is attached. To the average theatre, however, unit cleaners of heavy-duty type with a high degree of portability are best adapted.

To make little odd jobs of cleaning easier, as in small offices, lounges, etc., it is frequently worth while to augment this larger equipment with a cleaner of the common domestic type.

Ventilators

PROPER DISTRIBUTION of air in the theatre is an important feature of correct ventilation. One of the methods of achieving this is through the use of ventilators located in the auditorium floor.

NEW RECTIFIER

● A copper oxide rectifier to supply current for the projection arc, has been developed by the General Electric Company (Bridgeport, Conn.), designed by C. E. Hamann especially to meet the requirements of the suprex arc. Adaptation of copper oxide rectification to the relatively high current characteristics of the projection arc involves a system of forced air cooling. The present rectifier is the outgrowth of the application of rectifiers of this type to low-intensity and high-low arcs prior to the advent of the suprex method.

Briefly, a copper oxide rectifier consists of a number of discs or elements each of which constitutes a small rectifying unit. Various current and voltage ratings can be obtained by grouping the discs in series-multiple combinations. A single element consists of a copper disc with a coating of cuprous oxide on one surface. Rectification takes place at the junction between the oxide and the copper. This action has been found to be entirely electronic in nature and no chemical reactions or changes take place. Units which have been on life test over eight years show no apparent deterioration under microscopic inspection. A rectifier of this type lasts indefinitely provided it is operated within its rated output and not otherwise abused.

In the General Electric rectifier the forced air cooling is accomplished by means of a motor-driven blower located in the lower part of the rectifier housing. The motor has oversized ball bearings, factory-lubricated. Although an air cooling system is used, the actual temperature rise of the rectifier units is not more than 2° or 3° above room temperature when running continuously at full load.

These rectifiers are supplied only for poly-phase service. The light pulsations produced by the 3-phase full-wave rectifier are three times as rapid as that from a single-phase and the resultant beat is of a frequency sufficient to preclude flicker.

The General Electric rectifier comes in two sizes. The smaller size was designed for the 6-7mm. suprex trim. It is nominally rated 40 to 50 amperes at 30 to 35 volts, but the range of adjustment is sufficient to permit its use with the smaller 5-6 mm. trim if desired.

The larger unit has a range of 40 to 65 amperes for use with either the 6-7 mm. trim or the 6.5-8 mm. trim. The weight of the smaller unit is approximately 220 lbs., and the larger 250 lbs.

It is intended that a separate rectifier unit be furnished for each projection lamp, and these units are not designed to handle two arcs. Several years ago this concern manufactured a double unit for low-intensity arcs. It was found that this construction required practically the same amount of material as two single units, hence the advantage from a cost standpoint was not appreciable. On the other hand, the size and weight was practically doubled, which was a decided handicap in installation work which sometimes involved transporting the units up narrow stairways and ladders.

Because it was found that outlying districts were occasionally subjected to partial failure of the 3-phase power supply (one of the three phases might fail leaving power on the other two phases), the construction of the G. E. 3-phase copper oxide rectifier is such that it will continue to operate on two phases if one fails, and it is possible to maintain the arc at somewhat reduced current with only one phase alive.

To take advantage of this feature it is of course necessary to insure the continuous operation of the blower system. This was accomplished by incorporating a blower motor designed to run on the 110 volt single-phase a.c. line. By use of suitable relays the rectifier is disconnected automatically in the event of failure of the 110-volt a.c. supply to the blower.

In order to permit the projectionist to shut down each rectifier conveniently (so as to save on power), the G. E. rectifier is provided with a control system in which the 3-phase line is run directly from the main switch to the rectifier and is connected to the rectifier transformer through a pair of relays in the rectifier housing. The relay coils are energized from the 110 volt a.c. line (the same line that operates the blower). Thus the wiring for the control consists merely of a single pair of small wires from the rectifier to the control switch at the lamp.

Wiring diagram, G. E. rectifier.

For simplicity of operation, the manufacturer recommends that the pedestal switch be disconnected from the arc circuit and connected into the control circuit. In this case the d.c. is run directly to the arc. The projectionist thus goes through the same sequence of operations as formerly. When he gets ready to start up a lamp he closes the pedestal switch and strikes the arc in the customary way.

Closing the pedestal switch starts the blower and energizes the relays, which in turn connect the 3-phase power supply to the rectifier. There is no warming up period required. The over-all operating efficiency of the G. E. copper oxide rectifier is rated at 70%.

SUPREX ARC LAMP

● Though recommending a maximum current of 67 amperes for its Suprex lamp, C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company of Los Angeles, have developed a design which is asserted to give this model a listed rating of from 45 to 110 amperes.

As to Suprex carbons, various combinations may be used. For the larger theatres, where the higher currents obtain, the 8-millimeter positive with either the 6.5-millimeter or 7-millimeter negative is a practicable combination. In smaller theatres, however, improved illumination is obtainable with Suprex carbons by a combination of 7-millimeter positive with 6-millimeter negative, at 45 amperes; or 8-millimeter positive with 6-millimeter negative at 52 amperes. The first combination provides current economy, the latter carbon economy. Lower currents than 45 amperes are feasible, however, with the 6-millimeter positive and 5-millimeter negative.

In the Ashcraft design the mirror, arc control and negative assembly are mounted on a large separate door at the rear. This door may be swung open for a cleaning and inspection of the mirror. Trimming of negative carbon is accomplished by opening the rear door of the lamphouse. The mirror is 14 inches in diameter and placed far enough from the arc to reduce pitting.

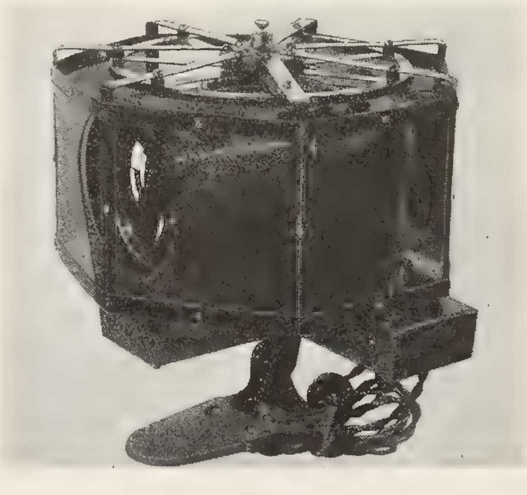
Both positive and negative carbons are full-floating and are provided with guides for directing and holding them in alignment. The negative guide is adjustable vertically and horizontally. The lamp is equipped with a shunt magnet adjusted to control accurately the arc flame.

Manual controls are placed on the sides of the lamp housing at the rear for striking the arc. No feed screws are used. Both carbons are fed forward by means of heavy chains, spring coupled. Return of the positive carriage is accomplished with a crank at the forward end of the housing. Both the positive and negative carbons are adjusted independently of each other. The negative is fed forward by means of a three-point over-riding clutch adjustable through a wide range of current. The positive carbon feed is adjusted by means of a motor control rheostat. The arc control is located to the rear of the mirror. All gearing is enclosed and operates in oil.

A full 12 inches of positive carbon is used at one setting, the clamp being placed at the extreme rear end of the carbon. The negative also accommodates a long trim.

NEW SOUNDHEAD

● Developments in design have been effected by the Langsenkamp-Wheeler Brass Works of Indianapolis for the purpose of extending the range of frequency response of its soundhead. The entire mechanism is mounted on a heavy-duty base casting and is enclosed in a cast aluminum case finished with black crackle enamel. All steel parts are cadmium-plated. The photoelectric cell, which is mounted in full-beam with respect to the exciter lamp, is completely enclosed. The unit includes the optical system, caesium-type photoelectric cell, two exciter lamp holders, exciter lamps, motor pulley, and belts.



The Bestomatic color spotlight, which has been brought out by the Best Devices Company of Cleveland. In mean dimensions it is 12 inches square, motor-driven and entirely automatic. It has two speeds, making either 14 or 28 color changes per minute, and is equipped with an adjustable focusing attachment permitting a spread of from 3 feet to 12 feet at a 10-foot throw. In theatre work it may be placed as border, foot or auditorium ceiling light by cutting the motor line into the switchboard.

A model developed in the new streamline type of chair recently introduced by the Heywood-Wakefield Company of Boston. Back framing has chromium-plated or enameled metal edges, and arm rests are rounded. Aisle standards have been developed of streamline style.

FABRIC GLUE

● A quick-drying fabric glue for the patching of chair and other fabrics has been brought out by the Technical Finishes Corporation of Chicago. The glue comes with a kit which includes patches, brush and Fabriglue. Application requires about a minute, while drying takes a half-hour.

NEW SOUNDHEADS

● Three soundheads, differing essentially in adaptation to specified frequency responses, have been put on the market by Electrical Audition and Research Laboratories. These soundheads were designed by the head of the concern, C. S. Adler. This company has been fabricating sound equipment previously, and now brings out its three models under its own trade names. A principal feature of the design is the incorporation of all elements in a die cast plate, which permits removal of the entire assembly as a unit. The aperture plates are of hardened tool steel, and sound gates are of floating spring tension type. Drive is by means of a chain operating between non-metallic sprockets.

SCREEN AGE AND SCREEN SELECTION

Outlining important factors determining screen life and efficiency in relation to lamp equipment and auditoriums

SCREENS HAVE not been really thought of in terms of power-costs. In fact, the tendency has been to regard audience reaction—both as to entertainment value and eye-strain—as a factor calling for no more than any apparently uniform, apparently white surface.

It should be remembered at the outset that the light out of which motion pictures are made, consists in projected light and reflected light. The resultants of these, with the screen itself as a factor, is the effective light. It is to be measured by the lumen output of the projection lamp and projector lens system, the square-foot area of the screen, the reflective qualities of the type of screen—that is, whether it is diffusive, directive or reflective—and the age and physical condition of the screen surface.

To consider the latter as our special interest here, it is to be pointed out that screen depreciation is progressive. It depends on the geographic location of the theatre, the cleanliness of the theatre, the amount of attendance, the ventilation and heating systems, whether the air taken into the theatre is properly filtered or not, the character of the community (whether industrial or otherwise), and so on. The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has placed the general rate of screen depreciation at from 2 per cent to 3 per cent per month. The factors cited vary this rate of course, and in the determination of the rate obtaining in a specific theatre community conditions are important.

In small country suburbs, for example, the probable efficient life of a screen has been placed at 30 months. In small cities with factories it is 25 months. In large cities with factories the life is 18 months; in manufacturing sections, 15 months; in areas near railroads, 12 months.

Each month that a screen is used the effective light is lessened in accordance to the rate of depreciation applying. Of course, what happens is that the projectionist or manager notices the falling off and the amperage is stepped up. This is where the effect of screen depreciation on current costs enters the picture.

It is generally thought by projectionists and motion picture engineers in general that the effective screen light is far too low in the average theatre. Screen light should be between 12 and 14 foot-candles. It commonly is as low as 7 foot-candles. Many are the factors, of course, which contribute to poor screen light. Among them are faulty relation of the mirror to the arc; spot too large at the aperture; arc gap not in harmony with characteristics of the specific type of lamp being used; cracked and discolored condensers; mirror dim and pitted; amperage and voltage relation faulty and not maintained steadily at the critical point; wrong carbons; arc regulating mechanism defective; air currents in lamp house; shutter out of time, or pitch of shutter blade unsuited to the assembly; and others. These are the factors, however, which are most often corrected soon after their appearance. The screen is supposed to go on unaltered almost forever.

SURFACE TREATMENT

Depreciation of the screen beyond recall is retarded by routine brushing. To be effective the brushing must be regular. Left to collect dust and become discolored by gases introduced into the atmosphere, it will not be helped much by washing, and it is perhaps impossible to wash a screen so as to leave the surface uniform.

A soiled screen can of course be resurfaced. When screens were more costly than they are now, resurfacing had its commendations. Resurfacing, to be worthwhile, must be done with a deal of expertness, using the precise materials adapted to the screen surface being treated. It isn't the perforations (in the case of a perforated screen) that offers the obstacles, but the nature of the screen surface itself and the function it must perform.

That resurfacing can make an old screen new is hardly the case. A prominent theatre circuit not long ago made tests to find out how much of a saving could be effected by resurfacing, as opposed to the purchase of new screens. Lighting engineers were enlisted in the effort, and the work was done by skilled painters after paint chemists had contributed their bit. The result looked perfect: the screen was utterly white and visibly uniform in surface. Tests were made with a light-meter and illuminometer, and it was found that one screen that had been at 40% of its original efficiency had acquired a total gain of only 12%. The gain in the case of another screen was from 43% to 56%. The cost of resurfacing was about 15 cents a square foot.

SELECTION FACTORS

Proper screen light is proper only in its relation to a particular theatre. Width of screen is basically determined by the width of the auditorium (and to some extent, because of angles of vision, by the depth). The width of the auditorium also is a factor in determining the type of screen suitable, but the latter also must accord with the type of projection light source being used (unless these are yet to be installed, when these two factors are related to each other in reverse order).

Diffusive screens reflect the same amount of light equally to seats at all angles from it and therefore is indicated for wide theatres—it is required for auditoriums of extreme width. It is also recommended for theatres with large projection angles because the light does not fade off as the angle of incidence increases. Relatively stronger projection light is of course required.

Directive screen direct the screen light, and as a result less projection light is needed. Because of fading characteristics, however, it is not indicated for houses with large projection angles, while its directive qualities specify it for long and relatively narrow auditoriums.

Screens of the reflective type are most efficient in extremely narrow auditoriums. Its effective light bears about the same relation to the projection light as that of the directive screen.

TWO MEN TO A ROOM: WHY, WHEN AND HOW

I HAVE A request from the executive secretary of a state I. A. union covering almost fifty locals, asking that I express an opinion as to whether or not I consider it necessary to "have one man on duty for each projector operated." I would reword the question thus: Do I regard the presence of two projectionists essential in every theatre during the entire length of each performance? I have replied that I most emphatically do, but with certain qualifications.

I base my opinion upon the conviction that to avoid danger to both life and property it is necessary to have a competent projectionist on duty beside every motion picture projector every moment of time it is in operation and an audience is present in a theatre. The presence of a projectionist beside the projector while it is working is essential to the production of maximum entertainment value in return for the money paid in at the box office by theatre patrons. Also the matter of hazard where there is no projectionist beside the projector is a thing that should be given careful consideration.

With only one man on duty in a projection room, the projectionist is compelled to leave his post of duty beside the working projector to perform other duties, such as threading up the idle projector and trimming its lamps, rewinding films and attending to other tasks from time to time. This we all know is very true. It cannot possibly be avoided. There is but one way to avoid such absences from the post of duty and that is that a second man be provided, whose duty it should be to attend to the various other functions while the projectionist remains beside his working projector.

However, while I certainly regard it as highly essential that there be two competent projectionists on duty in the larger theatres, where equipment is as a rule more or less complicated and the program more diversified, I do not regard it essential to have two projectionists on duty in small theatres. As a rule the equipment in them is considerably less elaborate. It therefore can be handled with less trouble and labor. To my mind the difficult point is to select a reasonable dividing line, which might best be arrived at by considering seating capacity. Perhaps the dividing line should be set at a seating capacity of 300, theatres larger than that to have two competent projectionists; those below to have one competent projectionist and a helper, preferably a projection apprentice.

But be a theatre large or small, there should be an absolute rule that there shall be a competent projectionist on duty beside any and every motion picture projector during every moment it is in operation with an audience present in the theatre, save only in some extraordinary emergency. Also, it should be made an offense to attach any sort of signal designed to warn the projectionist of the entrance of a visitor into the room.

As to the apprentice or helper, it should be expected that he attend to all rewinding, threading and such other duties as may be appointed by the projectionist. Two men on duty is just as essential to safety in small as in large theatres, but authorities and unions must recognize the fact that a large number of the smaller theatres, especially in small towns, must keep their operating costs as low as possible. The possible available patronage is strictly limited, as also is the admission price they may charge. They are in no position to assume the expense of two competent projectionists. If the issue were to be forced, many of them would be compelled to close their doors, and in the end no gain in employment would result. Then, too, the people in those communities need those theatres, and the union would gain no friends by such tactics. Demand those things that have their base in right and justice and win. Do otherwise and eventually the battle will be lost.

WHAT CAUSED THESE SCRATCHES?

LOCAL UNION 119, IATSE & MPMO, Auburn, N. Y., presents a queer case of film damage, asking an opinion as to its cause. The letter says:

"This film was returned to us by an exchange with the complaint that 152 feet of it was similarly damaged during the run of the print in a local theatre. They contend that the film ran off the sprocket. The marks, when reproduced, sound like a base drum.

"It is obvious the marks were caused by a sprocket of some sort, as they are accurately spaced and centered with the sprocket holes. We have tried to duplicate the damage by threading a film in every conceivable way, but with no success. When a run-off does occur (we know it did not), the indentations are quite deep, whereas these are not. Unfortunately our argument does not hold good against the exchange's claim that it did happen. We therefore are writing to you for an opinion that might aid us in ascertaining the cause of the damage."

The damage is peculiar. It is scarcely visible to the naked eye, even under close inspection. However, when I placed it under a 30-diameter glass it showed up as a very faint scratch mark about (as viewed under the glass) ¼-inch wide and the same in length. It was not in any degree an indentation. It is not the result of the film running off a sprocket during projection. That is clearly shown in three ways. First, on the short sample sent the marks run exactly in a straight line with the sound track (which is unusual, but possible in a run-off). Second, there is not the slightest evidence of indentation. Whatever did it, struck a light, swiping blow, resulting in a very light scratch or abrasion. Third, were it a run-off there would be evidence of damage near the edge of the film on the opposite side. There is none.

My opinion therefore is that the damage most emphatically was not done during projection. It occurs at every sprocket hole on the sample sent. It looks as though every tooth of a sprocket had slightly scraped the sound track exactly beside the sprocket hole. However, as we all know, this could not possibly occur were it a run-off, as the film speed would be out of phase with the speed of the outer ends of the sprocket teeth, so that the marks could not possibly stay in the same position relative to the sprocket holes. Can anyone of our readers offer a suggestion as to just what did cause the damage?

AN ODD CASE OF FLICKER

FROM A projectionist in Edson, Alberta, comes this puzzler: "We have installed a new screen, and in spite of all I can do there is a periodic flicker. It occurs with a sort of in-and-out fashion. I have been able to reduce it considerably by trying two-wing and three-wing shutters located at various points in the light beam, trimming and adjusting the intermittent movement, decreasing the amperage and checking projection speed. However, it still persists with the same pronounced regularity. Projection distance 70 feet. Screen image 13 feet. I suggested reducing picture size, but management is in favor of a larger one. We are using rebuilt Simplex projectors."

After studying this matter for a time it seems to simmer down to just one possible thing—at least so far as I can determine.

It seems certain that the picture is fairly well illuminated. It should be, at least, particularly with a new screen surface. Probably it is much more brilliant than the picture on the old screen. It then follows that a flicker effect that would not have been noticed with the poorer illumination, might be quite visible with that more brilliant.

It seems rather a remote possibility, but really the cause would seem to be that the line voltage varies, dropping projection speed temporarily until flicker occurs. My further view is that, since the trouble "persists with pronounced regularity," the voltage drop is caused by some intermittent, heavy load, such as for example an elevator motor, which overloads either the transformer (if any) or the circuit through which the theatre is served.

It is quite true that were such the case the alternation in projection speed drop would be noticed, especially in its effect upon sound, but just the same my advice is to have the voltage of your service circuit tested, which you have every right to demand the power company to make, and it doubtless would be very willing to do so.

AMPERAGE WITH MAZDA LAMPS

A SOUTHERN manager wrote saying that his mazda lamp lasted only a few hours on one projector, whereas that on the other stood up for months. I advised him that apparently something was wrong with the regulator and the lamp was getting too much amperage. I told him to have the regulator tested. I have his answer, as follows:

"I had the regulator tested. They advise me that it is OK but that the ammeter registered a little high. They installed a different regulator and the lamp stands up OK now."

So far as I can see there was something phoney about that test. If the regulator was all right and its ammeter registered high, that would mean the lamp was not being supplied with its quota of current, under which condition it should last indefinitely, but give very poor illumination.

In the new Bluebook will be found a tabulation, prepared for me by General Electric engineers, that probably will astonish you. Just a wee bit of overload decreases lamp life amazingly. Any considerable overload raises hob with it.

Regardless of the test, I believe it quite safe to say that either that ammeter was not "high," but low to a very considerable extent, or else there was something radically wrong with that regulator. (Nela Park engineers, correct me if there is any other possible explanation.)

Projectionists using mazda equipment should be very careful to keep the amperage, not almost, but exactly right. In localities where line voltage fluctuates widely it is well to watch your ammeter closely.

MOST COMMON TROUBLE SOURCE

JOHN L. STROB of Minneapolis, writes, "Your advice is asked on the following. First, when the loudspeakers continually set up a sort of squeal, what is wrong and how may the trouble be stopped? Second, just what would you consider as the one most likely source of sound trouble?"

A positive answer cannot be given on the "squeal" trouble, but in many cases it will be found to have its source in lack of balance as applies to the amplifier stages in which push-pull is employed. Test may be made by removing the tubes, one at a time, until the removal of one stops the squeal, whereupon installation of a new tube will probably cure the trouble. If not, it then is a matter of "following through" until the source of squeal is located.

As to your second question, viewing equipment as a whole, I believe the exciter lamp is probably the most prolific source of trouble. My reason for saying that is that the exciter lamp is the basic source of sound volume. Any fault in its filament, any darkening of its globe, any diminution of its current, immediately operates to lower the volume of sound. When sound volume is decreased by exciter lamp fault, the tendency is to jack up the fader, and this ordinarily induces a "hum" in the amplifiers. Trouble has many sources, but I believe the one place it most often occurs is in or at the exciter lamp. The fault may be (a) dirty globe, (b) filament fault, (c) darkened globe (interior darkening), (d) filament too high, too low or on one side—not centered on the optical axis of the lens system, (e) poor connection between lamp or socket, (f) loose connection somewhere in exciter lamp power circuit, (g) lamp bulb loose in its base, (h) screw with which lamp base is clamped in some types of equipment, set up too tight or not tight enough.

"WE WANT THE 2,000-FOOT REEL"

W. H. COOPER, projectionist of the Liberty theatre in North Wilkesboro, North Carolina, writes: "Although a devoted Bluebook School student and proud possessor of your valuable Bluebooks, I have not heretofore addressed you. Now, however, I want to express to you my opinion regarding the much discussed 2,000-foot reels. Please enter my vote 100 per cent for them. You, I and all experienced projectionists know the evils of the 1,000-footers.

"Up in my territory it seems every 'machine operator' must apply his own individual pet set of punch, scratch or other changeover marks before he can or rather will project a reel of film. Last week, believe it or not, I reviewed a print that had spades, diamonds, hearts and clubs punched at intervals all the way through it.

"There are plenty of good points in the 2,000-foot reel. They will in the end benefit the producer, the exchange, the exhibitor, the projectionist and, last but not least, the theatre patron.

"Will you be good enough to give me the address of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, to the end that I may do my duty in writing them boosting for the 2,000-foot reels?"

The address of the Academy is 7046 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood. As to the disfiguring punch and scratch marks, there now is no reasonable excuse for them and no exchange should permit its films to be thus abused.

What is the matter out in Hollywood? "Are we to have the 2,000-foot reel to place on our graves?" asks a St. Joseph, Mo., projectionist. Dale Danielson, Russell, Kan., says, "Wherefore the delay in adoption of the 2,000-foot reel? It has so very many advantages—lowered print damage, less cost for replacements, less cost for leaders, trailers, etc., etc., through a considerable list."

It is all very well to investigate and talk and "encourage" us, but is that all Hollywood does? If it were something Hollywood itself wanted, regardless of whether mere theatre folks wanted it or not, it would be done and pronto—yea, verily, two or three prontos.

Gentlemen of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, we need and want that 2,000-foot reel. Failure to supply it or refuse it definitely after months upon months upon months—about two years, if I am not in error—of deliberation, seems just a bit unnecessary.

THE OLDER MEN AND THE YOUNG

I BELIEVE it best not to give the name of the writer of what follows. In part the letter reads:

"Dear Brother Richardson: I have been one of your followers for many years.

After thanking you, as I now do, for all the many valuable helps I have found in your department in the Moving Picture World and later in Better Theatres and Motion Picture Herald and in your books, I want to ask your views on a certain matter that very much affects all those men now advanced in years who began in projection about when I did, in 1906.

"I have worked hard and studied, trying to do my full duty in the projection room. I believe I can honestly say I have always given at least fair satisfaction, but now when my hair is gray there seems to be a growing idea among the younger men that we old fellows should step out and, as they put it, give them a chance.

"Now, Brother Richardson, I can't quite see the justice in that, especially when, as is often the case, they, the youngsters, try to push us aside and step into our place. Three of us older men were talking this over yesterday and it was suggested that I write you, asking you to give the youngsters a talking to through your Better Theatres Comments. We may be old, but still are able to do our work well. We must still eat, clothe ourselves, pay rent and other necessary expenses. The plans of the youngsters seem not to include taking care of us and we can't seem to find ourselves falling for the idea of stepping out and starving to death, or going on the charity rolls, even to 'give the youngsters a chance.' How about it?"

Well, that certainly is an interesting communication. I have myself seen plenty of evidence of youngsters not only wanting older men to step aside, but doing their level best to push them out. In my opinion the older men have every right to remain just so long as they are able to perform their duties efficiently and well. More than that, it would seem to me that, as in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the men longest in service should be entitled to hold the best positions so long as they can fill them acceptably. When they cannot they must of course be dropped back, but that should occur only after it is demonstrated that they are failing.

In projection it is especially true that this should be the procedure by reason of what the older men went through when projection was in the building and neither projection nor the projectionist was accorded the respect ordinarily shown to a yellow pup. That sounds a bit rough, perhaps, but it is exactly true. Many of the older men gave valuable aid in the very real battle that was fought for fully 15 years to give projection an important place in the motion picture scheme.

Most of the youngsters were in school (or playing hookey) in those strenuous days. They had no part in the battle, but now, not all, but some of them desire to step calmly in, shove their elders aside and sop up the "gravy"—there wasn't any gravy then!

The younger men have every right to build, and according to their building, let them be advanced. However, they must not expect those of more mature years and experience to step aside until their term of usefulness has passed. They built the present, upon which base the future will be erected by the youngsters, who some day will find themselves asking the same identical question that is asked in this letter.

A PROBLEM AND A SUGGESTION

FROM PENNSYLVANIA comes this letter: "Last November this theatre installed new type Suprex projector light sources, which replaced low intensities. Also a new and larger screen was installed. I now project a 22.5-foot picture at 95 feet. The focus is never as sharp as it should be. It cannot be made thoroughly sharp. Our manager holds this to be due to the lens barrels being not sufficiently tight in their holding barrels and working gradually out of focus. There is practically no projection angle. Lenses only about 3 feet above screen center.

"My own contention is that the excessive heat buckles the film, which seems proven by the fact that usualy the focus is sharper on the first projection than at subsequent showings.

"Another thing: As you know, films supplied by some producers are thicker than those supplied by others. This being true, would not the thinner films be more likely to buckle from excessive heat than the thicker ones? When films are so hot that they cannot be held comfortably in the fingers for examination when rewinding, what would you say?

"The new lenses are of good quality. I am sure they are not at fault. However, your opinion is always final to me."

First of all, why a picture of 22 feet? That is nearly as large as the picture at the Roxy theatre in New York, which seats something like 6,000 persons. It is as large as the picture at the Capitol theatre in New York, where the rear seats are 157 feet from the screen. It is well that exhibitors remember and give very careful consideration to the fact that unnecessarily large screen image dimensions are bad in several ways.

First, from the front seats, as normally found in motion picture theatres, the huge picture invariably looks extremely coarse grained, fuzzy and more or less out of focus, regardless of how sharp it may look farther back. Second, it frequently presents a faded-out appearance from all over the theatre. Third, every defect in the film ("rain," for example) is made conspicuous by unnecessary enlargement. Fourth, patrons in the front rows must do acrobatic stunts with their eyes for an hour or two, trying to follow action over wide angles of vision. Finally, a brilliant, but not over-illuminated picture is far more beautiful and more visible in its details than is one in which many elements are distorted.

And now to the question: You should be able to prove friend manager right or wrong by focusing the image as sharply as possible and sealing the lens temporarily in position with a bit of adhesive tape. A 22-foot picture at 95 feet requires very carefully corrected lenses, as the curvature of field is approximately 18 inches. That is to say, the screen center is a little less than 18 inches nearer the lens than is its outer edges.

As to buckling, it is not at all impossible, particularly if you are using first-run service. To adequately illuminate a 22.5-foot screen you would have to have a very hot spot. Yes, thin film would buckle a bit more readily than would thicker stock. However, do not confuse mere cupping over of the film lengthwise with buckling. What we call buckling is the raising or sinking out of the film plane of a portion of separate films. The fact that film, as a whole or in sections, bend over sidewise (the edges toward each other) means nothing so far as projection is concerned.

You can settle the depth of focus question easily. Sharpen the focus as much as possible (audience absent) at the screen center, observing the effect at the sides. Then if there is a difference between center and sids, see if you can focus the sides sharply and whether by so doing you throw the center out. If so, then those lenses cannot possibly project a 22-foot picture properly at 95 feet.

May I offer the manager a suggestion? Get some cheap black non-glossy cloth. From your supply dealer borrow a good lens that will give an 18-foot picture. Attach the cloth to the screen so that an 18-foot picture is outlined, permitting the cloth to extend an inch or two inside the light. At the first show next day announce that you are using a picture 22.5 feet wide, that you have been told a smaller one would give more pleasing results, that you will now project one reel of today's performance as an 18-foot screen image, changing to the 22-foot image for the rest of the picture. And ask the audience to judge. I'll bet on the 18-footer to win!

SERVICE ENGINEERS AND PROJECTIONISTS

THE FOLLOWING is from the pen of the late Mr. C. Hartley Devaies, taken from the columns of the Projectionists' Journal of London, which had reprinted it from the Technical Section of The Cinematographic Times of London, with commendatory remarks.

"The relationship between the projection personnel of theatres and the visiting sound service engineers should always be cordial and cooperative. It often is—it sometimes is not.

"The writer was recently called in by an exhibitor who seemed to be under the impression that his projectionists were incompetent; and were, moreover, deliberately 'messing around with' the sound apparatus. The general atmosphere in the projection room was unpleasant. But unbiased examination proved that the two men were competent, clean, painstaking and hardworking.

"The manager said he was going upon reports he had received from the servicing engineer, as he did not understand technical matters himself. He was advised to quetly suggest a change in servicing engineers. The sound firm agreed, and now the trouble has disappeared, and everyone is satisfied and the atmosphere is good."

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

I WANT TO BUILD a marquee as cheaply as possible. Can you give me any plans or ideas? My thought was to build it of wood with light sockets and hang a balance from it.—O. S. P.

The Answer:

IF THE LOCAL authorities in your city allow wood construction for marquees I know of no reason why you should not build one of that type of construction as this would certainly be the cheapest way possible, in initial cost, at any rate. Be sure that all electric wiring is done in conduit. At a little more expense you could make the balance out of sheet metal with an escalloped bottom. This would make it more durable and by the selection of vivid colors you might obtain a pretty good effect.

The Question:

I AM A REGULAR subscriber and would greatly appreciate the following information. We are arranging our seats so as to make two side aisles instead of a center aisle. We intend to build a wall behind the last row of seats 6 feet from the entrance. What materials are most suited for this, and how high should this be built up, and also how wide should it be—that is, should it be built up to the last seat on each side, or not?

Our ceiling above the entrance is 15 feet, and it is 10 feet up to the light from the projection room. At the present time we have two entrance doors into the theatre on each side of the box office. These are small French doors and are only 24 inches wide. We keep one of them fastened and only allow the other one to swing. We are planning on changing these and thought it best to put in only one door on each side of the box office and to make it wider. What kind of door would you recommend, and how wide and would you recommend a solid one or with a glass pane?

We also have a lobby that is 15¼ feet wide and 12 feet deep. The opening into the lobby is 12¼ feet across and runs straight up 8½ feet, then there is a gradual arch for the next two feet. We would like to make a permanent storm front for this. What material would you recommend and how would you build it? How many doors would you have, and would you have them solid or with a glass pane, and how would you have them open? We would like an arrangement so that we could remove the doors during the summer to provide free access to the theatre and lobby. Also, what color would you use for a small theatre of our type.—L. R. B.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Answer:

IT IS A GOOD improvement to rearrange the seats as you described. The wall behind the last row of seats should run to the soffit of the projection room. This wall may be built out of metal lath and plaster, or out of plaster boards on studding. If your theatre is fireproof use metal studding or gypsum blocks. It is advisable to place plate glass openings in the space between the openings leading to the aisles. These openings or arches on the heads of the aisles should be 6 inches or 8 inches wider than the width of the aisles, specially if drapes are to be used.

A 24-inch door is too narrow for comfort, and not permissible, if you intend to change the present doors to single doors. Do not make them wider than 3 feet, 6 inches, but be sure that you comply with the building code in regard to the width. These doors should have glass panels. If you plan for a storm front to be used in the cold weather, install one of the knockdown type, especially because you intend to remove the doors during the summer, and front without doors does not add to the beauty of the exterior. Besides, the mullions of the frame would be in the way and someone might get hurt.

Since the opening is only 12 feet, 6 inches wide, it should be an easy matter using two double set of doors, each opening 5 feet, 6 inches wide, with a mullion in the center. These storm doors should have glass panels.

I cannot advise you as to a color scheme unless I know the colors of the chairs, drapes or carpets now in your theatre.

The Question:

I AM WRITING you with a view of improving my own ideas in regard to lighting and decorating the interior of my building. The lobby is 13 feet wide by 18 feet long and 14 feet high, with only one light in center, overhead. While the lobby is completely enclosed, it is necessary to cut this center light off on account of the light rays penetrating throughout the building where the main doors are open, then a temporary light is used with very poor effect.

The interior of the building is anything but attractive. The left side is a continuance of the lobby and a straight flat wall for a distance of 76 feet to the stage. On the right side the building is widened 28 feet, making this part blind and hard to ventilate, there being apartments on the second floor, and the only way to ventilate is through the lobby. Enclosed is a diagram which I hope will assist you.—D. E. B.

The Answer:

I AM VERY SORRY to state that I do not quite understand your inquiry and therefore am unable to give you much advice. You state that the lobby is completely enclosed, but that the light rays penetrate "throughout the building." Do you mean that the lights in the lobby penetrate to the auditorium and interfere with projection when lobby doors are open?

To overcome such a situation you could build a standee railing behind the seats and cover it with fabrics. You could also use an indirect lighting fixture, or try colored lamps.

If the doors between the auditorium and the lobby have glass panels, remove them and install solid panels, or cover both sides of each door with sheetrock or masonite. The only way I can advise you in regards as to ventilation, I suggest you send a floor plan of your building.

I suggest that you eliminate all ceiling fixtures in the auditorium and use concealed type wall brackets so as not to throw any light against the ceiling.

The Question:

WE NEED some advice on a problem we have and were wondering if you could give us some information on it. We are figuring on putting in a balcony, and our present booth is in the way. Everything else works out fine, and we would like to know if it is possible and would it work O.K. to have our booth just below the top of the seats and with about 24 feet, 2 inches throw to the screen.

We figure on taking up some of the front seats if this could be worked out. I have been told that this is used in most theatres in California on account of earthquakes. I am sending a drawing showing all I can on the questions. Our house seats 250 and we use Mazda lamps with the new RCA sound.—L. D. M.

The Answer:

YOUR INQUIRY, being rather unique, became very interesting. I find it not to be impracticable. According to your sketch the top of the projection room should not be more than 3 feet, 6 inches above the floor line nearest to the seats, so the bottom of the portholes would be just above the floor line in front of the booth. In this case the bottom of the projection screen may be on the same level with the top of the booth, reducing the angle of projection.

The greatest objection I find is the matter of ventilating the projection room. The only way this can be done is to connect the projector ventilators to a duct running along the wall and downward to the bottom of the auditorium floor, and extending to outside of the building, then along the outside wall to 2 feet above the roof line. Provide this vent with an exhaust fan. The projection room should also be provided with a fresh air supply and an exhaust. This duct work could be placed under the auditorium floor and run along outside walls to the desired location for outlets.

Discussing this problem with a projection engineer, I was told that it would work out all right, especially with modern equipment.

The Question:

PLEASE GIVE us all the information you can in regards to this letter. We are planning on building a theatre in the near future in a town of about fifteen hundred population. We do not want to invest over $12,000 in it. We intend to put in second-hand machines, chairs, etc. We want about 250 seats in the auditorium, and 150 in balcony. We have got to build from the ground up. We just want something that will do for a while so we can see whether a theatre will pay in this town or not. Kindly give us all the information you can, about the cost of the building, the size, the heating system and any other information you see fit to. We want to build cheaply as possible, $10,000 if we can.—J. L. T.

The Answer:

IT WOULD BE impossible to build a theatre with a balcony and a total seating capacity of 400 for $12,000. If you plan all the seats on one floor and be as economical as possible in the construction, it may be possible to do so. Not knowing the size of your building lot, it is impossible for me to give you a correct estimate, but under no conditions should you figure less than 18 cents per cubic foot. Should the lot be 40 feet wide, it will require between 90 feet to 100 feet in depth, according to your requirements for lobby, foyer, stage, etc.

The most economical layout for a heating system is to locate the boiler room under the stage. In that case a hot air furnace may be used, so the warm air can be blown directly into the auditorium on each side of the stage. This would require a minimum amount of galvanized iron duct work. The exhaust of foul air could be by gravity.

If this theatre is to be built for experimental purposes, find out from the state authorities if frame construction is permissible, as that method is cheapest.

New Theatres from Old: The Lobby—Materials and Methods

with panels of mosaic, a terrazzo floor would be an excellent choice. This material has possibilities of richness and beauty that one would never suspect from the way it is ordinarily used. In such a lobby the terrazzo floor might be in plain, rich old gold with a simple border of Cosmati mosaic in Belgian black and Blanc de Nimes marbles, or with a border of plain black terrazzo.

Terrazzo is composed of a mixture of marble chips, cement and sand laid in a plastic state and ground down to an even surface after it has hardened. A fine golden yellow terrazzo can be made with chips of Sienna Yellow and Yellow Verona marbles. If the floor slopes, Alundurm chips should be mixed in to make a non-slip surface. A suitable terrazzo floor in two colors would probably cost from 60 cents to 80 cents a square foot.

OTHER TREATMENTS

Veneers of beautiful exotic woods, as well as of walnut and mahogany, come in Haskelite Phemaloid plywood, which is cemented together with a synthetic fire-resisting cement. Haskelite Plymetl has a facing of sheet metal—aluminum, bronze, etc.—on a fire-resisting plywood backing. Snap-on metal mouldings should be used over the joints. Phemaloid costs about $1.50 a square foot, and Plymetl $1 a square foot.

Mirror glass panels, either round or rectangular, inserted in the walls, add to the interest and may be backed with gold, gunmetal, blue or other metallic color instead of the usual silvering. Two or more colors can be combined on the same mirror. Designs can be sand-blasted from the front or back, and colors added in portions if desired.

Fyrart glass is excellent for wall facing. It comes in a great variety of fine colors, which are fired on the back of the glass, and it can be had in special colors and designs. With this material, snap-on metal mouldings make a good finish over the joints.

DECORATIVE LIGHTING

The light in a theatre lobby should be brilliant but at the same time free from glare, otherwise an intimate effect will not be attained. But the lobby must not appear dim compared with the brightly lighted vestibule. The eyes of incoming patrons should be caused to adjust themselves in preparation for the dimness of the auditorium by a moderate level of illumination in the lobby (still less light should be the rule for any foyer area between the main lobby (or main foyer).

Soft decorative lighting from bulbs, or various colored neon tubes concealed in coves, can be used to produce pleasing color effects. There is a new type of wall luminaire especially suited to lobby lighting which projects its light upon the opposite wall, distributing it widely. It employs control lenses set on a saw-tooth plan.

The type of light source should be chosen with due regard for the proportions of the lobby. A long trough hung in the center of the ceiling is good in a fairly long room, but not in a short room. If the ceiling is low, a trough against the ceiling, or a flush ceiling panel, is suitable. Separate fixtures are good in very long and very short rooms.

Doors covered with imitation leather are good because they are friendly to the touch. A vertical slit can replace the more usual round opening. A smart idea, seen in Paris, is a tube of metal extending from top to bottom of the door near the edge in place of the usual pull handle.

The foyer space is often irregular with odd corners. All re-entrant angles may well be rounded by furring out on a radius of, say, 2 or 3 feet. In the space thus formed a niche may be made for some such feature as an electric fountain or illuminated metal ornament of modern design. Very effective things of this kind can be made by combining sheet metals of different colors, such as copper, brass, nickel-silver and aluminum. Abstract designs, figure subjects, etc., can be worked out is repoussé metals, beaten to pattern, and they can be enlivened with vitreous enamels in colors. Fountains can be made of metal with blue neon tubes curved to suggest the falling pets of water. Metals that gleam and lights that glow are good in such ornamental features.

There are ceiling luminaires of a Bellova glass that are remarkably brilliant in appearance. They are decorated in permanently fired colors on an opal glass ground. An inverted cone-shaped ceiling fixture decorated with a pattern of over-lapping small triangles, is especially suitable for an inner foyer (foyer beyond main lobby or main foyer).

The walls of an inner foyer may be treated by almost any of the methods suggested for the main lobby walls, but since this area has less light, refined textures and subtle colorings are likely to be lost. The walls may be painted or covered with Salubra or fabric. If a patterned material is used, the design and coloring should be bold. Where the inner foyer area cannot be partitioned off from the auditorium (therefore really amounting to traffic or standee area), its decorative possibilities are greatly limited on account of the continuity with the auditorium-proper, but the principles of treatment are similar to those here noted.

or baby spotlights, are often plugged into the socket of an electric lighting fixture. There are at least two objections to this practice: First, it is ten to one that the lighting circuit is overloaded; and second, the flexible cable coming out of the lighting fixture is unsightly and conspicuous. In remodeling the foyer, plan an extra circuit for just such purposes. Select a reasonable number of locations for concealing wall plugs, so that temporary or seasonal lighting effects may be plugged into this extra circuit. This will be a great convenience.

HARDWARE

Hardware on doors becomes obsolete just as other equipment. Door pull handles, hinges or push bars can be removed and refinished, or replaced with newer designs and finishes. The entire appearance of a pair of doors can be altered by installing more modern hardware. Door checks are important. They should be noiseless in operation and require a minimum of repair and adjustment. Door checks might be obtained to operate doors from either side. Be sure they are installed on the side away from the foyer—it will be less conspicuous. The hanging or bracket type of check can be replaced by the flush floor type. This type costs somewhat more installed, but it is much more finished in appearance.

Main entrance or exit doors can be made to operate automatically upon the approach of a person by the connection of a special apparatus operated by an electric current from a photo-electric cell. This type of operation is so installed that in case of an emergency all doors will open instantly. This is an expensive installation, but it is the last word in automatic door operation. Such automatic operation conserves heat in winter and cool air in summer if installed on outside or vestibule doors, and minimizes foyer drafts. Automatic door operation is a distinct novelty in many locations and it attracts a great deal of attention.

SAVING WALLS

Most foyers have some furniture, like settees, divans, chairs, benches, floor lamps and pedestals supporting statues or ferns, plants, etc. Chairs and settees placed against walls can do much damage to painted plaster walls. The plush pads which are sometimes used at the back are not entirely satisfactory as they damage or discolor the wall only in a lesser degree. The best way to protect against this damage is to attach a bracket and a wood block to the rear legs of the chair or settee flush with the surface of the floor, so that when the furniture is pushed back against the wall the block of wood touches the baseboard and no other part of the chair can touch the wall surface. Of course, the block of wood should be stained to match the carpet or floor covering. Floor lamps or pedestals, unless very heavy such as those made of marble, should be secured in place, close to the wall, by an ornamental bracket, to prevent them from being knocked over and possibly injuring a patron. Did you ever stop to think of the hazard a loose floor lamp might become in tripping people should it fall or be knocked over in a panic? All furniture should be so placed that it does not in any way obstruct exits.

pendent arrangements of circuits. Stage cables, heavily insulated and in suitable lengths, fitted with connectors, and when separate circuits, are to be provided from one feeder cable, with branch connectors, are part of the necessary stage lighting equipment.

SCENIC EFFECTS

Scenic-effects are reproductions of natural phenomena, and startling, fantastic stage illusions, such as those of floating clouds, falling rain, flowing water, flames, swimming fish, etc. The effect is painted on a mica disk, or on slides, enclosed in a metal case and rotated or moved by clockworks or motor. The cost of scenic effects make their use prohibitive to the majority of smalltown theatres, except where the slides can be rented from a nearby supply house.

Many pleasing stage effects can be evolved by the mechanically inclined artist or electrician at a very small cost. Such home-made apparatus are not as compact or as finished in appearance as the manufactured article, of course.

Color frames of wood or metal, carrying color mediums, are used with open-box, bunch, and spotlights, as well as with certain types of borderlights and footlights. The color-frame consists of two frames clamped together with screws or bolts and fitted with guard wires. The gelatine medium is placed between the two frames.

Gelatine is the most serviceable, economical and popular of color mediums. It is available in about fifty tints and hues. Colored glass is also obtainable, but is costlier and easily broken. Silk mediums, once popular, are now seldom used except for effects such as sunrise and sunset.

Following are a few suggestions for interesting and unusual lighting effects compiled from various sources:

Dancing feet—a spot placed very low, so as to strike along a line of dancing feet. Very effective, especially if silver slippers or rhinestone buckles are worn by the dancers. For a variation, follow the feet of a toe dancer with a very small, condensed spot.

Fading-in—a dark stage on opening, with the faces of the singers or members of a band suddenly emerging in highlight, just an instant before the lights are brought up. This is just enough of a novelty to evoke a start of surprise.

Lighted face—a light held by the performer, under his chin, so that the concentrated light illuminates, in sharp contrasts, his face only. A flashlight is all that is necessary to accomplish this.

Light through water—A European device, which is very artistic, consists in sending shafts of light through water. Glass water-containers (fish bowls or square glass boxes) are placed in front of baby spots. The water containers are raised slightly above the spots to permit "shooting" the light on an upward angle. The sides around the spots and water containers are enclosed to prevent spill-light. An electric bar heater or similar contrivance is used to agitate the water. The effect of the bubbling water is virtually projected on a light fabric hanging or cyclorama. Color mediums may be used in conjunction with the water effect.

Spelling with light—Spelling out a word in illuminated letters makes a pleasing little novelty. As an example: A chorus of nine girls, dressed in traveling costumes and carrying over-night bags enter for "happiness" song, during which illuminated letters, one letter on each bag, appear to spell happiness in capital letters. A letter is cut out in the side of each bag, covered with translucent material and illuminated with a flashlight bulb, the switch of which is attached to the handle of the bag. The bags are cardboard boxes covered with pebble oilcloth or imitation leather paper, and fitted with handle.

Shadows—A striking lighting effect is produced with a spot placed in the footlights and focused to throw a huge sprawling shadow of the performer on the drop. The drop should be of fairly light color on a dark blue stage.

The luminous scrim is another striking effect. For example: Big exotic flowers painted in vivid colors and visible in white light, gradually change into huge luminous parrots when the stage is darkened. The parrots in turn disappear as lights behind the scrim are brought up for scrim presentation. The parrots are painted over the flowers with luminous paint, which is invisible in the light, but becomes radiant when the stage is darkened.

structure can be lowered accordingly. (See Diagram 3.) As the overhang lessens, the pitch of the balcony automatically flattens, making easier runs of stairs possible.

One loss at this point, however, is that as the balcony pitch is reduced, the space beneath it that was formerly used for mezzanine and rest rooms is either altogether elimitated, or becomes so small that only retiring rooms for second floor patrons can be planned in this area. But the lounges have suffered little in their move to the foyer level or to the basement, and in addition to their former comforts have grown to include smoking and poudre rooms to keep step with feminine requirements.

The smaller balcony is obviously safer, as a reduced proportion of the audience is obliged to come down the stairways in case of a hurried exit. The idea back of Great Britain's traditional three-floor form of playhouse, with the pit, or orchestra floor below the street level and exit up short flights of stairs, the first balcony placed at the lobby and foyer levels, and the second balcony—now quite obsolete in America—requiring the exit of less than one-third of the audience down stairways, was the desire for maximum assurance of public safety. The logic of the plan was recognized by English building ordinances, but it is still, in most localities in America, a new idea to our own building inspectors that it is better to exit crowds up a few steps where this can be conveniently arranged than to attempt to hurry great numbers of people down flights of stairs in case of fire. We seldom hear of serious injuries resulting from falls upstairs, but the toll taken by plunges downstairs is large and tragic.

The arguments are, therefore, that with a reduced balcony seating a smaller proportion of the patrons of the motion picture theatre, the elimination of heavy girder construction and reduction in ceiling height is a saving in the cost of the building, steep climbs are eliminated, public safety is increased, better projection angles are possible, and the confined under-balcony atmosphere is largely done away with.

STADIUM PLAN

Turning from our discussion of the two-floor house, it is worth noting that the stadium type of motion picture theatre plan has undergone fewer changes in the last few years. It continues to hold its popularity, and can be designed in the moderne manner as effectively as the balcony type of house.

THEATRE PLANNING

The foregoing are a few of the major changes which have come of late in the development of motion picture theatre architecture. None of them are half as startling as the sudden swing from the "deluxe" theatre to the smaller showhouse, necessitated by restricted financing during the depression and a change of policy on the part of major producing companies, but the physical trends mentioned do prove that theatrical design will never be governed by fixed rules.

Gradually we are shedding the old useless appendages of the "legitimate" houses in which motion pictures were first shown, and are evolving typical structures whose arrangement and mechanical efficiency dovetail with an artistic architectural treatment calculated to fulfill today's demands.

  2. Water temperature at condenser outlet
  3. Refrigerant temperature

F. Cooling Coils
  1. Temperature of water going in
  2. Temperature of water leaving

This may look like a lot of detail, but I can assure you it is as important to intelligent plant operation as the detail and analysis of box office figures are to intelligent showmanship. Actually, in practice, once an engineer has been trained to keep such information, it is not complicated and takes much less time than it requires to describe it in this manner.

The cost of operation is a very serious problem in all air conditioning work. The foregoing operating log does not contain any information that would directly help the manager to watch and know the operating costs. It is necessary, then, to keep another record that might be called the Operating Cost Journal. Again, the heading may be arranged down the side of the sheet, and the days of the week horizontally across the top of the page, or vice versa. Each sheet would cover one calendar week. The following are some headings for consideration in building up the proper record for a theatre:

Date
Water meter reading
Quantity of water used
Electric power meter reading
Electric power consumed
Hours in operation, Compressor No. 1
Hours in operation, Compressor No. 2, etc.
Number of hours when more than 1 compressor was in operation
Refrigerant loaded into system
Quantity of oil put into system
Supplies other than oil used
Air washer
  1. Nozzles cleaned
  2. Screens cleaned
  3. Tank drained, cleaned and refilled
Adjustments or minor repairs made during day
Supplies or refrigerant received during day
Supplies or refrigerant needed (for engineer to answer each day)
Is the entire plant operating to your complete satisfaction—if not what specifically are your recommendations?

The report for each day should be initialed by the chief engineer. Now the question might be asked: With all these fine records, how is the manager going to see and profit by them? The answer is that the good manager is going to visit the engine room, talk to the engineer, then initial each day's record right there on the ground where he can inspect with his own eyes and know what's going on. There just is no way for the manager to know without going into the engine room. The air-conditioning plant in a moderate-sized theatre represents perhaps a $20,000 investment, and it is a real responsibility to be charged with the care and proper operation of that kind of equipment.

The actual results (inside the theatre) on both dry bulb and wet bulb, relative humidity and effective temperature, obtained in operation of plants in theatres, restaurants, hotels, department stores this summer, will go a long way toward promoting or retarding the benefits of air-conditioning. If the public meets more frequently with improperly operated plants than with proper operation, then the increased business hoped for from the investment will be disappointing. Improper operation is going to result in many summer colds and other discomforts to patrons, and they will begin to lose all faith in air-conditioning. Air-conditioning companies should be greatly concerned with results and the public's reaction, and theatre men cannot afford to jeopardize substantial investments by having cold, clammy theatres.

In 1933 a chart entitled "Effective Temperature Chart" was reproduced in BETTER THEATRES with a complete explanation of its use. This is still the best guide to healthful and comfortable operation. Get this chart out, note carefully the summer effective temperature limits. During extremely hot weather keep inside conditions near the upper limit of the summer zone,

Don't give the theatre the "works" just because the plant has the capacity!

[The chart cited by Mr. Knight was one of four standard charts published in BETTER THEATRES during the summer of 1933. They were reproduced in a single folder of heavy paper with explanatory text, for the convenience of owners, managers and engineers. To the extent of the limited supply remaining, they may be obtained from BETTER THEATRES at the nominal price of 25 cents each.—THE EDITOR.]

Remodeling the Virginia in Detroit

painted silver and have concealed light sources. They also act as additional exhausts in the summer when the sides are opened.

Auxiliary heating in lobby, office, toilet rooms, etc., is by direct radiation. Steam is generated in a steel tubular boiler. The feed lines to the front of the building were carried overhead in the attic space and between the existing trusses. The return lines were carried back to the boiler by copper pipe installed in the old cast iron feed lines. At present the fuel is coal, but provision has been made for oil or gas.

The auditorium is illuminated by indirect lighting supplied through ten ornamental plaster urns located on the side pilasters, and two urns on the side walls of the foyer. Each urn contains two blue, one red and one white light. The white lamp is 150 watts, and each of the colored is 60 watts. Colored bulbs have been used in place of lenses, thereby effecting some saving in cost of electrical equipment. Concealed illumination has also been worked out at the sides, and overhead at the proscenium arch. Lighting fixtures in the foyer and vestibule are of a modern design and are arranged tight to the ceiling. Each fixture has an ornamental plaster surround design. Concealed lighting has also been worked out in the exterior cornice over the ticket office.

ACOUSTIC TREATMENT

Cinder blocks for the interior of the auditorium wall treatment were selected for their acoustic and insulating values. The blocks form a veneer to the present walls and are bonded to the existing masonry walls with metal ties. The existing pilasters originally projected 4 inches from the wall, which allowed using a block 3 inches thick without sacrificing any valuable space. The blocks are of various sizes and laid in an ashlar pattern, giving a pleasing effect to the spaces between the existing plaster pilasters. Sunflex paint was applied on the walls. A warm buff shade is a base coat, then different blocks were hand painted in various light shades to give a caen stone appearance. The use of this type of paint does not seal the porous texture of the blocks.

Nu-wood panels were installed in the ceiling, nailed and glued to the present plaster ceiling over metal lath. The nu-wood was laid in an over-all diamond pattern, using five slightly varying shades. Painting of this material is not required. Aside from its acoustic quality, it is an insulating material. Due to the curvature of the ceiling, much care had to be taken in its installation.

PLAN AND DECORATION

The general floor plan is such that little or no space is lost and patrons pass directly through a small lobby into a foyer. Rest rooms are provided at each end of the foyer, with concealed entrances. The foyer is separated from the auditorium by means of a wood-paneled standee rail, the upper part of which is glazed with plate glass decorated with sand-blasted ornamentation. Separate reinforced stairways lead from the alcoves to the projection room and office.

Poster frames are of white metal over wood. The main entrance doors are also covered with white metal and have chrome push bars.

The lobby follows the general architectural design. The wainscoting is of wall tile, representing a polished marble with chrome metal division strips. The upper portion of the lobby is of a metallic "tekko" wall covering in a rose shade. All wood trim is of a modern design and is enameled black. The ceiling is of plaster, paneled and finished with an ornamental plaster cornice, which is painted in bright but harmonizing colors. Floors are of colored terrazzo in pattern design, with a black brictile base. Radiators are concealed by metal grilles with an aluminum finish.

The foyer and auditorium form a unit and are finished from floor to ceiling with cinder blocks laid in ashlar design. As heretofore mentioned, the blocks have been painted very successfully to imitate caen stone. Where the ceiling adjoins the wall, ornamental plaster cornices occur. Ornamental plaster caps are imposed upon the pilasters. All ornamental plaster is of a modern, crisp design, and also have been worked out in a brilliant color scheme. Colors used in the interior stencil design on the plaster pilasters and elsewhere are blues, reds, silver and bronze, with some green.

The total cost of remodeling the Virginia was $16,000.

YES, MR. DESAUTEL!

The Model H-U Motiograph DeLuxe Sound Projector Equipment is not only equal to our previous models but has many new improvements to assure you of even better projection and sound.

The same high quality of material plus the experience of 30 years of building projectors and plus new manufacturing methods insures you of even longer service at small upkeep expense.

Yes, you can buy our projectors only, sound only, or any separate portion of the equipment.

We maintain an engineering department to co-operate at no additional cost in balancing your present amplification and speaker system to Motiograph Sound Projectors. They will work out your problems and keep your installation expense to the very minimum.

Bear in mind that Motiograph DeLuxe Sound Projector Equipment is a complete, balanced equipment. Each equipment is set up individually in our testing theatre where it is put in actual operation as in your theatre before it is shipped to you.

Through testing of expertly manufactured equipment of highest quality materials is the reason so many exhibitors have praised the long life, inexpensive upkeep and patron satisfaction of Motiograph DeLuxe Sound Projector Equipment.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 119, No. 2

"PARENTS AND TEACHERS"

MUCH that has appeared in the columns of Motion Picture Herald reflects and presents an attitude on the part of certain and various militants on the official roster of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers which is far from friendly to the existing institution of the screen and the motion picture industry as constituted.

That, however, official as it may be, as expression of persons in official position, is not precisely to be taken as the attitude of the vast membership of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, those earnest, sincere thousands whose sole interest in this organization is in behalf of the welfare of the children of the land.

The great membership which makes the National Congress of Parents and Teachers an important organization is not interested in invasion of the motion picture industry. Those thousands are not seeking publicity for themselves. They are not trying to make jobs for themselves. They are not covertly interested in creating a market for motion picture equipment. They know nothing about and really care nothing about "block booking" or "blind buying" or "percentage" or "zoning" or "clearances" or any other detail of motion picture industry operation. They do want decent entertainment for their children and they are willing to pay for it at the box office.

Motion Picture Herald is in receipt of ample expressions of inquiry which clearly enough reveal a condition in which socially minded groups, interested in the motion picture as consumers, are confused by the garbled technology which is being poured upon them by "leaders" with axes to grind.

All large, diffuse, national organizations of the type are susceptible to influences and pressures that are the common devices of politicians, fixers and ax grinders.

The professional "leader," the organizer, the chronic "secretary" moving from one organization to another, eternally discovering "causes" about which to shout, is a painfully familiar type.

All that is really necessary to do about the "plan" and agitations of the current program credited to the National Congress of Parents and Teachers is to make it known and understood to the membership for exactly what it is.

AS WE GROW UP

THE motion picture art has progressed a long way from the days when the screen wanted nothing but the sweet young lollypops and marshmallows of adolescent desire. Today we read with pleasure of a present for Miss May Robson in honor of her seventieth birthday consisting of a starring role in "Living in a Big Way." Miss Robson is also to play in "Anna Karenina" and "Tale of Two Cities." As maturity comes to the art it presents opportunity for actors beyond "types."

IMMORTALITY

NO surprise should be occasioned by the discovery of Egyptologists of a progenitor of Mickey Mouse in ancient papyrus manuscripts of the days of the Pharaohs. Mickey belongs to the ages, along with Pan, and he becomes visible to mortals under various propitious conditions. The sunburned scribes of the old Nile country and Mr. Walt Disney are alike as much Mickey's instruments as the stylus that put him on papyrus and the camera that liberates him on the screen. Mickey is an idea and real ideas are without age or time. He will keep on turning up forever and aye.

FADING STAR

THE authority of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales as the world's fashion plate is waning, if one is to accept dispatches from London. It seems that even London has dared to question, delicately you understand, the advisability of following his recent appearance in morning coat and blue shirt. And that brings us to the great moral lesson. H.R.H. really attained his position as a motion picture figure. Presented with frequency on the screen as a gallant young man, he became a great figure with a vast fan following. In recent years he has avoided the camera, petulant, annoyed at the screen's increasing revelation of his nervous habits, including the endless fingering of his tie. He is, in consequence, out of the picture. All stars wane, all fans are like that.

THIS WEEK---

RADIO AND FILMS

Speaking before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York last week, Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of NBC and RKO, urged greater cooperation between radio and film industries for the good of theatres. "Let's take the great forces of radio and the theatre and make them work for each other," he concluded. Next day he boarded a plane to rush to Fort Collins, Col., where his mother, Mrs. Georgia Shores Aylesworth, had just died.

TRI-ERGON'S END

Received by the United States district court at Scranton, Pa., last week was an official notice from the U. S. supreme court terminating all action relative to the Tri-Ergon cases against Wilmer & Vincent and Altoona Publix, theatre circuits. . . .

HUFFMAN CASE

At Washington the U. S. Justice Department has not determined its course of action in the Harry Huffman Denver case, following a court decision that the code did not apply to exhibition, which was termed "intrastate" commerce. Justice officials indicated action will be based largely on an expected supreme court decision in the New York poultry case, virtually a Recovery Act test. . . .

CHICAGO UNION

Named in a suit charging misappropriation of $500,000 of union funds, brought by third Vice-president Harland Holmden of the Chicago operators' union, were the estate of Thomas E. Maloy, whose dictatorship ended in a hail of machine gun bullets, and 11 of his lieutenants. An accounting of the union's books is asked. . . .

WOULD SETTLE SUIT

Plans are under way to settle the $1,000,000 suit of the Chicago Title and Trust Company against William Fox and Fox Theatres, it was revealed in New York supreme court, when counsel were granted a postponement of trial to May 13. The action involves defaults on guaranteed redemption of Roxy theatre stock, the bank suing as assignee for Herbert Lubin. . . .

EDUCATIONAL'S 20th

Educational will celebrate its 20th anniversary on May 8. Formed on that date in 1915, the short subject producing company was headed by E. W. Hammons, who still is president of the company, which has retained its original name. . . .

SHIRLEY'S GIFT

To indicate their appreciation of her work on the screen, school children of Tillamook, Ore., cheese making center, sent to Shirley Temple, Fox star, a pure bred Jersey calf. A calf on a leash should be a new Coast novelty. . . .

COLOR CAMERA

In MGM's new Technicolor short, "Department Store," a novelty scene has been filmed with a newly developed color camera, which films dancing costumes, while the wearers remain invisible. It was discovered that by painting the girls a brilliant red, and photographing them with special tri-color lenses under particularly strong light, the red (or girls) was invisible.

COMPROMISE

Eleven members of a Birmingham, Ala., jury wanted to see a motion picture, and the law provides that juries must remain together. The snag was that Rev. Arthur O. Garner, juror, does not believe in "such entertainment." The solution: the Rev. Garner went to the show, sat Bible in hand, his back to the screen, blindfolded, in an agreement under which the 11 others listened to a Bible reading after the show.

"GRANDMOTHER" LA FAYETTE

One of the oldest former players in Hollywood, and famed as a portrayer of grandmothers, Ruby La Fayette, widow of John T. Curran, died last week in suburban Bell, at the ripe age of 90. It is estimated she appeared in 200 pictures, including the silent "Miracle Man" and a bit in "Grand Hotel." She retired from the screen last year, at 89. . . .

NATIONAL SCREEN

National Screen Service, defending a Warner action seeking a permanent injunction to restrain the trailer company from making subjects based on Warner films, contends the action is unjustified since Warner took no action over a long period during which National Screen made trailers on Warner films, and actually used such trailers in its own theatres. Trial is not expected for several months. . . .

PARIS THEATRES

When the French Chamber of Deputies adjourned last week without action on theatre tax reduction, threats were heard of the closing of Paris theatres during May and August, though not taken over-seriously. It is said the exhibitors' maneuver in inserting in the bill a clause that houses showing American films should get no reduction, which brought U. S. official protest, caused the bill to die. . . .

THEATRES TO BLOCK

The Criterion and Loew's New York theatre properties will be sold at auction April 26 to satisfy a $4,353,444 defaulted mortgage held by City Bank Farmers Trust Company, which will bid in the property unless a new arrangement is made with Paramount in the interim. Twice offered for sale by Seneca Holding Company, Paramount subsidiary, no acceptable bid was received. . . .

SALOMON WITH TIME

Dr. Erich Salomon, noted "still" photographer of Europe, has concluded a deal with the March of Time newsreel, whereby he will be one of its cameramen, using a new high speed, silent camera. Dr. Salomon's fame rests on his ability to snap notables in casual moments without their knowledge. With a small, newly developed camera he will do the same for the motion picture. . . .

CONTEST WINNERS

Barbara Whitwell, 16, Aurora, Ohio, last week was declared the winner of the essay contest sponsored by Cecil B. DeMille, Paramount director, in connection with his picture, "Cleopatra." The prize, likewise received by second and third place winners John Caldwell, Terre Haute, Ind., and Lawrence S. Cruikshank, Brooklyn, N. Y., was $500 for scholarship purposes. . . .

BERLIN MEETING

Leading films from all countries will be shown at the International Film Congress scheduled for April 25-May 1 at Berlin. The National Association of German Film Theatres will hold its annual convention at the same time. Delegates from leading countries, including the U. S., are expected to attend. . . .

LEGISLATURES vs SCREEN: SCORE: 137 BILLS, 22 LAWS

Many of 73 Measures Pending Will Come Up at Special Sessions; 42 Bills Defeated; Other Proposals Up at Washington

With 137 measures in 43 state legislatures specifically directed against it, the motion picture industry during the first three months of 1935 has come face to face with what observers call the worst flood of adverse bills ever loosed upon the business. Thus far only 42 of these proposed laws have been defeated, 73 legislative proposals remaining either in committee or on the calendars of unfinished business to be taken up in special sessions or reintroduced next year. Twenty-two measures leveled at exhibition and distribution already have become law and of the 73 remaining measures it was estimated that at least one-fourth, or 18 will be passed.

Motion Picture Herald presents on the following pages a detailed survey of legislative activity in 43 states having legislative sessions this year to ascertain exactly what the theatre man, the distributor and the motion picture producer may expect if the bills directed at them and their businesses become law. General legislation, though it may have an indirect relation to the industry, has not been included in the study of the situations in the states.

Of the legislatures which convened this year, 20 have adjourned at this writing. An indeterminate number will reconvene in special sessions, some starting the end of this month and running through June. Others will not call special sessions until after the adjournment of Congress. Among those states whose lawmakers have adjourned are Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Montana, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Washington and Wyoming.

The legislators of these 20 states are responsible for 13 adverse film measures passed to date out of a total of 22 voted in all legislatures.

Among measures of importance pending at the national capital, in addition to the Pettengill measure, are a block booking bill introduced by Representative Celler of New York and now before the House interstate and foreign commerce committee; a block booking bill introduced by Representative Culkin of New York, currently before the same committee; a bill prohibiting the importation and interstate transportation of prize fight films, introduced by Representative Celler, now before the interstate and foreign commerce committee; a bill introduced by Representative Culkin calling for federal control of the industry to protect it against "unfair trade practices and monopoly," to create a Federal Motion Picture Commission and regulate the manufacture of motion pictures at sources of production; a bill applying the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws to alien actors, introduced by Representative Dickstein; a bill introduced by Representative Sirovich of New York providing for the recording of patent pooling agreements and contracts with the commissioner of patents, and an admission tax bill introduced by Representative McLeod of Michigan designed to repeal the present admission and other nuisance taxes and substitute therefor a manufacturers' sales tax of three per cent, applying to films and all other commodities except the necessities of life.

STATE LEGISLATIVE TOLL

On this and following pages is presented in detail the story of lawmaking activity directed against the motion picture industry in the 43 states having legislative sessions to date this year or at the end of 1934 and thus effective this year. Included is a digest of each bill and action taken.

ALABAMA

(Adjourned, March; reconvenes Apr. 30)

Taxation:

General tax bill, including admissions, introduced and killed in committee.

A similar bill may be introduced at adjourned session April 30.

Censorship:

No legislation introduced. State has no censor laws, but some municipalities have local restrictions.

Sunday Shows:

Has had strict Sunday closing laws. In 1932, legislature allowed cities to regulate on local option.

ARIZONA

(Convened in January; adjourned Mar. 14)

Taxation:

Theatre tax proposals scheduled for settlement at special session, April 10.

Two per cent gross income tax bill, including theatres, proposed and passed by both houses.

Two per cent luxury tax, including theatre admissions, proposed. Defeated in House.

Censorship:

None.

ARKANSAS

(Convened in January. Adjourned Mar. 15)

Taxation:

Omnibus Tax Bill proposing extra tax theatre license fees to raise $6,850,000, as follows:

Up to 350 seats in 20,000 or more population, $25 weekly, or $150 annually.

Seating 350 to 3,000, additional $2.50 tax for each 10 seats over 350.

Seats over 2,000, additional $5 tax for each 200 seats.

Cities between 10,000 and 20,000 population, fee is $15 weekly, or $100 annually up to 350 seats and $1.25 for each additional 10 seats.

Between 4,000 and 10,000 population, $10 a week or $50 a year is required, with $1 on each 10 seats over 350.

Cities of 1,000 to 4,000, $3 per week or $25 a year with tax of 50 cents on each 10 seats over 350.

Cities under 1,000, or in rural areas, the tax is $1 a day, $2.50 weekly, or $10 a year. Killed.

Amusement Tax (exempting benevolent, charitable or education):

Theatres in towns over 15,000 population must pay license fees of $5 for each performance; $15 for week of continuous performances, or $500 annually;

In cities less than 15,000, this tax would be $2 for each day; $6 a week, or $200 a year.

Both these bills sponsored by Governor Futrell.

Privilege tax on theatres, introduced by Representative Proctor. Defeated.

Two per cent sales tax, including theatres, proposed and passed.

Censorship:

No state law.

Sunday Shows:

State law exists but is enforced in only a few small towns.

CALIFORNIA

(Convened in January)

Taxation:

Income: —Proposed levy up to 75 per cent. This was cut in March to 15 per cent on incomes $30,000 and up. Proposed rate, if grafted to current state and federal imposts, would make total 76 per cent on incomes of $1,000,000. Vote in House scheduled for this week.

Admissions: Bill No. 703. Introduced by Senator McColl. Provides for imposition of 10 per cent tax on all theatre admissions over 20 cents, the tax to be on the net amount over 20 cents. Estimated cost to industry: $6,000,000. Referred to committee on revenue and taxation. Little likelihood of passage because this is one of the "consumers' taxes" opposed by the coalition of EPIC and Republican forces in the Assembly.

Bill No. 915. Introduced by Senator Young. Same provisions as Bill No. 703. Referred to committee on revenue and taxation.

Bill No. 931. Introduced by Senator Shottky. Provides for 10 per cent tax on all amusement tickets of any kind, exempting first 10 cents. Referred to committee.

Bill No. 2095 (Assembly). Introduced by Assemblyman Stream. Same provisions as Senate Bill No. 703 and same status as to passage and cost to industry.

Linear Tax: Bill No. 1153. Introduced by Assemblyman Chatters. Provides for tax of one cent on each foot of motion picture film to be paid in all cases of sale, lease, rental or distribution in any manner within the confines of the state of California. Cost to industry would average around $80 for exchange of each feature. Likelihood of passage uncertain but possible because of great deficit in state's treasury.

Bill No. 1659. Introduced by Assemblyman Laughlin. Provides a tax, amount to be determined later, in accordance with same general provisions as in Bill No. 1153. Amended to ½ cent a foot. Killed in committee.

Bill No. 1796. Introduced by Assemblyman Laughlin. In skeleton form. Referred to committee on revenue and taxation.

Gross Receipts: Bill No. 2226. Introduced by Assemblyman Turner. Imposes a tax in excess of $250 on gross receipts, amount to be determined by State board of equalization. Referred to committee on revenue and taxation.

Two-Men-in-Booth:

Bill No. 602. Introduced by Assemblymen Richie, Reaves and Flint. Provides for minimum of two operators in each projection booth.

Censorship:

Bill No. 888. Introduced by Assemblyman Hunt, to establish state motion picture commission, and provides for supervision of manufacture and projection of motion pictures in California, including inspection, classification and cataloguing of such pictures. Referred to committee on governmental efficiency and economy.

Bill No. 1472. Introduced by Assemblyman Hunt. Same general provisions as Bill No. 888 and same status. Distributors must pay annual license fee of $100 to operate and must post bond of $5,000. Exhibitors must obtain license to show pictures. Same status as Bill No. 888.

Bill No. 2167. Introduced by Assemblyman Rosenthal. Creates a Board of Review for licensing of distributors and exhibitors and prescribes rules for regulation of production, distribution and exhibition of pictures. Referred to committee on governmental efficiency and economy.

Indications early this month were that Governor Merriam will veto these socalled "purifying" bills.

Sales Tax:

Bill introduced by Senator Sharkey. Provides for continuance of the sales tax at two and one-half per cent, instead of permitting a reduction to two per cent on June 30 as required by law.

Senate revenue and taxation committee approved a bill under which film releases and rentals and other tangibles could be brought under the general sales tax of three per cent. Later the Assembly amended this to exclude short term rentals, such as films.

General:

State franchise levy increase proposed, providing an increase of from two to four per cent, directly affecting producers and distributors in the state.

A measure providing for licensing fees for each unit operated by a chain organization, including theatres, was declared unconstitutional by Attorney General Webb. This measure was aimed at chains operated outside the county where the organization has its headquarters.

California has no existing censorship laws.

There is no Sunday closing law in the state.

COLORADO

(Convened in January; adjourned April 6)

Taxation:

Sales Tax: Two per cent sales tax passed, exempting theatres. No likelihood of any legislation affecting theatres in present session.

Censorship:

There is no censor law in Colorado.

Sundays:

The state has no Sunday closing law.

CONNECTICUT

(Convened in January)

Taxation:

Gross Receipts: Bill introduced by Senator Barney provides a five per cent tax on all amusements. Now pending in legislature. Meeting strongly organized exhibitor opposition.

Seating Tax: Bill introduced by Representative Thornhill provides increase in present seat tax rate, which varies in accordance with size of theatre from $1.50 to $8 daily, by 25 per cent.

Bill introduced proposing increase in billboard advertising tax by 300 per cent. Referred to committee.

Other Bills:

Three bills were scheduled to come up April 12. They are: Two-Men-in-a-Booth; compulsory control projection device for each machine in a booth and a censorship bill.

Bill, introduced by Senator Spiro, permits theatres to open Sunday after 2 p.m. In committee.

DELAWARE

(Convened in January. Adjourned April 4)

Taxation:

Bill, No. 101, introduced by Representative Heal. To license billboard advertising. Passed by both houses.

Censorship:

Bill to create a Board of Motion Picture Review. Introduced by Representative Dugan. Provides for board of three to censor all films shown in state. Fee for each reel approved or censored, $2. Estimated cost to industry, $91,000 annually. Not called up for vote.

TAXATION CHIEF AIM OF MEASURES

Sundays:

Bill to permit limited Sunday film shows. Introduced by Representative Dr. Willard Pierce. Provided for showing of Sunday pictures after 9 P.M., with a tax of three cents on each ticket. Measure abandoned.

Bill to permit Sunday showings after 1 P.M. Introduced by Representative Joseph Brogan. House reported favorably on the measure and then recalled the report as a mistake. Bill referred to House miscellaneous committee, which reported unfavorably. Thereafter defeated in House, 8-20.

FLORIDA

(Convened in April)

Taxation:

Florida Education Association announced it would drop its plan for a general sales tax to put a straight 10 per cent tax on all amusements. This was introduced by Senator Bass.

Censorship:

A Board of Review of Motion Pictures was created by the legislature 20 years ago, but has never been called upon to pass a picture.

Sundays:

There is a Sunday closing law, but it is not enforced to any extent.

Licensing:

Bill, proposed by Senator Smith, calls for an annual license fee of $50 on all houses grossing less than $10,000 annually. From $10,000 to $25,000, the fee would be $1,000, and for any gross over $25,000, a license would cost $5,000.

GEORGIA

(Adjourned, March 20; meets July 15)

Taxation:

Bill providing for five per cent tax on theatre and other amusement admissions. Referred to committee and unanimously reported adversely.

Gross revenue bill introduced. Provided for levy of 3 per cent on gross business of exchanges. Killed in committee.

Censorship:

Bill, introduced by Senator Skelton, provided for appointment of a commission to regulate the film industry and set up a code of ethics. Killed in committee.

Sundays:

State has Sunday closing law, but state supreme court ruling of two years ago permits theatres to open Sundays provided proceeds go to charity after deduction of expenses.

IDAHO

(Convened in February; adjourned in Mar.)

Taxation:

Sales Tax: Bill, proposing two per cent retail sales tax, introduced and killed in House, which recommended similar measure with amendments. Latter was passed by both houses and signed by governor. Includes admissions.

ILLINOIS

(Convened in January)

Taxation:

Bill, introduced in House, provides for increase in sales tax from one to 3 per cent, including motion picture theatres. Referred to committee.

DELAWARE UNION INVITES INDUSTRY

The Central Labor Union of Wilmington, Del., at the request of projectionists, stage hands and musicians, this week invited California producers contemplating removal from that state because of high taxes to locate in Delaware. In a wire to Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of MGM, an invitation was extended following reports that agents from leading companies had made surveys in Delaware, New Jersey and Florida.

Will Rogers, on his regular broadcast last Sunday night, told his audience that he expected the tax situation in California would undoubtedly cause a wholesale exodus of the studios from their present location.

"But," the comedian said, "I doubt if they'll go any farther than the other side of Vermont avenue."

Bill, introduced by Senator Kribs, proposes a gross income levy of one-fifth of one per cent. Referred to committee.

Censorship:

Bill calling for abolition of all city censor bodies and, in their place, establishment of a state board of five to be appointed by the governor. Introduced by Representative McSweeney. Measure provides power for board to prohibit exhibition of any pictures as well as to make deletions. Sentiment on the bill is that if there must be any form of censorship in the state a state board, rather than city boards, is preferable, inasmuch as the cost to exchanges of the local boards has been far too high.

Sundays:

There is no Sunday closing law in Illinois.

INDIANA

(Convened in January; adjourned in Mar.)

Taxation:

Admissions: Bill introduced by Representative Stanton. Provided for 10 per cent straight tax on all admissions. Indefinitely postponed.

General:

House Bill No. 242. Provides for licensing of all electricians and requiring all work done under their direction. Introduced by Representative Lutz. Measure would have added an electrician to all stage crews and would have required an electrician to supervise all booth repairs formerly done unaided by operator. Indefinitely postponed.

Bill No. 411, introduced by Representative Wood. Withdrawn.

Bill No. 527, introduced by Representative Wood. Passed by House, but defeated in Senate.

Censorship:

No measures introduced. No state law.

Sundays:

There is no Sunday closing law.

IOWA

(Convened in January)

Taxation:

Bill, introduced by Representative Johnston, provides straight 10 per cent admission tax. Reported favorably by ways and means committee before recess to March 12. No further action.

Two Men in a Booth:

Bill introduced in House. Referred to committee.

Fire Prevention:

Bill to regulate exhibitions and provide for fire preventions and protection of patrons and employees. Introduced by Senator Reese. Killed by Senate on opposition of exhibitors claiming measure would increase number of operators.

Sundays:

The House passed to the Senate, 61-38, repeals of Sunday Blue Laws.

KANSAS

(Convened in January; adjourned in Mar.)

Taxation:

Excise: Bill No. 631. Introduced by House committee on taxation. Provided for four per cent tax on gross business of motion picture theatres. Under its terms exhibitors would have had to keep permanent records subject to examination by state tax commission, with penalties of $100 a day for each day's failure to keep records and 25 per cent of amount of tax for failure to file return. Estimated cost to Kansas exhibitors, $120,000 annually. Proposal defeated.

Admissions: House bill No. 638. Introduced by committee on education. Bill provided revenue for school fund to be derived from a 10 per cent tax on admissions to all amusements, excepting county and state fairs, amusements of a charitable nature and school events. Tax would be levied on free passes as well as paid admisisons, with the exhibitor passing it on to the state department of inspections and registration. Penalty for non-payment included 100 per cent of the amount of the tax, together with a fine and jail sentence. The House passed the bill with amendments, striking out the amusement tax section. The entire bill was killed in the Senate. Estimated cost to industry was $300,000 annually.

Bill, No. 229, introduced by Representative Relihan, provided for tax of one-tenth of one mill per foot as gross business tax. Defeated in House.

Censorship:

Bill No. 129. Introduced by Representative Briles. Provided for repeal of provision of state censor law prohibiting the making of film contracts in Kansas before the picture is passed on by the censor board. Passed both branches and now part of original censor law.

Sundays:

Bill No. 410. Introduced by Senator Baird. Provided for prohibition of sale of goods, services and merchandise on Sunday. Kansas already has a Sunday closing law, but this bill was aimed at those who circumvent the law. The bill was killed in committee.

Bill No. 337. Introduced by Senator Miller. Provided for legalization of Sunday shows. Killed in committee.

MARYLAND

(Convened in January; adjourned in April)

Taxation:

Admissions: Exhibitors escaped a state admission tax, attempted in the Assembly, which, however, enacted a one per cent gross retail tax applying to all tangible articles.

Bill, H.B. No. 601. Provided straight 10 per cent admission tax. Defeated in House.

Luxury tax, providing a levy of 5 per cent on gross business, and including theatres, defeated in House.

Licensing:

Bill introduced by Senator Callan calling for doubling of present theatre license fees. The bill also provided for an additional charge to circuits. All theatres charging over five cents would have been affected. Defeated by Senate.

Censorship:

Bill introduced by Senator Baile provided for increase in censor fees from $2 to $3.50 for each 1,000 feet of master print and from $1 to $2 for each 1,000 feet of additional print. The measure was defeated.

Sundays:

Bill to permit Sunday shows in Alleghany County passed the House.

General:

Legislation introduced by Senator Miss Mary Risteau sought to outlaw the making of sound pictures during court sessions of a trial.

MASSACHUSETTS

(Convened in January)

Taxation:

Excise tax on tobacco and theatre admissions, providing a levy of five cents on first 50 cents and 10 cents thereafter, proposed in House by Representative Bateman. Passed both houses.

Restrictive legislation:

Bill introduced by Representative Dorgan. Provides that children under 14 shall not attend motion picture shows except those "suitable for children." Bill would give a religious group legal right to revoke state license of distributors not complying with its provisions, this power lying in the variable meaning of the word "produce." According to the bill, anyone showing "or producing" a motion picture that does not pass the board to be set up under the bill shall have his license revoked. The board would be unpaid, appointed by the Governor and would consist of one representative of each religious denomination. The House refused, by a vote of 57 to 31, to offer a substitute measure following an unfavorable report by public welfare committee.

Bill introduced by Representative Dorgan to prevent attendance by persons under 20 years at theatres located in buildings where liquor is sold. Was killed by the House, 56-42.

Censorship:

Bill No. 156, introduced by Senator Scanlan, would turn licensing boards in the state into censor boards bound to pass on each separate motion picture before it could be exhibited to anyone in the boards' respective communities under the age of 21. Senator Scanlan's bill also petitioned that no one under the age of 14 could attend any show, whether approved or not, after "seven o'clock in the evening of any day unless accompanied by an adult." Infraction of any provisions of Bill No. 156 would result in automatic revocation of theatre licenses. Bill was defeated.

Licensing:

Bill to put licensing of stage hands under the jurisdiction of the commission of public safety was heard in executive session and approved. The bill prohibits employment to any person acting as a master mechanic or stage hand on any stage during a performance until he has received a special or first class license to do so from an inspector.

Bill introduced in Assembly provides no license for billboards or other outdoor advertising can be granted without written consent of a mayor or alderman. Referred to committee.

Another bill provides a complicated licensing system for heating and cooling systems under control of the Department of Public Safety. Referred to committee.

Bill No. 1133, introduced by Representative Quigley, would compel booking agents to seek licenses from the Secretary of State. Referred to committee.

Sundays:

Massachusetts has strict Sunday closing laws which are rigidly enforced. Bill 1202, introduced this session by Representative Mannevitch, sought to permit stage dancing on the Sabbath. Churches in the state have been allowed to put on exhibition dancing on Sundays, but theatrical acts always have been out except in a few instances where the movements can be interpreted as an acrobatic performance. Bill was withdrawn.

General:

Bill introduced by Representative Marshall provided that all corporations and individuals doing business in the state would come under an Economic Council, or a state version of NRA, with wide powers and a 10-year period of life. The council would, among other things, have control of financing of film companies and subsidiaries and distribution of product. The measure was defeated in the House.

Cost of administration to be paid by fees levied on distributors and exhibitors amounting to $3 for each reel of first print and $1 per reel on each succeeding print.

MINNESOTA

(Convened in January; adjourns April 26)

Taxation:

Footage: Film footage tax, substituted for 10 per cent amusement levy in omnibus bill which recently was killed in committee, proposed. Levy is one-half cent for each linear foot of film used in the state. This would be $30 on a 6,000-foot feature. Present sales contracts require exhibitors pay this tax, if and when imposed.

Bill, introduced in House, provides for 3 per cent sales tax. Referred to committee.

General:

A bill, exactly similar to that passed in Ohio, making it unlawful for distributors to require exhibitors under contract to play any picture on a specific day, was referred to committee for deliberation.

Bill, introduced by Senator Mullin, provides for regulation of selling of motion picture film in state.

Censorship:

No censorship proposals this session. State has no censor law.

Sundays:

Minnesota has no Sunday closing law.

MISSOURI

(Convened in January; adjourned in April)

Censorship:

Bill No. 123, introduced by Senator John P. Shea, provides for setting up of state censor board with power to censor all films and "folders, posters, pictures or advertising matter." Newsreels are not exempted. All eliminations, changes and rejections must be made in duplicate prints as well as originals. Requires advance fee of $5 for each reel examined, whether approved or disapproved and whether originals or duplicates; and a fee of 50 cents for inspection of each piece of advertising. Estimated cost to industry is $300,000 annually. The board would consist of three members, each to be appointed by the Governor and each to receive a $4,000 salary (this was amended to $2,500 annually). The board may appoint a secretary at an annual salary of $3,000 (amended to $1,500). Board is given unlimited powers. Penalties for failure to observe bill's provisions are $1,000 fine or jail sentence of not more than one year. Bill approved for passage with amendments by Senate committee on criminal jurisprudence.

Taxation:

Amusements: Bill No. 184, introduced by Representative Lindhorst, provided for 10 per cent tax on motion picture showings, "tobacco, cosmetics, chewing gum and candy." Killed by House committee on pensions.

Bill No. 406, introduced by Representative Brady, providing for 10 per cent tax on all tickets of admission to theatres, parks and other amusements. Killed by House committee on ways and means.

Bill No. 476, introduced by Representative Brady, providing for tax of one-tenth of one mill per foot of motion picture film sold, rented, leased or licensed to exhibitors, with tax levied on distributors in the nature of a license tax. Killed by House committee on municipal corporations.

Bill No. 486, introduced by Representative Eckert, was identical with Bill No. 476 and was killed by the committee on municipal corporations.

Sales Tax: Bill to increase state sales tax to two per cent from one-half of one per cent, after a long battle in the lower chamber over allocation of the expected revenue, was passed by the House, with amendments, to be passed on to the consumer. Admissions, advertising and other services come under the measure's provisions. The bill was sent to the Senate for consideration.

Other sales tax proposals, including one of five per cent, another of three per cent, were killed in House committee.

Miscellaneous:

Bill introduced in Senate for a four per cent levy on all transactions and services rendered.

A chain store tax proposal, including theatres, was reported favorably in the House. Bill would levy a tax of $25 to $200 per unit, depending on the number in the chain. Sent to Senate.

Gift Enterprises:

Bill No. 203, introduced by Representative Catron, amended the 1929 lottery laws by adding a new section prohibiting drawings in the nature of a lottery or gift enterprises at business establishments, theatres, and other amusements. Bill specifically banned bank nights and cash nights. Killed by House committee on criminal jurisprudence.

Standing Room:

Bill No. 495, introduced by Representative Brady, prohibited theatres and other places of amusement from selling admissions tickets when there are not seats immediately available to the purchaser. Killed by House committee on municipal corporations.

Sunday:

Missouri has Sunday closing law but it is not generally enforced.

NEBRASKA

(Convened in January)

Taxation:

Circuit Tax: Bill No. 94, introduced by Representatives Wachtler and Hopkins, proposing levy of an annual tax on circuits, rates running from $25 for two theatres; $35 each for three; $50 each for four; $100 each for five; $150 each for from six to 10 and $200 each for more than 10. Total expense to industry in the state would be about $20,000 annually.

Sales Tax: Bill No. 352, asked sales tax of two per cent on all retail transactions, including admissions to places of amusement. Estimated cost would be $100,000 annually. Tax would have been added onto ticket price. Killed in House.

Gross Income: Bill No. 602, introduced by Representative Obbink asked tax of 10 per cent imposed on gross income derived from the sale, lease, rent or furnishing of any motion pictures shown for profit. Tax would hit distributors for about $450,000 each year. Killed in House by vote of 44-26.

Miscellaneous:

Bill No. 57, introduced by Representatives Wachtler and Hopkins, requires all film theatres have a separate fireproof receptacle for each reel of film, and that in all theatres having more than 300 seating capacity there shall be an operator for each machine. The bill would cost the Nebraska industry an estimated $1,000,000 additional each year.

Censorship:

State has no censor law, although one is submitted at almost every session. One was prepared for the current session but was not introduced.

Sundays:

No state closing law.

KUYKENDALL SEES A BRIGHTER 1935

Speaking informally early in January on the outlook of exhibitors for the year 1935, and with special regard to the legislative situation, Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, said:

"Theatre owners everywhere are looking forward to 1935 with renewed courage and optimism. It is as it should be, because 1934 is past history."

Exempting provisions of the lottery law when drawings are promoted "by any licensed business firms for advertising or business promotion purposes" and when there is no consideration directly charged by such business firm for chances and for tickets thus used.

NEW YORK

(Convened in January; adjourned in April)

Censorship:

Senate Bill No. 68, introduced by Senator McCall, provides for supervision of contractual relations between exhibitors and distributors. The bill is in the form of an amendment to the state Education Law, specifically that portion dealing with motion picture censorship. It provides for the classification of motion pictures into adult, family and juvenile grades. It requires each distributor to pay an annual license fee of $5,000 and post a surety bond or insurance policy of $100,000, the premium under which would be about $3,500. The exhibitor is required to pay an annual license fee, regardless of the number of seats in his theatre or the population of the community in which it is situated, of $1,000, and post a bond of $50,000, upon which the premium would be $1,750. Referred to public education committee; committee discharged; bill amended, ordered reprinted.

Senate Bill No. 646, introduced by Senator McCall and Representative Canney, amending the education law in relation to the approval and licensing of motion picture films by the motion picture division. The bill adds the words "lewd, filthy, lascivious" to the reason for rejecting a film, provides for censorship of advertising matter and prohibits approval of any advertising which is in any manner "misleading, or extravagant in its terms, effects and/or illustrations calculated to misinform, mislead or deceive in any material fact." The bill raises the fee for approval of a film from $3 for each 100 feet to $100 for the first 1,000 feet, and $5 for each additional 1,000 feet or fraction thereof of any film examined. Further, the bill provides that all advertising matter to be used in connection with any motion picture must be approved by the censorship board and a fee of $10 paid for each item so approved. (This would include such items as press notices, photographs, posters and the like.) Referred to public education committee.

Bill No. 316, introduced by Representative Breitbart, provided for special censorship of films intended to be shown to children and prohibits the admission of children to witness a picture which has not been approved for juvenile consumption. The bill carried no tax.

This bill was first introduced in the Assembly by Mr. Breitbart at the mid-summer session last year.

Bill No. 219, introduced by Representative Neustein, to liberalize the present censorship law and attempts to transfer the film censorship machinery from the office of the commissioner of education to the state comptroller's office. The bill was adjudged unconstitutional, because the constitution prohibits the imposition of any administrative powers and duties upon the state comptroller, and was killed.

Bill No. 377, introduced by Senator Schwartzwald, to amend the education law by providing that the state issue licenses for films imported from foreign countries placing unreasonable restrictions on the exhibition of American pictures. This bill was directed against German films. Referred to public education committee.

Taxation:

Seating and Registration: Senate Bill No. 647, introduced by McCall-Monahan, to amend the tax law by imposing a tax of 10 cents per 100 feet for the privilege of running motion picture film through a projection machine. This tax would be at the rate of about $5.40 an hour on each theatre. The bill further provides that the exhibitor must pay an annual registration fee of 50 cents for each seat in his theatre and post a bond of $20,000. If he does not pay his taxes, the tax department is authorized to use as a base for determining his tax the number of minutes the theatre is open each day multiplied by 90 as a base, to which would be added a penalty of $20 per day for failure to file a return. The premium on the bond would be $700 annually. Referred to committee on taxation and retrenchment.

Bill, introduced by Representative Moran, provided for an annual registration fee of $50 for each motion picture theatre and a bond of $5,000. It provided for a graduated tax on the exhibition of motion picture film running from one cent per foot in a theatre of more than 5,000 seats in a city or borough containing more than 1,000,000 inhabitants, "including aliens," down to 2/10ths of a mill per foot in a theatre of 2,000 seats or less in a city, town or village of 10,000 inhabitants, "including aliens and aborigines." Were this bill to become law it would cost the Radio City Music Hall, for example, about $600 a day and a theatre situated in a place of 10,000 inhabitants or less with less than 2,000 seats about $1 an hour. The bill provided, however, that in any week wherein the total paid admissions to a theatre are less than one and one-half of the seating capacity multiplied by the number of days of exhibition during the week, the tax imposed for that week to be but one-half of the prescribed rates. Bill set aside for hearing.

ADMISSION TAXES CHIEF PROBLEM

Bill, introduced by Representative Moran, to impose a tax of 2/10ths of a mill per foot on all film before it can be examined by the censor board.

Restrictive:

Bill No. 2059, introduced by Representative Stephens, to amend the general municipal law and the penal law so as to permit a city, town or village to enact a local law or ordinance permitting children between the ages of 5 and 16 to be admitted to motion picture theatres between the hours of 10 A.M. and 6 P.M., except on school days, when the hours shall be from 3 P.M. to 6 P.M., unaccompanied by parent or guardian, to witness films which have been specially censored for children. The bill provided that the theatre shall pay an annual license fee of $10 for the privilege of showing to children. The theatre must provide a separate seat for each child and a matron for each 75 children, and women registered nurses and women eligible to teach school shall be given preference in appointment as matrons. No theatre to be licensed to exhibit to children unless it has received written approval of the local police, health and fire departments.

Senate Bill No. 1442, introduced by Senator Mandelbaum and Representative Stephens, to amend the penal law permitting children to be admitted to motion picture theatres if the theatre obtains the approval of local police, and fire departments or other analogous agency and if a separate section is reserved in the theatre for children. No such child shall be admitted during school hours. A matron is to be employed for each 200 children.

Income:

Bill No. 416, introduced by Representative Schwartz, amending the tax law in relation to personal income tax by providing, among other things, that a non-resident of the state who receives a royalty or other fixed amount of money based upon paid admissions to any motion picture theatre operated within the state, shall be deemed to be engaged in a business carried on in the state and subject to the personal income tax. Referred to committee on taxation and retrenchment.

Sundays:

Bill, introduced by Senator Berg, to permit Sunday dramatic and musical shows in the state. Passed both houses and signed by Governor Lehman.

Bill, introduced by Senator Berg, provides that actors and other employees in dramatic or musical companies shall be given one full day of rest in seven. Passed both houses and signed by Governor Lehman.

General:

(Convened in January; adjourned Mar. 9)

Taxation:

Sales and Admissions: Three per cent sales tax became effective January 1, and the former 10 per cent admission tax on theatre tickets was suspended at that time. Sales under 10 cents are exempted. The sales tax requires that it must be paid by patrons and not absorbed by exhibitors or other merchants. The state legal department ruled recently that placards, billboards and similar advertising material sold or leased by Ohio exchanges to theatres within the state are subject to the tax.

Bill, introduced in February in the House, proposed a return to the old 10 per cent admissions tax, but was not acted upon.

Governor Davey this month proposed renewal of the 10 per cent admissions tax.

Censorship:

Bill No. 73, introduced by Senator Zoul, provides for increase in censor fees to $3 for first 1,000-foot reel and $2 for each succeeding 1,000 feet. Referred to committee on taxation. Estimated industry cost, $100,000 extra annually.

Bill No. 159, introduced by Representative Carey, provides for an increase in censor fees to $5 for first 1,000 feet and $3 for each 1,000 feet thereafter. Passed by both houses. Estimated cost to industry, $200,000 extra annually.

Restrictive:

Bill No. 88, introduced by Senator Waldvogel. Prohibits distributors from specifying and enforcing designated playdates under contract. Sponsored by Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, which contends the enforcement of designated playdates compels exhibitors to play "sex" and other objectionable pictures on Sundays. Bill passed by both House and Senate and sent to Governor Davey for signature. Governor sought opinion from state attorney general Bricker, who pronounced the measure unconstitutional, as interfering with the rights and property of copyright owners under federal laws and an unwarranted interference with the rights of private contract of the owners of film. Governor Davey allowed the bill to become a law without his signature, effective July 5.

FRENCH ISLANDS HAVE CENSORSHIP

The islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, located off the Gulf of St. Lawrence, whose population found American Prohibition so profitable, are not to have their morals corrupted by the American motion picture if the French government has anything to say about it. A decree in the Journal Official in Paris said recently that "since the cinema constitutes the chief amusement of the populace and can, in view of the geographical isolation of the colony, exercise considerable influence over its youth," a film censorship must be established. The population of the islands, chiefly fishermen, is now 3,584 and one (1) censor.

Use of Code Funds Approved by NRA

Use of funds in the possession of the motion picture Code Authority for administrative expenses pending approval of a budget for the first half of the current year was approved in Washington this week by the NRA.

Under the order, the Code Authority is permitted to spend $100,054 for expenses during the first four months of 1935, the sum set representing four times the actual expenditures of last December, plus $500 for legal fees made necessary by a suit pending against the Cleveland grievance board and $1,100 necessary for the payment of accounting and auditing service.

It was explained that at the close of 1934 the Code Authority had a surplus of some $30,000 to which have been added contributions received under the assessment for the last half of the year. From this are to be taken temporarily funds necessary for operation pending approval of a new budget under which assessments can be levied for the period from January 1 to June 16, 1935.

Other developments included, in New York, the first meeting of an arbitration committee authorized by the film code in connection with a breach-of-contract complaint. The complaint was brought against the W. G. L. Amusement Company by Fox, the plaintiff winning by default when the defendant did not appear. W. G. L. Amusement Company operates the Lincoln theatre, Brooklyn.

Ben Berinstein and Harry Vinnicoff, representing the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California, arrived in New York on Tuesday for a hearing before the Code Authority on the Los Angeles clearance and zoning schedule. They insisted that Fox West Coast be denied a rehearing and that the schedule be made effective at once, Mr. Berinstein said.

Fabian to Bid on Fox Metropolitan

Si Fabian, operator of the Fox theatre in Brooklyn, is contemplating a bid for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses in competition with that advanced by Joseph M. Schenck and Fox Theatre Corporation. Mr. Fabian said this week, however, that numerous details remain to be set before his bid will be made, and said that he doubted whether any definite offer could be made by him before April 15, the date set for hearing of the Schenck-Fox Theatres reorganization plan.

Mr. Fabian made a formal denial that Warner is associated or in any way interested in the contemplated bid. His principal financial associate is reported to be the Bankers Bond & Mortgage Company, with possibly Albert M. Greenfield of Philadelphia participating on an investment basis.

INDEPENDENTS ATTACK FILM CODE AT SENATE HEARING ON THE NRA

Myers of Allied and Melvin Albert for New York ITOA Charge Inequitable Setup of Authority and Boards

The "little fellows" in motion picture exhibition again went to Washington this week to complain about the hardships worked on them by the motion picture code, when, on Monday, at an NRA hearing, the Senate finance committee was told by representatives of independent exhibitors that unless needed changes are made there may be a general abandonment of the Blue Eagle by that division of the industry.

For the most part, the testimony on the code, offered by Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, and Melvin Albert, appearing on behalf of Harry Brandt and the Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York, related to the alleged inequitable setup of the Code Authority and the regional boards.

Appearing as the first witness to discuss the code, Mr. Myers told the committee that "we regard the film code as entirely separate and apart from general NRA codes" and that the "best friends of NRA should be eager to ferret out the inequities of this code."

Notes Difference from Other Codes

He pointed out that the difference from other codes lies in the fact that the Code Authority is named in the agreement as a result of which, he charged, "The Big 8 were given complete domination of the film Code Authority. The inequity of that is that this Code Authority, unlike most others, does not simply administer the mechanical features of the code but has conferred on it quasi-judicial authority."

Going back to the negotiation of the code, Mr. Myers asserted that the committee which negotiated it was named by the deputy administrator in charge, Sol A. Rosenblatt, who finally declared that a code would be written for the industry.

Asked by Senator King (Dem.) of Utah, whether he ever found out who actually drafted the code, the witness replied "I do not know. I do not think Mr. Rosenblatt drafted it because I do not think he had the grasp of the industry problems or, perhaps, the subtlety to draft a code like this," and intimated that Nathan Burkan exercised some influence in its writing.

Says "Big 8" Voted Together

"Allied were treated as outcasts during the negotiations," he commented, asserting that the code was signed "in secret" and his organization was not invited to sign.

The representatives of the "Big 8," plus Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, the witness told the committee, "have voted together on every issue involving exhibitors" and there is a fixed division of seven to three on the Code Authority on all issues which arise between sellers and buyers of film and between the different classes of theatres.

Mr. Myers read into the record a letter from Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass., exhibitor, and independent theatre representative on the Code Authority, in which it was declared the producer-distributor members of the Code Authority were permitted to name the members of the local boards who were to represent their interests without interference from the exhibitors, but the exhibitor members were not permitted to name their representatives and no exhibitor was named until he had been investigated and approved by the distributor members.

Mr. Yamins, the letter said, protested the alleged evasion of the code by the insertion into contracts of various provisions, but the Code Authority refused to send the matter to the legal division of the NRA for an opinion.

Mr. Yamins also charged that when a case comes up in which a member of the Code Authority may be disqualified because of his company's interest in the matter, he is nevertheless permitted to sit in on the argument although he does not vote, through an "interpretation" of the code which restricts the definition of "sitting" to voting.

"My conclusion after one year's service on the Code Authority is that the independent receives little or no consideration when his interests conflict with those of the affiliated members," he declared.

Mr. Yamins concluded by pointing out that two months ago Mr. Rosenblatt recommended that the Code Authority study recommendations for revision, but that nothing has been done "and when the matter is brought up by the executive secretary it is immediately tabled."

"Received Evasive Replies"

Mr. Myers explained that his organization has several times written to the National Industrial Recovery Board suggesting that the code be reopened "but have always received the most evasive replies."

Mr. Myers was questioned by Senator Barkley (Dem.) of Kentucky, who apparently had been given information regarding the code, as to the number of assents, the Senator asserting that there were 10,143 theatres in operation on February 1, last, of which 9,169 had voluntarily consented to the code, 6,500 of the assenters being independent operators.

"I have heard statements made by a member of the Code Authority that they had approximately 7,500 assents," Mr. Myers responded.

"You do not contend that the evils did not exist prior to the code?" Senator Barkley continued.

"What the code did," Mr. Myers explained, "was to take each of these practices and without materially remedying them, incorporate them in the code."

"Are you advocating the discontinuance of the NRA?" the Senator asked.

"No," said Mr. Myers. "On the contrary. I am complaining only of the motion picture code in its present setup."

Offers New Provision

Asked by Senator Barkley as to the operation of the local boards, Mr. Myers said, "So far as I know no exhibitor has received any adequate assistance through that method." Senator Barkley also referred to forcing and cancellation, neither of which, Mr. Myers contended, were satisfactory to the exhibitors.

Laying the matter squarely before the committee, Mr. Myers presented the draft of a provision which he urged should be incorporated in any legislation developed to extend the industrial recovery act, as follows:

"All codes which authorize the Code Authority or other board or agency created thereunder to hear and determine controversies between concerns engaged in different branches of the industry affected shall, as a condition of their validity, provide that such Code Authority or other board or instrumentality shall be composed of an equal number of bona fide representatives of each branch of the industry embraced in such code and shall also provide for a representative or representatives of the government with power to cast a deciding vote in case of a tie; provided, that any concern embraced in any such code which is engaged in the manufacture or production of any commodities or products or in making the initial sales or leases thereof and is also engaged, directly or indirectly, through holding companies, stock ownership, interlocking directorates or otherwise, in the buying or exhibiting of such commodities or products, may be represented on any such code authority or other board or agency only in its capacity as a manufacturer, producer or original seller or lessor thereof."

Yamins, Code Authority Member, Says in Letter Independent Receives Little or No Consideration from That Body

Only Vertical Code, Says Albert

Declaring that it is the only vertical code in operation, Mr. Albert asserted, "the producer and distributor are one, so that on all boards and the Code Authority there is no exhibitor representation at all, I mean independent. He is outnumbered two to one."

New York independents have never signed the code, "90 per cent have not signed", and have defied the code and the regional labor board, he said. In connection with the latter, he explained his group refused to reinstate employees as ordered in the hope the board would take the matter to the courts, but it has never done so because, he charged, "they know the code could not stand investigation".

Of 150 cases arising during the past year only two have been taken to the local board, he said, because it is felt no fair decision could be secured.

"We feel that we need a code," he concluded, but "if we are going to have a code of that type, the exhibitors of New York will haul down their Blue Eagles."

MPTOA Calls Code "Football"

It is anticipated that before the hearings close, Division Administrator Rosenblatt will testify in rebuttal of the charges made by Mr. Myers and Mr. Albert.

In New York, a bulletin from national headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America pointed out that, "the NRA is under a barrage of criticism in Washington, where all the disappointments, complaints, hostility of those who have been forced to behave under it, jealousies and suspicions and rumors are being dragged out to 'help Congress improve on the present law.' It is now a political football. Hence, it appears to be hopeless to get any serious consideration right now on what can be done to make the motion picture code what it should be."

"Most of the yelling will again be done by the very chiselers and professional agitators who have loudly opposed NRA from the beginning. It's hard to make any headway in regulating unscrupulous competition in this business."

BALCON HAS EYE TO EIGHTH AVENUE

Affable Director of Gaumont British Production Signs Talent For Films for American Market

by DOUGLAS W. CHURCHILL

The menacing cloud that hung over the studios for so long, the threat of British invasion, has passed and left Hollywood unperturbed. Although it was admittedly an aggressive thrust on the part of London producers, the method by which it was accomplished was so disarming that today no one seems to be aware of it.

It is unreasonable that an observer of this industry should be more suspicious than the people in it. No one, I have heard it said, is more skeptical than a Hollywood producer. It is equally true that no one is more gullible—in some ways. It is the distinct impression of this correspondent that youthful, casual, charming Michael Balcon, armed with certain weapons, in a quiet way emulated the late General Grant when he took Richmond. Hollywood, however, differed from Richmond, for Hollywood liked it.

Mr. Balcon, director of production of Gaumont British, arrived, achieved his purpose, and was scheduled to depart this week bearing the commitments he sought. While here he was royally entertained as only the regal families of Hollywood can do it. His charm was matched by the graciousness of the executives. His victory, in Hollywood's eyes, was unimportant. That Balcon attained his ends was not regarded as significant here. That Britain's diplomacy succeeded in placing an opening and sizable wedge in the local scheme of things seems to interest no one.

Mr. Balcon signed contracts with Helen Vinson, Richard Dix, Noah Beery, Madge Evans and C. Aubrey Smith, admittedly not Garbos and Gables, but substantial persons all, whose names are known to the customers. He selected the writers for whom he will send in the fall. He dangled before the local lads such individuals as Jessie Mathews, Alfred Hitchcock, Peter Lorre and others on whom the boys have looked with covetous eye. He got Irving Thalberg to abandon the idea of making a film based on the life of Cecil Rhodes with Charles Laughton. He gave and secured pledges of cooperation and interchange of stars, stories, directors and writers for the admitted purpose of competing with the Hollywood product in what has been Hollywood's own and virtually exclusive market.

Taken Unawares by New Methods

The town was taken unawares, it seems, because of the contrast in methods used. The American system, under such circumstances, would be to enter England, announce loudly that stars were wanted and that fabulous salaries would be paid and in case there should be those who doubted, that the Americans were going after British scalps. It is a cynical view to have of the matter but the past indicates that it is a logical one. Probably the Prince of Wales would have been offered a job.

While it is impossible to give an eye witness account of any session Mr. Balcon had with any executive, the scene can be pictured as a result of as delightful and interesting an interview as I have had with any producer. Casualness was the most marked quality in the man's manner. He promised nothing sensational. "Every picture we make is not of high enough quality to sell in a highly competitive market but those that are good enough will be offered in this country," he said. With the Hollywood conception of simple statement, it is understandable why he was not viewed with alarm.

In fairness to the town, it must be said that recent developments abroad with the resulting product indicates that Hollywood is prepared for and resigned to competition and it is realized that a wall of antagonism will not protect local interests.

On the eve of his departure for London, the producer discussed for the first time his work here and the thing that impelled the invasion, although he was careful to avoid use of such a word. British-Gaumont, in this initial foray, was not so highly concerned in getting persons who would improve the standard of their films as they were in securing names familiar to American audiences so that the naturally leery customers would not shy at an alien product. Familiar names, they reasoned, would make English films more welcome here. Carried in a measure by Hollywood names, British players will be introduced to American audiences until such a time as they create their own drawing power.

Eye to Lads on Eighth Avenue

That London has a definite problem in making pictures for American theatres is recognized, Mr. Balcon said. Already they are watching the shooting of the films with an eye on the lads on Eighth Avenue. An American is always on the sets watching accents and phraseology. Two negatives of each picture are made, one cut for the Empire and one for the States. When it is necessary, two takes are made to cover any language discrepancy.

One gathered in talking to Mr. Balcon that the idea of making American stories acceptable to our audiences was one of his most cherished hopes. He admitted that it would be difficult if not impossible to make a picture based on the broader aspects of our civilization but there are American yarns that they can make as successfully as American producers.

England has been challenged by the success of such films as "Cavalcade," "Journey's End," "Clive of India," "Bengal Lancers," "One More River." They have not resented the American ability to please the English with their own stories. But they would like to achieve a comparable victory. They would like, Mr. Balcon said, to produce a play like "Dodsworth" with Walter Huston who, incidentally, is scheduled to go to G-B for one picture. A picture of that type, the Briton said, could be made as well by them as by Hollywood.

"There is no physical reason why our films shouldn't be as good as yours," Mr. Balcon declared. "Our equipment duplicates yours. We are investing substantial sums in our features. At the moment we have a camera crew in India gathering atmosphere and background shots for Kipling's 'Soldiers Three' and another technical crew is at work in Africa preparing for our 'Cecil Rhodes'. We have our pick of the English, American and German camera men and a great number of our technicians are from Hollywood."

Hollywood is to be met face to face with British exploitation. Abroad the publicity will continue about as it is now, for that is the way things are handled there. But the same methods employed by Hollywood will be used in popularizing the product in this country. At the present time publicity for B-G pictures originates in New York, but in all probability substantial studio departments will be created to give the pictures a build-up from the time the stories are bought.

According to the producer, Gaumont-British will make six to eight films a year for exclusive Empire consumption and probably 16 for the combined market. It is for these 16 that he has sought American talent. They have learned that when they make films acceptable to America, they are received with open arms. He cited with understandable pride the fact that in Los Angeles "Iron Duke," "Scarlet Pimpernel" and "Unfinished Symphony" are doing a most respectable business. If this one inroad is possible, it can be done again—and, he hopes, often.

Working on Color

England is interested in color but is doing nothing about it because the American process is not available there. But their own technicians are working on various methods and it is possible that when they hit on a successful formula, it will be used extensively.

In talking about the British market he said that that problem child, the double feature, is as prevalent on the Island as it is here. While their films play in London for extended runs and are kept there as long as they arouse interest, a rigid change policy prevails throughout the provinces and schedules must be met at the studios.

"I hope to make these visits to Hollywood semi-annual affairs. I am delighted by everything I have found here except your miserable climate," which was a sad way to close an interview with a native. "I hope to take back some distinguished writers on my next trip and I believe that the success of this venture will justify our continuing it further and expanding our activities."

'Black Fury' Opens In New York After Fight With Censor

Heralded by vigorous controversy, "Black Fury," starring Paul Muni, who not so long ago appeared in another much discussed Warner picture, "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang," began its premiere engagement at the New York Strand theatre Wednesday morning. The debates over this production started with the decisions of various state censor boards to bar the exhibition of the picture. Since then, the boards invested with the authority to decide upon what the film-goers of Pennsylvania and New York state should be permitted to see, have passed the picture without a single elimination ordered.

However, the fact that these officials had entertained the idea of prohibiting "Black Fury" from being released in their states brought forth a storm of protests from representative groups who saw the picture.

While the film has passed in Pennsylvania and New York, the Chicago board of censors, to date, still stands on its decision against showing there.

Among those who have definitely expressed themselves as advocating the showing of this picture, not only as unusual and praiseworthy screen entertainment, but as a stirring and worthwhile social document of an important phase of our times, are Senator Wagner (D) of New York, Rep. Dunn (D) of Pennsylvania, in whose state the background of the picture is laid, John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and a member of the NRA Labor Advisory Board, Richard Watts, Jr., motion picture critic of the New York Herald-Tribune, and Andre Sennwald, holding a similar post with the New York Times.

Excerpts from their opinions of "Black Fury" follow:

Senator Wagner:

"Those interested in our social future should applaud this vivid portrayal of a coal mine strike. It dramatically presents a phase of industrial strife which we are seeking to prevent. I have never believed in censorship, least of all for a splendid picture of this type."

Representative Dunn (Who is Blind):

"The players' voices and the sound effects brought the whole stark picture vividly before me. To censor it would be absurd."

John L. Lewis:

"While some of the scenes are savage, they are in no sense overdrawn. The public will find the picture a great contribution to comprehension of the deep-seated problem involved in industrial relationships."

Richard Watts, Jr.:

"It seems that only the Warner Bros., among all the alert and keen-eyed cinema producers, ever manage to climb down from their ivory tower and recognize that this is a shifting universe. While the other Hollywood magnates are earnestly concerned with the whimsical romantics of a static world, the contemplative Warners have come to realize that there is also such a thing as social and industrial change. . . .

"Now, with characteristic vigor, these earnest-minded producers go into the matter of industrial warfare in the coal field, which is no subject for the delicate-minded. For a long time it appeared likely that 'Black Fury,' which is scheduled for presentation at the Strand theatre this week, would be banned by the squeamish New York censors. If this really had happened, then you never could have convinced me that there wasn't a Communist on the board, bent on keeping an unfriendly document from public circulation. 'Black Fury' . . . is a powerful and effective picture."

Andre Sennwald:

". . . Since the work is as ambitious a social preachment as the American film studios have evolved in many months, and is certain to be among the most violently debated photoplays of the year, I think there ought to be a discussion of its very interesting technique as a conservative propaganda picture."

Loew's Planning A Radio Network

Loew's, Inc., this week took the first step in what appears to be the development of a national radio network, or, at the least, a system of stations which will blanket the New England and many of the eastern states, when three New England stations aligned themselves with station WHN, the Loew New York outlet, in a contract for WHN programs. Further, it was reported, representatives of three southern outlets were in New York conferring with Louis K. Sidney, former Loew theatre operator now in charge of WHN, on proposals involving a deal similar to that of the three New England stations.

WMEX, Boston; WPRO, Providence, and W1BX, Waterbury, Conn., are the three New England outlets, constituting what is left of the former Amalgamated Broadcasting Corporation, which was founded by Ed Wynn and which failed.

Substantiating the possibility of a Loew national network is the fact that WHN and the William Morris Agency are about to incorporate a WHN Artists' Bureau as partners. Morris Agency is the largest talent representative in the country. This enterprise will develop acts, boost studio talent over the air and place radio acts in Loew theatres. The arrangement, however, will not confine talent bookings exclusively to the Morris office.

Under the terms of its agreement with the three New England stations, WHN time is available to any or all any time. WHN is on the air from 7:30 A. M. to 12:30 A. M. daily.

Amalgamated Agency to be Revived; Headed by Ed Fay

The revival of the Amalgamated Vaudeville Agency, an M. E. Comerford enterprise, was begun this week with the appointment of Ed Fay, prominent New England exhibitor, as the new head of the agency. Mr. Fay, whose headquarters are in Providence, will transfer his activities to New York, with Harry Puck, formerly with the Shuberts, as his production assistant.

Amalgamated will begin with the booking of the Comerford theatres at Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, Binghamton and Rome and the Fay houses in Providence. Others are to be added later. The services of the Dow Agency, which has been booking some of the Comerford houses during the inactivity of Amalgamated, will be discontinued.

United Artists In Theatre Move In Great Britain

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., by authoritative report, will enter British exhibition on a wholesale scale by association with an amalgamation of Odeon Theatres, Ltd., and County Cinemas, Ltd., which today number approximately 70 houses and which probably will have 100 by the end of 1935.

Viewed in some quarters in London as a definite move to develop a third nationwide circuit in competition with Gaumont British and Associated British Cinemas, Ltd., the impression is that the step is more directly aimed at the former, which is John Maxwell's company.

Mr. Maxwell this week took over the three London de luxe houses operated by H. A. Yapp in Wandsworth, Putney and Kensington, the move regarded as a prelude to other theatre deals by Maxwell and other major operators in British exhibition. There is report that MGM may tie in, considered possible through the close relationship between Joseph M. Schenck of United Artists and Nicholas M. Schenck of Loew's and MGM.

Joseph M. Schenck is scheduled to leave New York for London on April 20 in connection with Odeon-County Cinemas amalgamation.

Oscar Deutsch controls Odeon and Charles J. Donada, County Cinemas. Reginald Bromhead is to join the board of the combined companies and a large public stock issue is expected. Also in the deal is J. Amery Parkes, lawyer representing Donada's financial backers and previously associated with the Bromheads. It is generally believed along Wardour Street that the Halifax Building Society's millions are behind Deutsch.

"Approximately 50 new theatres have been built in Great Britain during the past year," Sam Eckman, in charge of MGM's activities in England, said this week upon his arrival in New York from London. "There are now about 4,500 theatres in Great Britain."

Arthur W. Kelly, United Artists foreign head, declined to comment in New York on Tuesday about the possible participation of the company in British exhibition.

New York Court Restrains Two Unions from Picketing

New York Supreme Court Justice Edward S. Dore last week signed an order temporarily restraining two unions from further picketing the Eltinge theatre on 42d Street. The house employs Local 306 men, and the restraining order affects the Empire State Motion Picture Operators Union and the Empire State Theatrical Stage Employees Union. Seventy-three men were arrested last week for mass picketing before the Oxford Burlesque theatre in Brooklyn.

John Danz last week signed agreements whereby his eight Seattle theatres of the Sterling circuit will employ only union members, after 13 years of non-union operation.

OFFICIAL PLANS OF PARENTS AND TEACHERS VS. OFFICIAL DENIALS

Defines Policies and Procedure by Which P-T Congresses Are Urged to Enter Field, Financed by Millions in Taxes

Mrs. Gilman, Chairman, Asks Groups if They'd Be Interested in Having Projector; Invasion Plan Is Now Denied

A study in contrasts between the external expressions and the internal designs of certain leaders of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers is afforded this week, in documentary form from Washington:

I A publicity release from the Washington office of the organization, headed "Special" and dated April 4, says: "Charges published in the Motion Picture Herald of March 30 that 'The National Congress of Parents and Teachers is hereby declared to be contemplating forcible entry into the motion picture business to engage in exhibition in competition with the existing institution of the screen' were emphatically denied today by Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. . . . "

II While Mrs. Langworthy was emphatically denying, Motion Picture Herald acquired a copy of the detailed plans for its motion picture program, over the name of Mrs. Catheryne Cooke (Robbins) Gilman, motion picture chairman of the organization, now being internally urged upon local organizations, which upon examination is at considerable variance with Mrs. Langworthy's utterances.

Meanwhile Mrs. Gilman has given out information of amendments contemplated for the Pettengill bill, backed by the Parents and Teachers as an instrument toward the initiation of the program of control of the screen. The amendments would substantially deliver the industry in all details of production, distribution and exhibition to the control of a government bureau.

Since Motion Picture Herald's original presentation of the expressions of Mrs. A. R. Klock, motion picture chairman of the Parents and Teachers for the District of Columbia, efforts have been made by her contemporaries to seek a repudiation of her telegram published March 30. No such repudiation has been forthcoming.

MRS. GILMAN GETS EQUIPMENT DATA

"The motion picture committee of the National Congress would be aided in its efforts to develop sources of supply of suitable instructional and entertainment motion pictures at reasonable cost, to be presented in periodical showings in classrooms and auditoriums, if it knew the number of motion picture projectors now in the hands of local Congress units," declared a questionnaire appearing in The National Parent-Teacher, official publication of the organization, and in which the following questions were asked:

Have you a motion picture projector? ....

If Yes, give name of maker.............

....

What is the width of film used? (35MM).......... (16MM)..........

If other size, not 35MM or 16MM, mark width here ....

Is your projector for Silent (Titled) Pictures?.............. Sound-on-Disc?.... .... Sound-on-Film?............

Is projector used for instructional pictures in classroom? ....

Is projector used for entertainment pictures? ....

How frequently are entertainment shows given (if any)?.....................

What is the seating capacity of auditorium in which motion picture entertainment is given? ....

If you rent pictures, what do you pay per reel? ....

If you have no motion picture projector, would you be interested in having one and giving motion picture programs?*

....

If so, are you interested in Silent (Titled) Pictures?........... Sound-on-Disc?.... .... or Sound-on-Film?..........

What is the depth of your auditorium, from last row of seats to front line of seats? ....

"Forward this to Catheryne Cooke (Robbins) Gilman, Chairman, Motion Picture Committee, National Congress of Parents and Teachers, 1929 Second Street, Minneapolis, Minn."

Calls Statement "Ridiculous"

Mrs. Langworthy's denial of Motion Picture Herald's account of the contemplated invasion of the industry by the National Congress follows in full:

"The statement that the parent-teacher organization contemplates going into the motion picture business is utterly ridiculous. Any such activity would be in direct violation of our bylaws and our policy of non-commercialism, to which we have adhered strictly for nearly 40 years. No educational organization would desire to undertake a business program such as this article outlines, even if it could afford to finance it, which most of them could not.

"Our sole interest in abolishing block-booking and blind-selling of motion pictures is to enable local independent exhibitors to choose the pictures which their patrons wish to see, instead of being coerced to buy an entire block of films, many of which are objectionable, in order to secure one or two desirable pictures. This grouping of bad films with good films enables a distributor to force his entire product on the exhibitor and the public, regardless of its merit. The combined effect of the practices of block-booking and blind-selling is to prevent the exhibitor from exercising an informed selection of films, and hence to prevent the people of a community from influencing his choice in the best interests of the community.

"The Pettengill bill to abolish block-booking and blind-selling will enable local exhibitors to choose all of their pictures on a selective basis, thereby permitting them to meet the desires of their patrons. Obviously this would promote the best interests of the theatre exhibitors themselves, as well as serving the public."

Official Organization Plan

Definite indication that the National Congress actually does, however, have in mind an "invasion" of the business, in addition to regulation through the Pettengill bill and other Congressional proposals, is seen in the new plan now being circulated and urged for adoption by the city and state groups within the organization. Appearing over the signature of Mrs. Gilman, the official plan follows, verbatim:

PURPOSES

1. Production

To secure for every child under the jurisdiction of the United States an adequate supply of visual aids to education; and the production of suitable motion pictures for instruction, culture and entertainment.

2. Distribution

To urge the establishment of local, state and national libraries in which to assemble and from which to distribute visual aids and motion picture films to schools and community auditoriums.

3. Exhibition

To arrange for the use of visual aids, and for the exhibition of motion pictures in schools, churches, and community auditoriums.

4. Supervision

To extend the authority of local boards of education or recreation to include the responsibility of providing and administering leisure time opportunities for children and youth.

5. Legislation

To initiate and support local, state and national motion picture legislation in accordance with recommendations of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

POLICIES

To recognize and emphasize the objectives and policies in Articles II and III of the bylaws of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, as they refer to the subject of motion pictures:

Article II.

Section 1. To promote child welfare in home, school, church, and community; to raise the standards of home life; and to secure adequate laws for the care and protection of children.

Section 2. To bring into closer relationship the home and the school—to develop between educators and the general public such united efforts as will secure for every child the highest advantages in physical, mental and spiritual education.

Article III.

Section 1. This organization shall be noncommercial. No commercial enterprises . . . shall be indorsed by it. The name of the organization, its branches, or its officers in their official capacities shall not be used in any connection with a commercial concern . . . or for any other than the regular work of the Congress. . . .

PROCEDURES

Organization Includes:

(A) The selection of capable state, district, and local chairmen who will master the subject material and organize and lead committees to carry out the motion picture plan according to the purposes, policies and procedures of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

These chairmen should be selected because of their ability to meet officials and groups and because they can give the time to the correspondence and the exacting duties of this important committee. Needless to say, they should not be susceptible to the "industry appeal."

(B) The appointment of active study committees of seven to 15 members in local associations with subcommittees of three to five members as functional groups.

Functions Include:

(A) The assembling of authoritative reference material and bibliographies on the social, economic, political, legislative, and international aspects of the subject.

(B) The compilation of catalogs of nontheatrical films and film equipment, and the arrangement under classifications such as:

(1) Government films, local, state and national sources.

(2) Instructional or documentary films, for pedagogical purposes.

(3) Cultural films, such as newsreels, scenics and general informational and amusement films.

(4) Recreational films sold on merit independently, and trade-shown later.

(C) Contacting the United States Commissioner of Education, the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, the local boards of education, the superintendents and principals of schools, the state and local visual education divisions of the National Education Association, the visual education directors of state universities, state museums, research laboratories and colleges.

The Purposes of Such Contracts Are:

(1) To stimulate the establishment of a national film institute in the Office of Education, the United States Department of the Interior, which will assemble and disseminate information concerning educational, cultural and recreational films, and other visual aids to education suitable for children and youth. It will also encourage the production of instructional, cultural and entertainment films for education and recreation.

(2) To encourage the production, distribution and exhibition of classified films for education and for recreation of children and youth.

(3) To assist in establishing national, state and local film libraries and other visual aids to education.

(4) To suggest teacher-training in the selection and the use of materials and equipment for visual education and recreation.

(5) To seek cooperation in the development of the National Motion Picture Plan of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

(D) The organization of regular film circuits in schools, churches and community auditoriums for classified motion picture entertainment programs graded to the ages and environment of children and youth.

(1) To organize amateur motion picture clubs under competent leadership to produce, exchange and exhibit motion pictures of local interest and to encourage the amateur clubs to conduct regular juvenile theatre programs for grade school children.

(2) To have introduced in high schools a regular credit course in motion picture criticism, for the purpose of developing discrimination and appreciation of social, technical and literary values.

(E) The initiation and support of local, state and national legislation.

(1) Local legislation to extend the jurisdiction of local boards of education or recreation to be responsible for the administration of community recreation including motion pictures for children and youth, and for the selection of qualified leaders and suitable films and equipment.

(2) State legislation to provide an increase in the taxy levy or the re-allocation of funds for necessary appropriations, and enabling acts to effect the changes.

(3) National legislation to provide for a motion picture commission charged with the responsibility: of supervising the selection and treatment of subject material used in the production of motion pictures; and of regulating the trade practices used in the distribution of motion pictures, viz., block and blind booking, unreasonable protection, zoning, exclusive runs, contracts, arbitration, price-fixing, percentage buying, discrimination against small and independent exhibitors and other restrictions which interfere with the satisfactory conduct of the business from the point of view of the public.

(F) Conducting a campaign of education based upon the findings of the Motion Picture Research Council, known as the Payne Fund Studies, Motion Pictures and Youth, and cooperating with the Motion Picture Research Council in so far as its program is in accord with the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

(G) Organizing each state, or in several centers of states, motion picture institutes or conferences of from one to three days for the purpose of having presented some of the most important phases of the subject, and to outline plans for action suitable to the situations in individual communities. The National Chairman (of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers) will cooperate with state Congresses on such a plan.

CONCLUSIONS

(1) Inasmuch as motion pictures, as such, are educative, regardless of the character of subject material, motion pictures for the recreation and instruction of youth should be produced, distributed and exhibited by educators, dramatists and playwrights of professional standing.

(2) Inasmuch as local boards of education and recreation are elected by the people whose children are to be served, such boards should have their powers extended to provide and to administer all recreation for minor children in a community.

(3) Inasmuch as the National Congress of Parents and Teachers has declared education and child welfare to be its objective, and has adopted a policy of non-cooperation with commercial agencies and institutions, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers will cooperate with local, state and national institutions of education, and departments of government to secure improvement in the selection and treatment of subject material used in motion picture production, and will not cooperate with individuals, organizations and companies conducting recreation for personal profits or dividends for stockholders.

(4) Inasmuch as recreation, including motion picture entertainment, is one of the most powerful, pleasurable and universal incentives in our present environment for cultural influences, for character development, and for mental achievement, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers will adopt an active program to coordinate the work and focus the influence of more than 20,000 local units upon the National Congress Motion Picture Plan as formulated by the motion picture chairman and adopted by the board of managers in 1932 and 1934, for securing these advantages to our civilization.

Would Amend Bill To Get U.S. Board

Mrs. Catheryne Cook (Robbins) Gilman, chairman of the motion picture committees of both the National Congress of Parents and Teachers and the Federal Motion Picture Council in America, in a bulletin from headquarters at Washington, said that the following amendments to the Pettengill Congressional proposal to eliminate block booking had been suggested, and that Congressman Pettengill "has agreed to submit them with the bill at the hearing":

1. That a minimum penalty for violation be included in the bill.

2. That a commission, appointed by the President of the United States, be created and established, to be known as a Federal Motion Picture Commission, and that it be authorized to make rules and regulations necessary to carry out the act's provisions.

3. That the Federal Motion Picture Commission be charged with the duty of instituting proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain violations of the act in the several district courts of the United States where the violations occur.

The Gilman groups are also campaigning for Congressman Culkin's two proposals: (1) providing for a federal film commission to supervise production, distribution and exhibition, including regulation of trade practices, and abolishing block booking and blind-selling; and (2) providing exclusively for abolishment of compulsory block booking and blind selling, with the Federal Trade Commission invested with jurisdiction to enforce the act.

The Pettengill bill, as introduced, could not be enforced unless an exhibitor became the plaintiff in a case against the distributor. Mrs. Gilman, therefore, would have the proposed Federal Commission appear as plaintiff.

In attacking the Pettengill bill this week, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America warned that, "it is quite likely to double film rentals at the smaller theatres, insure uniformly mediocre box office attractions, provide a 'Roman Holiday' for the lawyers in endless costly litigation, and rapidly spread unfair and disastrous nontheatrical competition in the country."

More Reactions to Teachers' Plan

Exhibitors, circuit operators, exhibitor organization leaders and producers this week contributed further expressions of their reactions to presentations made in the March 30th issue of Motion Picture Herald as to the announced program of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers in connection with the Pettengill Bill, now before Congress. Herewith appears comment received by the Herald in the past week.

I think the article is very clear and concise, and sums up the general opinion of the exhibitors throughout the country.

It is unfortunate that so few outsiders realize the enormous investment of the moving picture industry, both from the point of view of the producers and the exhibitors. It is unfortunate that this lack of information invites the type of criticism that is becoming so prevalent.

It is my opinion that block booking not only is not a hardship, but, on the contrary, is beneficial to the majority of exhibitors. My personal experience with the large producers has proven that they are fair and considerate, and endeavor to the very best of their ability to produce the type of film the public really wants. In order to do this it is necessary, of course, that they have an outlet for their product.

After the exhibitor has gone to the expense of establishing a theatre, equipping it and doing everything within his power to make it comfortable for the patrons of his community it is obviously unfair and improper to contemplate legislation that would be ruinous to the investment, and in the long run throw a number of people out of work, besides confiscating invested capital.

We have written our senators and representatives in Congress, protesting against this particular bill, as well as the Culkin and Celler bills. We are unalterably opposed to any legislation that seeks to create a federal censor board or to subject the business to unfair invasion.

If the matter was not so serious I certainly would consider it very amusing, but surely, this cannot be the attitude of the organization that she (Mrs. A. Raymond Klock) represents. Otherwise there is no reason why Parents and Teachers Associations should not go into any business. Surely the motion picture business has been set upon from every angle and has had to fight for its existence against blocks of all kinds. It has been used as a political football wherever possible and surely churches and schools are taking a very unfair advantage if the Pettengill Bill would, by law, set up a competitor that would not only become a Frankenstein for themselves but in the meantime practically confiscate a business that is so vital a factor in our everyday life. It seems strange that churches and schools will admit that they cannot meet competition coming from a free choice of educational advantages.

The Pettengill bill, if adopted in any form, would all but ruin the motion picture industry and definitely would prevent the industry from making any pictures which are off the beaten path. In the latter class I place "Alice in Wonderland," "Sequoia," "Tabu," "Death Takes a Holiday," "Cradle Song," "Babes in Toyland," "Treasure Island," "Skippy," and similar wholesome entertainment.

I certainly am in sympathy with Mrs. Klock's demand for better pictures. Better pictures now are being made.

This industry was faced with a tremendous problem a year or so ago. We took it upon ourselves to correct the situation. That this has been done goes without saying. Why not let the industry handle its other worries and try to progress without more obstacles being placed in our way?

The Pettengill bill calls for a submission to exhibitors of synopses of all pictures. If there is even the slightest change in the final picture, the producer stands liable for a $5,000 fine and a year in prison. That clause means that we never would be able to improve a picture, cut it, eliminate off-color scenes or trim tiresome sequences.

We believe that this article is most damaging to the proponents of the Pettengill Bill inasmuch as it (the bill) contains nothing but selfish motives and fails to show any moral ground for the enactment of any such bill. We are using the article here to good advantage calling attention of all those in the business that we can reach.

JESSE L. LASKY, President

I am in favor of any movement which will encourage the patronage of better pictures, and I am convinced that the Pettengill bill, if enacted into law, would fail to achieve this objective.

And certainly it would be manifestly unfair to compel the producers by law to exhibit their pictures in churches and schools in direct competition to existing exhibitors.

I understand that sponsors of this proposed legislation expect, thereby, to reap certain profits and use same to finance certain contemplated "welfare work."

Any profits taken from the legitimate exhibition end of the industry, particularly at this time, would inevitably tend towards the making of inferior films. Thus, the Pettengill Bill would produce directly opposite results from those claimed by its supporters.

If the exhibitor's profits are cut in two by a new form of competition they would necessarily pay less to the producer for their films to remain in business. This would compel the producer to expend less money per picture on production. The product would suffer, as quality productions are expensive to make.

If the sponsors of this bill are sincere in their objectives, it strikes me they should encourage the public, by education and not by legislation, to patronize the better pictures. It is not necessary to install expensive equipment in schools and churches for this purpose.

Existing theatres have the necessary facilities and seating capacities.

Please bear in mind that this is my personal opinion and does not in any way reflect the opinion of members of our Association, nor does it reflect the official attitude of our Association, which opinion can only be given by our board of directors who have not met to go into this matter as yet.

As to the thought that churches and schools will compete for product for showing in such schools and churches, they have always done this in our state, and many times they have been sold for less than the prices asked the local exhibitor for the same product when distributors felt that the local exhibitor needed to be "taken down" a bit.

Such accounts have been actively promoted by some distributors in the past who found themselves unable to get their product into the local theatre because other distributors had sewed up all the playing time. Even under the Motion Picture Code, local exhibitors facing such church and school competition dare not file complaints against the

Il Duce Asks for Profits on Film

Premier Benito Mussolini this week trained his heavy artillery upon the American promoters of "Man of Courage," Il Duce's propaganda film about his famous march on Rome, with the launching of a suit to collect $125,000 in royalties, a share in the profits of the picture and other emoluments, the New York Post revealed this week.

According to the Post, Guido Orlando, promoter of such projects as the Republicans-for-Roosevelt clubs and the recent vaudeville tour of Aimee Semple McPherson, this week moved before Supreme Court Justice Frankenthaler for an order directing Eureka Productions, Inc., and Vincenzo Melocchi, Luigi de Giorgio, Jacques A. Koerpel and Samuel Cummings, defendants, to produce their records for examination before trial. Decision was reserved.

Mr. Orlando claims "Man of Courage" will gross $1,500,000 in this country before it has finished playing. H. H. Rogers, Jr., head of Eureka Productions, and son of Col. H H. Rogers of Standard Oil, financed the venture.

"Originally, Il Duce was satisfied to get his propaganda across with only small remuneration to himself," Mr. Orlando told the Post. "But after my report (on its grossing potentialities) he apparently decided to have the Luce Institute of Rome make it."

Mr. Orlando said that his contract called for eight per cent of the film's gross and that to date he has received nothing.

United States, France Agree On Elimination of Profit Tax

The State Department at Washington this week announced ratification of a convention by which France will eliminate the double taxation now imposed on American firms with offices in France. The agreement is effective next January 1.

Now, in addition to the various French taxes on French subsidiaries of American companies, a tax is levied against the parent concern in the United States, based on its dividend declarations, on the theory that a portion of the earnings came from French business. Under the agreement, that tax will be dropped, if French subsidiaries comply with certain procedure. In the case of American firms with unincorporated French branches, the tax will be dropped on payment of a tax on three-quarters of the profits from the French branch.

Shanghai Circuit Is Set for Reorganization

A plan for the reorganization of United Theatres, Inc., Shanghai, China, operating the Grand and Cathay theatres there, is expected to be presented to Judge Milton J. The company also owns a majority of the stock of a company operating 15 houses in various parts of China.

The court, in conformity with the new United States bankruptcy law, approved a petition changing title of receiver to trustee.

ON THE TEACHERS' PLAN

non-theatrical school and church competition because they fear to incur the hostility of the school and church groups. Perhaps the above condition is not as prevalent as it was five or six years ago, but it is still existing and undoubtedly will continue to exist, regardless of any Pettengill bills.

It might interest you to know that we sent out a copy of the Pettengill Bill to every theatre owner in Indiana with the request that they study the bill, and then write their reactions to Mr. Pettengill and send a carbon copy of such letter to our office for our guidance.

Without exception so far, the smaller theatre owners in the small towns favor the Pettengill Bill. They have written to the effect that they would like to be in a position of buying and offering to their public the twenty or so outstanding pictures from each distributor rather than being forced to buy all of the product of only three or four of the distributors, which condition prevails at present, and which leads them to exhibit a great many "quickies" and other unsuitable product which does them no good at the box office, nor does it help particularly the distributors from whom they buy their product.

The larger theatre owners of Indiana have written in their opposition to the Pettengill Bill for the reason that they already enjoy contracts which permit them to make selections of those pictures which they want and to reject those which they do not want. Certainly the Pettengill Bill would give them nothing which they do not already enjoy, and many of them honestly believe that the privileges they enjoy in the matter of rejections and selection are enjoyed by all the other exhibitors.

Perhaps it is too early to see how the ultimate attitude of Indiana exhibitors will be as to the Pettengill Bill, but for several years there has been smoldering resentment and bitterness growing among the smaller theatre owners at what they feel are the injustices they suffer in this industry This goes back to the old Standard and Uniform Contracts which were nullified as to any benefits they conferred upon the smaller men by the red ink clauses which had the effect of nullifying such benefits. The growing practice of preferred playing time and averages and designation of specials has not added to any possible feeling of harmony between distributors and exhibitors. The many yards of red tape and special regulations which must be followed under the alleged "ten per cent" cancellation privileges under the Code impress the little exhibitor as being only another example of the injustices under which he smarts.

Sooner or later this small exhibitor resentment is going to make itself felt in either the active support of the Pettengill Bill or some other form of industry regulation. The little fellow seems to feel that his condition could not possibly be worse and that it might possibly be better under regulation. For this attitude upon the part of the smaller exhibitors, the customs and sales policies of the industry itself are responsible.

Most of them have long since despaired of any hope that fair conditions will ever be worked out for them within the industry, either by their Code or otherwise, so why not try something in the direction of legislation. They also are under the impression that something similar to the Pettengill Bill provisions exists in England, without the dire consequences resulting which have always been prophesied as following such legislation in this country.

Oak Park, Illinois

I do not have authority to speak for the the Association since I have not had time to bring this question up for Board action. However, there is no doubt in my mind but that we are all agreed that the school and church should not be in competition with the theatre.

There are many non-theatrical subjects both entertaining and educational that are calculated for school and church use, and motion pictures fill a very important place in such a program.

Feature pictures built for theatrical use have been rented to schools and churches after they have been shown in the theatre of the district they are in.

Infrequent showings on certain special occasions for some special purpose might not be objectionable, but for any organization to make a business of showing feature pictures for profit in competition to the theatre which is paying the tax and carrying the load would in my opinion not be fair to the interests that are making these pictures possible.

Seven Majors Named in Suit by Iowa Exhibitor

Two competitive theatres, the Capitol and Casino, operated by C. C. Dunsmoor and M. C. Roskopf and Sam Horwitz, respectively, are named as co-defendants.

The seven major companies named are Paramount, First National, MGM, Fox, United Artists, RKO and Vitaphone Distributing Corporation.

Harris Returning To Head Circuit

The Harris Amusement Company interests in Pittsburgh will celebrate, during the week of April 19, the return to active theatre operation of John H. Harris, former head of the company, who has been inactive for the past five years by the terms of a contract signed with Warner in 1930, when that company purchased most of the Harris circuit.

Mr. Harris will resume active charge of the Harris interests, and plans to rebuild the circuit in the territory. Senator Frank J. Harris has had the direction of the circuit. John H. is the son of the late John P. Harris, founder of the Harris Amusement Company, and of one of the world's first motion picture theatres, in 1905. He is a nephew of Harry Davis, one of the country's great showman of an earlier day.

When John P. Harris died in 1926, D. A. Harris, John H. Harris and F. J. Harris continued the circuit operation. In 1930 they sold out to Warner. Unable, by the contract, to operate on his own, John H. Harris was Warner zone manager for three years, then resigned to enter sports promotion.

Associated with him in the reorganization of the Harris circuit will be John T. McGreevy and James Balmer, with the company for many years, and George Tyson, formerly an assistant at Warner. Senator Frank Harris will continue as president of the company.

Theatre Liability Rates Are Revised Nationally

The number of admissions at the individual theatre, rather than the seating capacity, will be the new basis for computation of premiums for theatre liability insurance, it was announced this week by the National Bureau of Casualty & Surety Underwriters.

In the metropolitan area of New York the old rate of 40 cents per seat per year for $5,000 and $10,000 of liability insurance now becomes 11 cents per 100 admissions. For most theatres in territories throughout the country outside the metropolitan area, the rate was 12 cents per seat per year, while under the new plan it will be six cents per 100 admissions. For theatres outside the metropolitan area the new rate is expected to result in substantially increased liability insurance costs.

Erpi Continuing Servicing Tests

Experiments conducted by Electrical Research Products, Inc., in connection with all phases of theatre engineering servicing will be concluded in about two months, it was said at the Erpi home office in New York this week. Following the conclusion of the experiments a final decision will be made on the company's entrance into the extended servicing field on a permanent basis.

Erpi's experiments in general theatre engineering servicing have been in progress for several months in a number of situations throughout the country on a non-commercial basis, and results to date have indicated the possibility of savings to theatre owners ranging from $300 to $3,000 annually for each house in all types of theatres, it was said by an Erpi official.

If Erpi decides to make the extended servicing a permanent part of its activities no merchandising of parts and equipment aside from that having direct bearing on sound reproduction is contemplated. It was said that, contrary to published reports, operators' locals have not made official protest to the contemplated servicing by Erpi engineers and that in situations where the current experiments are being conducted they have regarded the new service as a distinct aid to operators and have expressed their approval of its continuance.

PARAMOUNT NEWS READY FOR WAR WITH CREWS LINED UP IN EUROPE

Camera Contingents Organized in Leading Nations, Natives Chosen in Smaller States; Drills Held in Safe Equipment

Paramount Newsreel is preparing for war in Europe!

For two months the company secretly has been laying camera fortifications throughout the Continent for its own army of screen news gatherers, the while European powers continue in the race to rearm, and to conscript natives to strengthen their armies as they move them in ominous silence to their borders.

Details of diplomacy and strategy already are completed for the job of pitting cameramen against cameramen in enemy countries, all in keeping with the international problems and the strong and strange laws which govern cameramen on the firing lines.

Began Preparations in February

That Paramount News began in February to take tangible recognition of the speculation existing in virtually all corners of the world over a possible European conflict was made known this week by A. J Richard, editor.

Mr. Richard served during the World War with federal administrators of motion picture arrangements, including largely newsreel accounts from the front. Delving into that background for the plan which a tremendous job like another war would mean for newsreels with all its concomitant complicatons of censorship, Mr. Richard said: "At this very moment there exists governmental censorship in one form or another in practically every country in the world. Even in this country, they have set up regulations whereby all Navy subjects must be censored, and in places such as the Canal Zone, the Army has complete charge of censorship of all picturemaking. Germany and Russia have full censorship. Italy, France and England have censorship of filming insofar as military subjects are involved. Many of the Balkan and smaller countries of Europe have established censorship. Cameramen working on the recent Greek rebellion, Austrian putsches and even those trying to get into Abyssinia or Italian Somaliland have had the greatest difficulty."

Lining Up Native Cameramen

Paramount's plan for coverage has been modeled after that of the Associated Press. The company already has set up its own skeleton camera coverage in each of the large countries and has made arrangements with the official and semi-official photographic agencies of most of the large countries, such as Luce, of Italy, and Ufa, of Germany.

Paramount also has sent a representative through Lithuania, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Turkey and Yugoslavia, tentatively lining up native cameramen. It was felt that these small states, several of them having developed out of the Versailles Treaty,

REVENUE REVIVES HOPE OF LOWER BRITISH TAX

Quota Revision Doubted; Exhibitors Assured Only One Television Station Starts This Year

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Unexpectedly good revenue figures, indicating a probable surplus in the Budget to be announced April 15th, have revived the trade's hopes of a concession on Entertainment Tax, which had seemed doomed by the announcement of greatly increased expenditures on armaments.

Wardour Street opinion is now that the chancellor of the exchequer, Neville Chamberlain, will make good his half-promise of last year and free the sixpenny (12 cents) and cheaper seats of the tax. Encouragement of this view is seen in the friendly reception which a meeting of members of Parliament, at the House of Commons last week, gave to a statement of the small exhibitors' case by H. Victor Davis.

Accepting adjustment of the Tax as a probability, financial writers in the general press are canvassing the possibility of a general rise in cinema share values, with probable restoration of wage cuts against Government employees expected to increase attendances. The good figures shown by P. C. T., Ltd., and A. B. P., Ltd., under existing conditions are cited.

Doubts Quota Revision

The most definite statement yet made in Parliament in regard to amendment of the Cinematograph Films Act was the negative given by Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, to a question in the House of Commons suggesting a revision of quota percentages, after E. Doran, M. P., had suggested that "British film production has now reached a stage of real efficiency."

More significance has been read into the Minister's statement than, it may be, it was intended to convey. Revision of the Films Act, officially recommended by the Advisory Committee, is expected to take the form of new clauses penalizing "quickies" and further restricting block booking.

The B. O. T. will consider any information placed before it, replied Sir John Gilmour, Home Secretary, when Mr. Doran drew his attention to "the financial activities of alien film producers who, having been forced into liquidation in their own countries, were now seeking to exploit the British public."

While many people see in improved British production a reason for still larger quotas, others are beginning to regard the Films Act as a handicap to the established British producer.

KRS Not Taking Sides

With KRS holding the advantage of the offensive in President John Maxwell's statement that KRS would not accept the recent booking deals between Gaumont British and the Hyams (H & G) and Union circuits, circumstances have given the controversy an appearance, in some ways misleading, of being yet another phase of the struggle for supremacy between the Ostrer (GB) and Maxwell (ABP and ABC) interests. Undoubtedly, that is one aspect, but it would be a serious mistake to think that the KRS is concerned to take sides with one circuit against another; what it fears is that hundreds of theatre managements will make booking agreements with GB in order to get drastic reductions in rentals.

The possibility of public agitation is very obviously in the minds of both the KRS leaders and their opponents.

Reassurance on Television

Almost 900 film traders, mostly theatre owners, who attended the annual banquet of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association at Grosvenor House, heard a reassuring statement about television by Sir Kingsley Wood who, as postmaster-general, is in charge of the government department which will control the official transmitting stations.

Only one station, in London, will be in operation this year, he said, and this one will not be completed until the end of the year. Furthermore, an adequate national service is still some distance off.

Pacific Tone

Richard Dooner, new president of the CEA, at the annual meeting the same day, said distributors were now disposed to a round table discussion of the rental problem and the allied one of a Standard Contract. Some present may have been a little disappointed at this pacific tone. When a London exhibitor sought enlightenment on the hint in the annual report that the Association might, on suitable occasion, become the booking agent for exhibitors as a whole, Secretary W. R. Fuller said:

"It remains to be seen what decisions will be made by the new Council, and whether members intend to give the Council any instructions on the point."

Britons in Australia Organize

British film producers in Australia are organizing themselves into the British Film Industry Association of Australasia under the chairmanship of Ernest Turnbull of British Dominions Films. This company handles B. & D., Twickenham, British Lion and Empire programs. Associated with the move are also Alan Williamson of Gaumont-British, Stuart Doyle, for Associated British Pictures and Associated British Film Distributors and Gordon Williams of B.I.P.

News Brevities

The almost daily effort to establish official censorship in place of the British Board of Film Censors, in its latest form suggests the elevation of the semi-official advisory Film Censorship Consultative Committee to the status of a licensing body to "examine films on behalf of all licensing authorities and advise on all matters in connection with film censorship."

The first British studio erected specifically for production of educational subjects exclusively was opened last week for Gaumont-British Instructional, by H. Ramsbotham, Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education. Situated in Cleveland street, a stone's throw from Oxford St., in the center of London, it provides facilities for 52 sub-standard films a year.

The report of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., indicates a profit of £482,508, an increase of £23,018. The carry forward is £122,834 against £121,280. Out of a total for distribution of £603,280, depreciation reserve receives £91,000 and general reserve £65,000, making the total under the latter head £530,000. The dividend will again be 15 per cent.

Newsreel Ready For Hostilities

might be among the first nations to become involved.

Of equal importance with the arrangements for coverage are those made for getting film out of these countries. Plans have been made for contracting of planes and automobiles. While France moves reinforcements to the German border and links her chain of steel and concrete fortresses with barbed wire and trenches, Paramount is gathering pictures for its war library on all persons, locations and buildings that might figure in any hostilities. This material has been flowing in for weeks from 14 countries.

Germany Covered

In Germany, the company's war bureau will be headed by Bruno Stindt, who has been arranging for a chain of cameramen in the most strategic points in that country, and in adjacent places where hostilities might first develop. France has five cameramen on the war staff, England six. Italy, Austria and Japan have been similarly staffed, and rehearsal has now progressed to the point where drills are being held in the use of protective equipment, such as a new and improved gas mask for the cameramen.

Leading newly-recruited camera contingents will be: In England, E. H. Hawkins, J. C. Harding, J. F. Gemmell, W. M. MacGregor, G. Ercole and J. Taylor; France, L. Geiskop, F. Conquest, J. Albrecht, M. Madru and H. Missir; Italy, B. Albertini, G. Brunacci; Germany, Bruno Stindt, J. Winterfeldt and Franz Klein; Austria, J. Dored; Belgium, Pec Antoine, now covering King Leopold and the army.

Millions of Feet of Film

During the last war, the United States Government turned over to its official motion picture bureau in the Signal Corps the task of making pictures of the army and its activities in action. Millions of feet of film were exposed, and as fast as it reached Washington it was censored and then distributed to all the newsreels at the same time.

"The newsreels have long realized the motion picture values of real war material," said Mr. Richard. "In recent wars the newsreels have adopted the plan of planting cameramen with each contending force. In the Japanese campaign in China some American cameramen worked with the Japanese forces while others were with the Chinese inside Shanghai. In the recent Cuban activity some cameramen were located at Santiago at the time it was held by the rebels, while others were assigned to Havana when it was held by government troops."

Newsreel coverage of any European hostilities would be considerably more intensive from the standpoint of competition than in the last war, when Pathe and International Newsreel were the most active. The industry would witness a competitive battle even greater than the fight last year to reach the screens first with scenes of the murder in France of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and the Austrian putsch which resulted in the death of Premier Dollfuss, when Pathe, Paramount, Hearst Metrotone, Universal and Fox Movietone engaged fast planes to reach express steamers.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Cora Cowen, well known on Broadway, was visiting United Artists' Rivoli and stumbled in the darkness of the auditorium on a package containing a check book, bank book, bulgy financial papers and whatnot. Not locating an usher at the moment, she put the bundle of wealth into her purse—Cora totes a very, very large purse. The property was forgotten—she was watching that "dreamy" Maurice Chevalier—until she got home. The following day young Cora mailed the bundle to the bank. In due time she received a letter from the gentleman to whom it belonged.

It seems that, in his unselfishness, he had remembered the case of this winter where the hungry and homeless and cold Bowery derelict, finding a package of considerable negotiable bonds in the street, returned them to the Wall Street brokerage house that had lost them, and then went haywire from the effects of the sudden complimentary attention given to his honesty in the press and the newsreels.

They had rewarded him with some cash, new clothes and a job—his first of either in many a year. A few days later he cracked under the strain, causing considerable physical damage to his surroundings, and to his fellow tenants, one of whom dropped dead when faced with the sudden declaration of the derelict: "I have been sent by God and I can take who's-ever life I want!"

Accordingly, the owner of the lost package wrote Cora: "I am duly grateful for your kindness and should like to reward you, but, not being unmindful of what happened to the gentleman recently rewarded for the return of bonds which he had found, for your own sake, I think I had better simply thank you."

The tension in Boston motion picture circles must be severe. And the problems of theatre operation terrific. George and Spyros Skouras believe they have a headache bringing Skouras Theatres to the front line for a contract to manage the reorganizing Fox Metropolitan Circuit. Major Leslie Thompson, too, thinks his job of conducting the RKO properties is not an easy one. Ditto Ed Schiller at Loew's, and Joseph Bernard at Warners. We could mention a dozen more, but none so serious as the problem of Mister Wasserman, a district manager for the New England M. and P. Theatre Circuit, who, in his large Boston office, has hanging from the wall a sign that warns:

"You can't really enjoy opera," says Walter Damrosch, operarian, "unless you know what is going on."

And when you know what's going on, you're indifferent, observed Ted Cook.

Maybe you just can't really enjoy opera unless you really enjoy opera.

THROUGH THE BRITISH DOMINIONS, except in Ireland, the name of Roger Casement is a curse. He was an Irishman who had been honored with positions of trust by England and knighted. Then he had a change of heart and began to work for the freedom of Ireland, renouncing his knighthood. When the World War broke he believed Germany had a good chance to win, and cast his lot with Germany, plotting there to go to Ireland and start a revolution. A German submarine landed him in Ireland, but the revolt he started did not last long. Casement was captured, tried, and hanged as a traitor.

But there were many, including George Bernard Shaw, who thought Casement a patriot—to Ireland—rather than a traitor to England. A great petition for him was signed in the United States.

Julius Klein, now known in Hollywood as a special assistant to Carl Laemmle, Sr., covered the Casement trial as a reporter. Mr. Klein has been writing a book about it. And, so we are told by Lee Shippey, Los Angeles news commentator and reporter, Mr. Klein has broken the world's record by getting a signed statement from Bernard Shaw for inclusion in that book.

When it comes to getting things from people in high places, Klein is a miracle man, Shippey relates. His years as a reporter have not only won him the friendship but the confidence of the mighty. At one time when Hoover, as President, wouldn't see anyone else, Shippey included, he spent an hour or two with Klein. Recently Klein wrote an important article for the Los Angeles Times Sunday Magazine and secured for it signed statements from former Ambassador Gerard and from Colonel Edward Mandell House—and there are mighty few reporters who could wiggle a statement of any kind out of the old Colonel. And, as for a statement by George Bernard Shaw, requested for commercial publication in another's book, well, that is looked upon as the ultimate of the unattainable. One could get a dozen long, chummy interviews with Greta Garbo, or Herbert Yates, or J. R. McDonough quicker than a Shaw signature affixed under an expression for publication—unless, of course, they used coin of the realm for bait. However, Klein wrote G. B. S. an explanation of what he was going to do in a book on the Casement case and the greying old literarian sent back a four-page statement.

The natives of Waterloo in Iowa kept Jake Rosenthal, of the Iowa theatre, busy for a full day explaining to him that bill-posters had pasted 24-sheet stands upside down. There was many a mention of the inversion in Waterloo, and many a stiff neck that had been twisted out of position by the curious. They did not know, of course, that it had been done purposely to attract such attention, and was a stunt that Jake used 40 years ago when he had Hall's Casino, a vaudeville place in old Chicago.

One time, at the Casino, Jake put on a big free lobby display that ran for a number of weeks, with a large tank in which Cora Beckwith (Mrs. Jake Rosenthal), and a number of bathing beauties, attired in the old regulation full-length black tights, performed from 11 in the morning to 11 at night. Cora, a swimming champ in her day, made long stays in the water, establishing a record by floating six weeks without leaving the tank.

Jake used to put chairs on the stage to give patrons the opportunity to watch acts work at close range. They used from 40 to 60 acts in those days, in the 90's. A vaudeville show was an endurance contest.

In Broadway circles of the drama they're repeating the remarkable story about the manner in which Crosby Gaige, theatrical producer of note, came about acquiring the rights to that new comedy by Louis Bromfield and George Hawkins, entitled "Here Today and Gone Tomorrow."

A couple of months ago, it seems, the agent for Mr. Bromfield informed Mr. Gaige by telephone that a script by the aforesaid author was being sent over for consideration. For some reason the script never arrived, and Gaige promptly forgot about it.

Last week Mr. Gaige got into a taxicab on Park Avenue at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel for a ride to his office and was surprised to find within, on the seat, an envelope containing a manuscript. Curiosity compelled him to have a peak at it and, lo, it was the play by Mr. Bromfield. Immediately he started to read it, finished it that afternoon and purchased the play two days later.

The following day he was requested to bring the script along when he met Mr. Bromfield to confer about it. It is, advised Mr. Bromfield, the only copy of the script.

An Open Letter to all newsreel editors:

Here's a tip, fresh from the inside, on a big news event—and may the best reel get the scoop:

Wilbur Glenn Voliva, of Zion, Illinois, who says the world is flat, has looked into his Bible, or crystal, or something, and predicts a battle which will be so fierce that it'll take "seven months to bury the slain."

"The United States," he explained, "will be part of the revived Roman Empire, restored and ruled by the Roman Italian Prince."

"The assimilation of the United States into the revived Roman Empire will be part of two general movements—Italy, France, England and the United States into the Fascist alliance, the other of the European nations into the great northeastern confederacy, a modified type of Communism."

And here's where the newsreels enter the picture. These two forces, continued Wilbur, will meet at Armageddon in 1942 or 1943. He's not sure which, but he'll shoot in more specific information about that later.

"They will destroy each other at Armageddon in a battle which will be so bloody that it will require seven months to bury the slain," he predicted. Of course, if it really took that long, Universal could turn out a serial.

"Are wives for sale or barter in Hollywood?" asked Paramount home office publicity—just like that. "Some people think so; those who persist in believing that screen players hold nothing sacred but utter sophistication, and would happily dispose of one wife of another."

All of which is by way of relating that Paramount's actor, Sydney Blackmer, has within the past six months received four letters from prospective suitors of his former wife, Lenore Ulric, each epistle asking if he would advise a marriage with her and requesting information on her disposition and financial condition.

The Warner studio at Burbank in California was in the midst of making "The G Men," in which, besides glorifying the United States Secret Service, they show how these agents track down characters who had been too liberal pouring lead out of revolvers. One of the performers fired a shot the other day, while portraying a Secret Service man doing his duty, and it hit Frank Evans, assistant cameraman, just below the hip. That's realism in reverse.

8 MORE INDEPENDENT COMPANIES ORGANIZE

Four Distributors Announce the '35-'36 Convention Plans; Increased Call for Westerns

Product structures for 1935-36 began this week to assume more tangible form as tentative schedules were being supplanted by actual story and talent assignments and by more definite programs from a numerical standpoint. Eight new independent companies were added to the score already announced, and as production of this season's programs went into final stages, executives of virtually every large major and independent company were concentrating on either coast in conference on new product and new policies.

Promising product for the new year as entirely new sources were Campbell Productions, Cartoon Exhibitors, Color Classics, Excelsior Pictures, Republic Productions, William Rowland, Security Pictures and William G. Smith. Twenty-one other new units were announced by MOTION PICTURE HERALD on March 23, page nine.

Paramount made official announcement of May 23 and 26 as annual convention dates, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, where the company probably will announce a schedule of 65 features and 100 short subjects; GB has decided on May, at a place as yet undecided; RKO appeared to be determined on 50 features and a June convention, in Chicago; Universal will meet May 23, likewise in Chicago.

A new demand for westerns caused Fox to renew with Sol Lesser for four more with George O'Brien. Columbia is set to distribute eight Ken Maynards and may reissue eight Tim McCoys. This season the company is releasing a similar number of McCoys and eight Buck Jones reissues.

There were only five Paramount westerns this season, but the company may double the number for 1935-36, three or four to be Zane Greys. Universal will increase the series of six Buck Jones westerns to eight.

The reason for the trend is the desire of exhibitors to satisfy Saturday and Sunday demands for action pictures, in large cities as well as small.

Pre-season selling continued to gain, with some companies offering long term contracts in certain territories, especially in the South. These in some instances amount to a franchise, running for 1935-36 and 1936-37. Principally active in advance selling are Fox, Paramount and Warner.

This week's developments in the formulation of programs of 32 companies for 1935-36 follow:

Atherton Productions

Louis Hyman, representing Sol Lesser, president of Atherton, arrived in New York from California to talk to Fox Film officials regarding a new series of four George O'Brien westerns. Mr. Lesser is producing four O'Brien's this season, having already completed the third, "Cowboy Millionaire," to be followed by "Hard Luck O'Brien."

Burroughs-Tarzan

Ben S. Cohen arrived in New York from Hollywood to arrange distribution for another combination serial-feature, "Adventures of Tarzan."

Campbell

Reported in process of formation in New York's colored Harlem district was a company to be known as Campbell Productions, to produce all-colored pictures.

Cartoon Exhibitors

Comments and "gags" contributed by Broadway humorists are contained in "The Wisecrack Weekly," short subject, released this week as the first of a series to be produced by the new Cartoon Exhibitors, Inc.

Color Classics

Walter Bond, William Arthur Babson and Aurora Viehbrook incorporated Color Classics, Inc., in New York.

Columbia

Columbia's 1935-36 production and sales plans were under discussion in Hollywood. Jack Cohn, returning from the Coast last Saturday, indicated that the company will not increase its total schedule next season, although the present number of 10 specials, out of 40 releases, will be increased under a plan to bolster the star lineup. The number of specials for 1935-36 may be doubled, with budgets increased on the others.

Harry Cohn will arrive in New York in a few weeks for home office conferences on the eve of the sales convention. Reports had Frank Capra, director, heading his own production unit.

The new trend toward westerns may cause the company to reissue eight Tim McCoy features, to add to eight new Ken Maynards. This season there were reissues of Buck Jones westerns.

DuWorld

Distribution rights to Cantor Josef Rosenblatt's "Dream of My People" were obtained by DuWorld from Palestine-American Film.

Educational

E. W. Hammons' short subject producing company started the last of this season's program, now three-fourths completed, and the pace will continue until the last is finished, in order to get an early start on next season's program.

Excelsior

New season's release of Premier Pictures, Hollywood, will go out under the new firm name of Excelsior, producers Sig Neufeld and Leslie Simmonds making the change this week. The company will make nine features for 1935-36, the first to be "Hell Breaks Loose," with Guinn Williams and Sally Blane co-starred, and Sam Newfield directing.

First Division Productions

Production plans of First Division Productions, Inc., filming division of First Division Exchanges, were under discussion in New York this week at conferences in which John A. Curtis, George Jackson Hill, Jr., Nicholas Ludington and Frank Look were participating, while Harry Thomas, Al Friedland and William L. Fiske represented the distribution division. The company had not decided on the total of 1935-36 releases. Hoot Gibson is now making four, two of which are ready. Both Curtis and Ludington have been in Hollywood.

Fox Film

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, was still in Hollywood talking with studio executives about 1935-36 product. Sol Lesser again will make four George O'Brien westerns.

Futter

Walter Futter was in New York from Hollywood to arrange distribution for a series of Tom Keene westerns. He brought East a print of "Hong Kong Nights," first of the group.

GB Pictures

Arthur A. Lee, vice-president of GB Pictures Company in this country, announced the annual convention will be held in May. In Hollywood, Michael Balcon, production head from London, said that the company will distribute 16 in this country next season. Mr. Balcon has been on the coast signing stars for the productions in London. He already has signed Richard Dix and Madge Evans for "The Tunnel," in which Conrad Veidt will also appear. Maureen O'Sullivan and C. Aubrey Smith were acquired for Kipling's "Soldiers Three," and Boris Karloff and Peter Lorre were taken for another. Helen Vinson is another. Two of the 16 will star George Arliss, another will be on the life of Cecil Rhodes, possibly with Walter Huston.

Mr. Balcon leaves Hollywood Friday for a week in New York and then returns to the studios in England.

Grace

Grace Pictures was reported to have concluded negotiations with M. D. Strong's Criterion Films for distribution of its "Kingfish," purported to be a story of the career of Senator Huey Long, Louisiana.

Hoffberg

J. H. Hoffberg Company will import 15 Spanish features from Argentina, Mexico and Spain, starting with "Dancing," from Argentina.

Liberty-Majestic

M. H. Hoffman, president of Liberty Pictures, in Hollywood, placed in work the 12th and final feature for 1934-35, entitled "I'll Bet You." Meanwhile, in New York, Majestic was moving its home office from Radio City to Liberty's quarters at 1776 Broadway, where joint sales operations will be conducted under Budd Rogers, Liberty's sales manager. Majestic will complete its present program of 12 features, and future plans will be made known within the month. Herman Gluckman is president of Majestic.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A new trend is in the offing at Metro's Culver City studio, where five stories of the sea were in preparation, and two others were being filmed.

On the 1935-36 schedule will be a feature, his first, from James A. FitzPatrick, who produces Metro's "Technicolor Traveltalks," shorts. Mr. FitzPatrick will sail from New York for London and Africa about April 27 for location scenes for the feature, "Doctor Livingston." Mrs. FitzPatrick is now in Japan producing color shorts, and will next work in China.

The company started last weekend to set its short subject program for next season, signing a new contract with Harman Ising for another 13 "Happy Harmonies," in Technicolor. The schedule probably will remain the same in

Jurists to See "Miserables" At Two New York Screenings

United Artists held a screening Wednesday evening of "Les Miserables" in New York for a group of jurists, headed by Kenneth Jones, of the National Committee on Public Education for Crime Control, who acted as host to Judge Otto Rosalsky, Max D. Steuer, Dudley Field Malone, Judge Samuel D. Levy, George Gordon Battle, Judge Jeannette Brill, Judge John P. O'Brien and Bainbridge Colby.

On Thursday evening a second screening was scheduled for New York University, under the same sponsorship, for Professor Frederic M. Thrasher's class on motion picture theory and art. Scheduled to attend were Judge Jonah J. Goldstein, Charles L. Chute, of the National Probation Association, Sanford Bates, of the Bureau of Prisons, Harry Elmer Barnes, George Z. Medalie.

"Les Miserables," a 20th Century production, directed by Richard Boleslawski, is about to be released.

AMPA Nominating Committee Names Candidates for Office

A nominating committee of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on Wednesday announced candidates for office for 1935-36, to succeed the present administration, headed by William R. Ferguson, of MGM, as follows:

For president, Bruce Gallup, who this week became advertising-publicity director of Columbia; vice-president, Charles Leonard, Universal; secretary, Alexander Gottlieb; treasurer, Martin Starr.

Nominated for the board of directors are: Paul Benjamin, William Ferguson, Vincent Trotta, Gordon White and Marvin Kirsch; for trustee for three years, David Davidson; auditing committee, Al Sherman, Ralph Lund, Rodney Bush; and, for national counsellor to the Chamber of Commerce, Rutgers Neilson.

Both Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Benjamin, who have been conducting the present administration, along with Marvin Kirsch, of Film Daily, declined to continue in office.

New Portable Address System by RCA Victor

A new portable public address and sound reinforcement system for moderate sized public places, contained in a carrying-case and weighing 28½ pounds, has been introduced by the RCA Victor commercial sound sales department.

This unit is said to be suited for such applications as window demonstrations in dealers' stores, counter-to-kitchen restaurant call systems, and for local fairs and carnivals.

Sponable to Address SMPE

E. I. Sponable will give a paper and demonstration before the next meeting of the Atlantic Coast section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in the theatre review room of Fox Film Corporation, New York, Wednesday evening, April 17. Mr. Sponables paper is "The Progress in the Development of Sound Recording and Reproducing Equipment." He will give a demonstration of sound recordings from old and new sound tracks.

BRITISH AND AMERICAN INTERESTS DRAW CLOSE

New Company to Produce in Bahamas; Warner Expanding in London; Balcon Signs Stars

The interests of England and America in the motion picture were drawn closer together this week by several diverse developments:

British-American Cinema Studios, Inc., was formed to produce British quota pictures at Nassau, an English possession, as a solution to the quota problems of American companies.

Warner Brothers sent Irving Asher back to London with orders to expand the company's production facilities and production program in England.

Samuel Goldwyn said he will produce in London if California's tax program passes and forces producers to abandon Hollywood.

Michael Balcon, for Gaumont British, signed a group of Hollywood stars to go to England.

Vincent Wray, of London, representing unnamed American and British business interests, announced formation of British-American Cinema Studios, Inc., to effect "a logical solution of one of the most costly and vexatious problems confronting American productions" of the British quota by establishing studios at Nassau in the Bahama Islands, where the company will produce quota pictures for American companies.

"Up to this time, quota pictures made in England by American companies have been practically a total loss, due to the fact that they are rarely ever shipped to the United States," explained Mr. Wray. "Production cost limitations have made it impossible to create the type of pictures which would find favor on American screens; and so these pictures have been made to fulfill the requirements of the law and then have been promptly shelved, with their costs, amounting to hundreds of thousands, charged off to profit and loss."

He predicted that production costs of these pictures for quota use will be cut at Nassau to half the expenditure in London, due largely to weather conditions obtaining in the Bahamas as against the more severe climate of England, where little exterior shooting is possible.

Will Feature Americans

"In addition," he declared, "we will be able to feature American players as they will be able to fly from Miami in two hours, whereas many can not consider the trip to London and return with its loss of two weeks in traveling."

The company will either make the quota pictures on assignment, or will make available studio facilities to producers. A studio also will be built at Opalocka, Florida, six miles from Miami. Sixteen features will be produced immediately for 1935-36, the first release on October 1.

In New York is Mrs. Bonnie Busch, head of the company's story department, who is looking for material. Mrs. Busch is honorary member of the American Women's Association in Florida, member and past president of the Association of American Penwomen and author of several novels, including "Waiting" and "Progressive Marriage."

Permanent offices will be opened in New York within the month, said Mr. Wray, who explained that the development had no bearing on the reputed contemplation of the industry to move its studios from Hollywood if California passes its present tax legislation proposals.

Warner Expanding in England

While the Wray interests were revealing their plans for quota production on this side, Warner determined to expand in England.

Carrying authority to start construction of a new sound stage and enlargement of the studio at Teddington, near London, Irving Asher, production head at the English studios, sailed after conferences with Jack L. Warner in Hollywood. Mr. Warner has in mind sending some of the company's first-line stars to London to appear in the British product. Laura La Plante, who is Mrs. Asher, will make "The Water Nymph." Mr. Asher urged that consideration for London production be given to the Jolson-Keeler team, to Kay Francis and James Cagney, and, possibly, Joan Blondell, Guy Kibbee, Hugh Herbert, Frank McHugh and Allen Jenkins.

"All English producers are adopting American methods," Mr. Asher said. "The cinema is enormously popular all through England, and American stars are welcomed enthusiastically."

Warner will make longer features in England next year, said Mr. Asher. This season the product runs from 4,500 to 5,000 feet each; the new feature will run 7,000 feet. He said that the new pictures "will aim for a world market." Jerome Jackson, formerly with Gaumont-British, will become an associate of Mr. Asher.

Goldwyn Looking to England

Samuel Goldwyn, returning to New York last week from England, said he would not join other Hollywood studios in any migration to another state if the California tax program is enacted, but would move his division of United Artists to London, "where they want, respect and appreciate the film producer."

"Great Britain knows what it means to have at its disposal wordwide exploitation that can be obtained through the medium of the films, and the Government is now trying to pass laws to help producers inasmuch as it means the spreading of the name and fame of the country everywhere in the world."

A further closer relationship between Hollywood and London production was being effected this week in Hollywood where Michael Balcon, production head of Gaumont British, London, was signing stars for production in England. Twentieth Century and Alexander Korda, London Films, plan an interchange of talent. William Goetz, vice president of 20th, leaves this week for conferences with Mr. Korda.

FOR THE NEW SEASON

number as this season, when 36 two-reelers and 31 singles are being distributed.

The Laurel and Hardy combination will continue under the Roach-Metro banner, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy having made up their differences last week and signed a new contract with Hal Roach, starting with a feature for 1935-36.

Monogram

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, was touring the Midwest, and in Kansas City declared that the company next season may increase its program from 36 to 42 features. Mr. Johnston said that all plans will be ready for approval of franchise holders at the annual meeting, about May 1, to be held probably in Cincinnati or Cleveland. He returned to New York this week.

Ostrow

Lou Ostrow, completing his fourth and last feature for Universal, was reported in Hollywood to be considering a series next season for another distributor.

Paramount

The company officially announced May 23 to 26 for its 1935-36 sales convention, to be held in New York at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel. Neil F. Agnew, sales manager, will preside during the first three days, while George J. Schaeffer will preside when matters affecting theatre operations are under consideration.

The fourth day will be given over to group meetings in which matters of immediate importance to the individual districts will be taken up. On that day, too, Mr. Schaeffer will talk to Paramount theatre partners.

A number of regional meetings will follow.

While Paramount scouts were seeking new talent and story material, the production forces actually started production on 1935-36 features. In all probability the lineup will remain as at present, 65 features and 100 single-reel shorts, including a series of six westerns to be produced by Harry Sherman; eight to be made by Benjamin Glazer, and, possibly a series of features by B. P. Schulberg, who is to submit a new production proposal to the new Paramount board of directors soon, as the result of the vetoing of a previous proposal by creditor representatives.

Mr. Schulberg's new arrangement is expected to provide for 14 features in the next two years, to be made at an average cost of $250,000. Production, however, would be at the Paramount studio, and new financing proportions will also be proposed. The first offer provided for Paramount financing to the extent of 50 per cent and the remainder divided between Electrical Research Products, Inc., and Ralph Kohn.

Already in preparation, or actually being filmed at Paramount for 1935-36, are: Cecil B. DeMille's "The Crusaders"; "Paris in Spring," Lewis Milestone production with Tullio Carminati and Mary Ellis; "So Red the Rose," directed by King Vidor; "The Rose of the Rancho," Belasco-Tully musical, with John Boles; "The Milky Way," and, "Anything Goes," with Bing Crosby.

All Paramount foreign heads will convene in Paris prior to the May 23 convention here, with John W. Hicks, foreign manager, in charge.

Lou Diamond, head of short subjects, said this week that the life of two-reelers is virtually at an end, until such time when double features may be less popular. "We will produce only single-reel subjects during 1935-36," said Mr. Diamond, who sees "raucous flubdub and aimless slapstick healthily supplanted in the new market with smartly made single-reel subjects."

Paramount, too, will take note of the trend toward western features, increasing from the current group of five to nine or ten.

Peerless

Peerless Production is making "Night Cargo," with Lloyd Hughes and Jacqueline Wells.

Radio

Fifty features for 1935-36 and a sales convention in June at Chicago's Drake Hotel are tentative RKO decisions. Plans for the convention are being supervised by Jules Levy, sales manager.

Studio conferences were being held in Hollywood on new product. Katherine Brown, eastern story editor, was at the studio for the three weeks of discussion.

Ben Holmes will direct Walter Catlett in a 1935-36 series of six "Four Star" comedies.

Republic

Mary Putane, John Pfeier and John Butler were named as incorporators of Republic Productions, Inc., chartered in New York.

Rowland

William Rowland, of Hollywood, was reported planning four feature musicals for 1935-36.

Security

Prescott Chaplin, George Mooser, Donald Barry, Richard Bare and Lorrin Andrews were reported to have formed Security Pictures in Hollywood to produce western features and short subjects.

Sennett

Mack Sennett returned to New York from England, and told reporters he would resume production through a new independent company which will market comedies produced both in this country and England.

Smith

William G. Smith was reported to have in mind a series of eight railroad features. Now in New York, Mr. Smith will return to Hollywood within a few days to start preparations.

Trans-Oceanic

Arthur Sanchez of Trans-Oceanic Film Export Company, purchased foreign distribution rights to a series of Harry Carey feature westerns, the entire Mascot product for Venezuela, and to a series of eight features with Lon Chaney, Jr.

United Artists

Darryl Zanuck completed his 20th Century 1934-35 feature schedule, with "Cardinal Richelieu," "Les Miserables" and "Call of the Wild," and decided on 12 for 1935-36, as follows: "Ivanhoe," "The Man Who Broke the Bank of Monte Carlo," "Sing, Governor, Sing," "Shark Island," "Nile Patrol," "Gentlemen, the King," "Earthbound," "Professional Soldier," and four others. Production will begin on Mr. Zanuck's return from an Alaskan trip. Henry Duffy, stage producer, has joined the staff.

Samuel Goldwyn was en route to Hollywood to prepare for "The Dark Angel," first of six to be made by his division of United Artists for 1935-36. He had been in London.

"Amateur Lady" will be Reliance's first for the new season. The unit will be eight.

Production conferences were held one week ago in Hollywood, with Joseph M. Schenck, president; Mr. Zanuck; Al Lichtman, sales manager; Edward Small, pruduction head of Reliance, and Harry Goetz, Reliance president, participating.

Universal

Universal is considering meeting the demands for westerns by increasing the Buck Jones series from six to eight for 1935-36, which would bring the schedule to 44.

Joel McCrea will appear in two features next year, with "Magnificent Obsession" probably the first. Claudette Colbert may play opposite and John Stahl will direct.

First sessions on new sales and product policies were held at the coast studio, where Fred S. Meyer, new business manager, is laying plans to erect a new administration building, relandscape the studio grounds and refurbish the entire plant.

Mr. Meyer declared last weekend that production activity for 1935-36 will be handled by Stanley Bergerman as executive producer and Carl Laemmle, Jr., as independent producer.

"Diamond Jim Brady" will be the first in 1935-36.

Warner

Al Jolson will continue with Warner Brothers, having signed a new contract, which may embrace his extending starring activities to include supervision of all Warner musicals.

Hollywood and June were decided as the place and date for the sales convention. Albert L. Warner, Gradwell Sears and Andrew W. Smith were due at the studios at Burbank from New York to confer with Jack Warner on the new production setup.

Warner signed the Yacht Club quartet to an exclusive contract to appear in eight two-reel Vitaphone musicals and one feature next season.

Six players will be groomed for stardom for 1935-36, including: Olivia de Haviland, Maxine Doyle, June Martel, Nan Gray, June Grabiner and Dorothy Dare.

"Looney Tones" and "Merrie Melodie," short subjects, will continue on Warners' release schedule, the company having signed a new three-year contract with Leon Schlesinger, their producer. This will be the sixth year he has been under contract to the company.

Weiss

Weiss Brothers were reported to be considering 34 features and three serials for 1935-36, the while a deal was being closed with M. H. Hoffman for California distribution by Allied Pictures, 24 of which Weiss has scheduled for this season. The group includes six northwest action features, six police melodramas, six "Range Riders" and a like number of "Rough Riders."

Production was completed on "The Drunkard," which will be released by Stage and Screen Productions, and on "Cyclone of the Saddle" and "Pals of the Range," of the "Range Rider" and "Rough Rider" series, respectively.

School Prepares List Of Industrial Pictures

The Industrial Teacher-Training Library of the High School of Commerce in New York has prepared a bibliography of technical and industrial motion picture films and slides for sale to educators. The book contains data on 1,058 films, which are classified into 27 different subjects. The book lists the source of the film in each case, and the rental charge.

FILMS AS PERENNIALS

Enduring Values Reflected in Rebookings of "It Happened One Night" and "One Night of Love"

by BEN H. ATWELL

Mr. Atwell, by reason of his very long and competent experience with the exploitations of the speaking stage, the opera and the screen, is especially fitted for this discussion of the possibilities of more enduring values in motion picture production. It chances that the revival of the two pictures which inspired the article comes so closely on the heels of original release that the demonstration is something less than perfect. However, it would appear that unless radical improvements in motion picture technique intervene there can be found a valuable residue of box office worth in each season's best productions.—T. R.

The question whether the tendency to regard film productions as ephemeral assets from which all financial returns must be harvested within a few months is sound, or if certain pictures may be considered substantial properties—perennials, capable of demonstrating box-office power year after year, in the same manner that oldtime stage productions enriched their owners—is raised by nationwide rebookings of Columbia's "It Happened One Night" and "One Night of Love."

Both are being resubmitted to the picture-going public on the crest of a wave of publicity growing out of the awards they recently were accorded for excellence. The returns reported by exhibitors have given rise to the question whether, after all, current methods of selling film productions are efficient as compared with the experience of stage producers in the past, who upon developing a smash hit developed it into a meal ticket for years. The latter view may involve a change in both production and selling methods, but this may be viewed as well worth while when the records of certain stage productions are considered.

Outstanding stage perennials include "Rip Van Winkle" with 16,000 performances spread over nearly a half century in the same group of cities—this is a condition true of all "legitimate" touring attractions —"Ben Hur" with nearly 5,000 performances in the course of fifteen years; "The Music Master" with the same record in a dozen years; "The Man From Home" with 4,000 in the same period; "Arizona" with 3,200 performances throughout ten years; "The Squaw Man," and Walter Hampden's production of "Cyrano de Bergerac" with a similar record, after Richard Mansfield previously played "Cyrano" some twenty years. "Charlie's Aunt," "Turn to the Right," "Lightnin'," "Seventh Heaven," "Shore Acres," "The Old Homestead," "Monbars," "Monte Cristo," "The Two Orphans" are similar instances of the remote past. "Green Pastures," current on Broadway after an 18-month original run and years of touring, affords a modern example.

"Birth of a Nation" Lone Film

D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" is the single outstanding example of the vitality of this principle in the realm of pictures. Its spread of profitable presentation covered about 10 years. Of course, this, too, was some time ago.

Today "It Happened One Night" and "One Night of Love" are subjecting the principle to test through repeat presentations from Coast to Coast. Both productions enjoy the advantage of tremendous publicity growing out of having received unusual awards—the former from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and "One Night of Love" the first recognition accorded the cinema by the venerable Society of Arts and Sciences, which for more than half a century has recognized significant contributors to American culture. This has stimulated the curiosity of patrons who failed to see the pictures when originally shown, and the desires of those anxious to enjoy the productions again. In many instances reports indicate that the latter account for the demonstrated box-office drawing power.

In any event the test is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to throw light on the questions involved and to bring forth tangible evidence clarifying the theories growing out of the situation. At the Little Carnegie Theatre in New York, "It Happened One Night" was still playing (as this was being written) after completing the third week of its fourth repeat booking, during which the Astor Theatre rounded out (Thursday, April 4) two big weeks in Times Square after the picture had been shown in every type of picture house from Radio City Music Hall to the most remote neighborhood theatre. Columbia has approved 630 repeat playing contracts for the picture, ranging from the Loew Circuit to small country towns, so the test will be thorough, indeed.

A Story of Repeat Runs

The Stanton theatre in Philadelphia, for instance, found it necessary to hold it over for a second week, while the Ritz in Tuscaloosa, Ala., played to banner business on a repeat third booking. At San Jose, Cal., a repeat presentation on a sharing basis brought the producers more than nine times the original rental. The Orpheum Theatre, Davenport, Iowa; the Superba, San Diego, Cal.; the Tower, St. Paul; the Family at Gary, Ind.; Patterson theatre, Baltimore, and Gem in Salt Lake City are among the scattered repeats already played.

One hundred and twenty-nine approved repeat contracts are starting off the test as applied to "One Night of Love," with the Capitol, Newark, leading the procession. This test is even more severe, for "One Night of Love" was released September 15, and is still a "new" picture in many situations.

"It Happened One Night" was released seven months earlier, on Feb. 23, 1934.

To Have Bearing on Policies

No secret is made of the fact that insofar as Columbia is concerned the outcome of the test will have an important bearing on its future policies concerning productions giving promise of qualifying as classics having perennial possibilities.

Incident to the test, the Loew Circuit on Friday, May 5, began combining the two award winners in many situations where double features are presented, among them the Palace theatre, Hartford; Elm, Worcester; Byar, New Haven, and the Poli theatres in Meriden and Waterbury.

Circuits Planning Revival of Pooling

Major theatre circuits are discussing arrangements for pooling deals, to become effective approximately at the opening of the 1935-36 season, which would bring about an almost unprecedented revival of that form of theatre operation. The development is said to have been caused by a desire to reduce operating costs and at least partially to eliminate severe competition according to the MOTION PICTURE DAILY. Also considered is the fact that extended use of pooling arrangements will tend to reduce the difficulties in setting up clearance and zoning.

Independent operators are included in the pooling deals already placed in effect or under consideration. A recent deal had Paramount taking over operation of the Peekskill, in Peekskill, N. Y., from Raymond Wittickson. In Newark last week Warner pooled its Regent with Levin Brothers' Elwood. The Capitol, Belleville, N. J., Warner house, is involved, the deal concluding a long standing clearance and zoning case filed by Louis Levin.

Loew's and RKO are partners in the Orpheum, Denver, with RKO handling operation. RKO had the house alone before Harry Huffman took it over from the receivers. The house now gets MGM product in addition to Radio. There are reports of Loew's planning operation affiliations with Chicago independents to supplement a number of theatres planned there.

This week the pooling arrangement between Si Fabian and RKO in Albany and Schenectady became effective. Mr. Fabian owns the Palace in Albany and the Plaza in Schenectady, which have been operated by RKO in pools with Farley and Charles Buckley, operating other houses. Now Mr. Fabian becomes the new operator, with RKO buying and booking for the houses.

The Case of the Curious Bride

(First National)

Mystery

Perry Mason, clever criminal lawyer, who always works within the law, and, incidentally, is more than an amateur detective and usually a couple of jumps ahead of the police at their own game, here takes a hand in a case, saves an innocent girl from the chair, unravels a murder and its background, and does it in a racy and highly entertaining fashion.

Warren William, whose name should mean something at the box office, contrives to be an engaging and thoroughly capable Perry Mason, and he is ably aided by Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods, Claire Dodd and Allen Jenkins, who as Spudsy, Mason's general "handy man," supplies some excellent comedy in his own roughneck style.

The romantic element, though it is just sufficient to carry a story thread, is largely incidental to the mystery and the breezy style in which Mason clears it, but the case does revolve about a marital problem, in a sense, hence the value of the title. Largely interspersed with comedy, in situation and dialogue—for the most part handled by Jenkins and William—the story loses no time in getting to its point, and moving from there to the conclusion. Murder, blackmail, police baiting by Mason, a bride, her marriage in danger and she involved in a murder, and the manner in which her attorney dextrously extricates her from all her difficulties, make up the story elements and should offer much with which the exhibitor may work in the selling.

Mason's help is sought by Miss Lindsay, an old friend, whose husband supposedly died four years before and who but recently married wealthy young Woods. Mason learns that the supposedly dead husband returned to blackmail her, a game he apparently had played before. At the morgue he discovers a wooden Indian in the spot where the body of the husband should be. He appoints himself Miss Lindsay's attorney.

He decides to confront the husband personally, but finds the police ahead of him, and the husband dead, via a stab in the head and a poker clout on the head. Miss Lindsay's keys are found by the body, and speedily she is thrown into jail, while Mason sets to work hard and fast to find the truth, save his client, and outwit the police and the district attorney, a pleasurable pastime.

With Jenkins the ferret at his boss's orders, Mason goes to work, the trail leading to San Francisco and a small hotel, through a girl and her brother who was out to get the husband, and involving Woods' father, who tries to buy everybody, including Mason, to send his daughter-in-law to the chair. Slowly but surely Mason builds his case, brings all his suspects together at a cocktail party, and proceeds to recount what happened, accurately, it proves, with Woods finally admitting his proximity to the crime, though describing it as an accident.

Miss Lindsay, then, feels herself free to go with the somewhat unexplained Phillip Reed, a friend, and Mason goes on a vacation with his capable secretary, Miss Dodd.

Names, a good, fast-moving mystery yarn, William and Jenkins, an intriguing title, are the ingredients for the exhibitor to mix in his selling tonic.—Aaronson, New York.

Reckless

(MGM)

Melodramatic Romance

With lavishly atmosphered settings and costumes used in song and dance sequences, and the straight story similarly backgrounded, embellishing, this is a topically based, sophisticated, melodramatic romance. Running its course, it at various periods touches upon practically every known theatrical and entertainment element, including vivid spectacle. As its comedy is comic, its romance romantic and drama dramatic, there is also much that is entirely irrelevant.

In the first part it is a theatre-world grounded musical romance with comedy. With Ned Riley, a sports promoter-gambler, and Granny as her always dependable pals, showgirl Mona has a penchant for getting into jams which her two guardians get her out of. Mona is arduously pursued by wealthy playboy Harrison. With Blossom and Smiley accenting the comedy provided by the trio, Blossom, after being regaled with all the luxury that money can buy and even though she knows that Ned is in love with her, marries Harrison.

Then the picture turns dramatic. Though Harrison, Sr., wants little truck with his new daughter-in-law and Harrison's elite friends snub them, Mona determines to fight against it and show that she is the stuff of which real folk are made. The marriage of Joe, Harrison's erstwhile fiancee, is the turning point. Berated by her husband for happily thrilling the wedding guests, Mona seeks the sanctuary of Ned's rooms. There Harrison, kindly treated by the pair, takes his own life after accusing Mona of roping him in.

Acquitted of a murder charge, Mona finds that Harrison's social crowd are keeping her out of work. Ned, too, is having tough sledding, but finally raises enough money to back Mona in a new show. Determined to keep Mona off the stage, the club women and socialites try every scheme possible to bar her. Ned, however, is adamant in insisting that the show go on.

Hissed, booed and clapped down as she tries to sing, Mona makes a curtain speech telling the whole truth of the Harrison affair, and the jeers of the audience turn to cheers as Mona finishes her number, while Ned is slipping a ring on her finger.

The topical nature of the production gives it exploitation value, accentuating that of the expensive settings featured. Name values in the cast naturally are not to be overlooked.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

It Happened in New York

(Universal)

Comedy Drama

A comedy drama, though with comedy the dominating story element, this tells the yarn of a New York taxi driver, a tough lad, his romance with a little telephone operator, and the almost fatal accident to that romance when a temperamental screen star, with her press agent, drops into town and into the cabby's vehicle, causing lots of trouble for the couple, and a good deal of amusement.

The names are fairly good for selling purposes. Lyle Talbot is the cabby, Gertrude Michael the star, Heather Angel Talbot's fiancee and Hugh O'Connell the star's ingenious and persistent press agent. It appears that comedy is the selling tack to take, making full use of the names and title, tying that in with the complication of often laugh-provoking episodes which result when the star, tired and annoyed, refuses to go to the premiere of her own picture, the press agent is driven to distraction, and Talbot suddenly finds himself escorting the star as the wealthy cattleman of Australia, and Miss Angel, to get even, goes with a bogus count as the brilliant French feminine star.

Not outstanding material, it is nonetheless well done of its kind. The romantic angle and its complications open the way for selling.

Talbot and Miss Angel are engaged and he uses their savings to become a partner in the garage business, but with still several hundred dollars to pay. Miss Michael is en route to New York and Europe for a vacation, and in order to avoid a welcome at the station, disem-barks at 125th street, rushing into Talbot's cab. He recognizes her and when he hears a broadcast for the return of her lost dog, presents himself. Miss Michael becomes interested in him, and to save attending the premiere of her latest picture with the bogus count, persuades Talbot to go with her, O'Connell having to dress him as a wealthy Australian.

Miss Angel, discovering the "date," is annoyed and she and Talbot quarrel, although the money that is in the "job" makes Talbot agree to accompany the star. They go for dinner on a yacht and steal off for a sail down the Hudson, but eventually are caught by O'Connell and forced to return to the theatre. Miss Angel, to get even, accedes to O'Connell's plan that she go as a French star, arranged by the press agent to appease the anger of the "count." At the premiere Talbot fights with the count, Miss Michael's expensive diamond is stolen and the count is revealed as in league with the thieves.

Miss Michael sees to it that the romance of Talbot and Miss Angel shall go along in the right direction and that Talbot gets enough money to become a full partner in the garage.

Light and lively entertainment, telling of a rather far fetched but nonetheless possible episode in New York, where almost anything may happen, the film will fit almost any time in the week.—Aaronson, New York.

Brewster's Millions

(United Artists)

Comedy with Music

A gay comedy film, rather nonsensical as to story but attractively entertaining in its music, dance numbers, dialogue and situations, this production was made in England for British and Dominions by Herbert Wilcox and is distributed in this country by United Artists.

The star is Jack Buchanan, well known British player, and the picture is entirely his. Buchanan has personality and comedy ability, can sing and dance, and his speaking accent is less definitely English than that of many of the English players seen on the screens of this country. The rest of the cast, unknown here with the exception of Lili Damita, speak with the customary accent, but much of the footage is devoted to song and dance.

The exhibitor should have ample opportunity for lively copy and attention-arresting material in the theme of the story, adapted from a well known play of the same title. Jack Brewster, impecunious young man, falls heir to £500,000, then discovers that an uncle has died and left him £6,000,000 on condition that at the end of six months he is absolutely broke. His effort to spend all of his half-million pounds in the required time provides the backbone of the yarn, and opens the way for all sorts of diversified situations. Selling Buchanan's name for what it is worth, emphasizing the dance and song aspects of the story and hitting the comedy angle, particularly the theme, looks to be the best selling method.

Buchanan is tossed over by Miss Damita, chorus girl with whom he has become fascinated, when she learns he has no money. Nancy O'Neill, fellow-boarder at Jack's "home," is in love with him, which feeling is later reciprocated. He falls heir to the half-million pounds and a fine London house, and is giving a house warming when he learns of the second bequest and its conditions. He immediately goes wildly in search of ways to spend his current fortune. Another condition is that he enter into no feminine entanglements, and tell no one of the will or its stipulations. He backs a show, written by another boarder of his former domicile, with Miss Damita as the star, which opens the way for song and dance numbers. Then he loads the complete cast on a yacht and is off to Monte Carlo and a big fiesta. He tries to lose at the gaming tables, but wins. He buys wildly of supposedly worthless stock, and it goes up. He spends fortunes on the show, and it is a great success.

Eventually, as the zero hour draws near, and Miss O'Neill is annoyed, while Miss Damita is too attentive, Jack succeeds, by masterly dickering, in getting rid of everything but the suit he stands in, despite last minute efforts of well meaning friends to give him money he does not want. Finally he gets his inheritance, and takes care of Miss O'Neill, while the show's author does likewise for Miss Damita.—Aaronson, New York.

In Spite of Danger

(Columbia)

Action Melodrama

A melodramatic and fast paced action story here has been evolved from the trucking business. There is a share of villainy, also a number of laughs, and the expected but rather incidental romance. It looks to be the sort of material which, on the regular run theatre program, fits nicely into the weekend position.

Wallace Ford and Marion Marsh are the cast leaders, supported by the perennial of trouble making roles, Arthur Hohl and Charley Grapewin. Young Jay Walter Ward, child actor, supplies the greater portion of the comedy. The title says comparatively little, but may be worked up for an action picture with play on the last word. A promise of thrill action would not be overstatement, since one sequence in particular has a brakeless truck, loaded with dynamite, flying down a long mountain grade.

Perhaps tieup arrangements with local trucking concerns may be effected by the exhibitor, whereby they will permit the carrying of paper advertising the picture on their trucks. Selling the action aspect of the story, and spotting the picture in the weekend position seem to be the best mothods.

Ford, automobile race driver, is hurt in a crash on the track and recuperates at a western home, where Miss Marsh operates the lunchroom and takes care of her widowed father Grapewin, and her young brother, Ward. Grapewin's trucking business is in a bad way, chiefly, it develops, through the unscrupulous tactics of Hohl, who operates the large rival trucking concern. When Ford learns he cannot race again for a long time, he uses his savings to buy a new truck and enters into partnership with Grapewin.

Hohl immediately goes into action, using his trickiest driver, Richard Wessel, a former race driver, to handle the dirty work. Ford loses a good contract when Wessel cuts the ropes on a crockery cargo. Then, underbid on a construction job supply contract, Hohl challenges Ford to a test run, the winner to get the contract. Obstructions are placed on the road and Ford's truck, which is winning, goes over the embankment and is destroyed. With an old truck repaired, Ford gets a dynamite delivery job. Wessel, at Hohl's order, damages the brakes. The truck runs wild down grade. Grapewin and Ford jump as Ford runs the truck over the bank to save those at the camp. Hohl is killed by a falling pole, and the way is cleared for the trucking business, and the romance between Ford and Miss Marsh.—Aaronson, New York.

The Morals of Marcus

(Twickenham - Gaumont British)

Romantic Drama

W. J. Locke's novel and play were both best-sellers in their day and his plot and characterization still present good material for effective film use. Whether the most has been made of them here is a matter of opinion resting on varying views as to the degree of modernization necessary to make talker hits of pre-war stage successes.

In favor of this adaptation is the fact that it is not a period piece; against it is the point that it is not particularly up-to-date either. With a certain amount of modern dressing, it retains an old-fashioned atmosphere, and its tempo is decidedly slow. This may have its own appeal to those who remember the book. Lupe Velez, Ian Hunter and Noel Madison are useful names, though none has been given opportunity to show full capabilities.

Sir Marcus Ordeyne, book worm and archeologist, on the way back to England from Syria finds that a beautiful girl, escaped from a harem, has concealed herself in one of his packing cases. In London his "ward" creates a sensation, as much by her presence as by her unconventional behavior in rendering Eastern dances at a restaurant. Judith, an English woman in love with Marcus, divorces her husband and decides that Carlotta must be removed in order that she herself may have Marcus. She persuades the girl that Marcus regards her as a burden. Carlotta goes to Paris with Pasquale, Italian friend of Marcus, but leaves him when she discovers that he does not intend marriage. Marcus turns down Judith and eventually traces Carlotta to a cafe where she is singing for a living.

The novel and play titles are the obvious selling values and something can be made of the fact that Lupe Velez has the unconventional part of a girl brought straight from the harem into fashionable London.—Allan, London.

Produced by Twickenham Film Studios and distributed by Gaumont British. Directed by Miles Mander. From the novel and play by W. J. Locke. Adaptation by Guy Bolton and Miles Mander. Camera, Sydney Blythe. Sound, Baynham Honri and Carlisle Mounteney. Running time, 75 minutes. "G."

The Hoosier School Master

(Monogram)

Dramatic Romance

In this production is heroized the American schoolmaster of the little red schoolhouse of Civil War reconstruction days. An all-family attraction, general in appeal, it relates a dramatic romantic story against a suggested but seldom evident vivid background. It is based on a novel once widely read but today rarely

"THE LOST CHICK" will fight it out with any feature for the top applause of the show! This M-G-M Happy Harmony Cartoon in Color has an unbeaten record! Name your date (Easter's a perfect time) and let "THE LOST CHICK" do the rest!

One of the melody series known as HAPPY HARMONIES. Bringing fame to its producers HARMAN-ISING and joy to M-G-M heard of. Thus showmanship necessary for successful marketing must be derived directly from the picture itself without benefit of that spontaneous interest commonly accruing to more familiar semi-historical romances.

With other veterans, Ralph goes west to Indiana to claim lands which the Government has given them as partial recompense for their military service. Political chicanery, however, has placed ownership of all the desirable lands in the hands of a greedy trio, Hawkins, Jake and Doc Small. Ralph gets the job as school teacher. Boarded in Jake's house, it is evident that Ralph is falling in love with bond girl Hannah, as Jake's daughter Martha is falling in love with him.

When he achieves a bloodless victory over the town bully, Bud, the trio discover that he is aiding the squatter-camped veterans to put in legitimate claims for their lands. The teacher stands ace high with his pupils. A spelling bee is arranged and Ralph and Hannah, whose affection has turned to distrust as she believes that Ralph is in love with Martha, are the only survivors. Intentionally failing on a word, Ralph tries to tell Hannah that she is mistaken. He convinces her and they plan to run away, but the land-mad trio, seeing in Ralph a menace to their holdings, determine to put him out of business. Little Shocky rallies the ex-soldiers to their comrade's assistance, and there's a pitched battle in which the townsfolk get the worst of it. In the finale the Government representative assures the soldiers they will have their rights. Hannah is in Ralph's arms.

The picture is slowly tempoed, yet in running its course it is dramatic, romantic and at the same time carries a comedy relief that contrasts with the other elements. Most of the thrill action is confined to the sequence in which the soldiers and townsfolk battle.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Abdul the Damned

(Associated British Pictures)

Historical Drama

There are unusual elments in this British picture, offering various opportunities for out-of-the-rut exploitation. As a closeup of a historical tyrant it is impressive; Abdul Hamid II, last Sultan of Turkey, may not have been, either in appearance or actions, exactly the figure pictured by Fritz Kortner, but whatever license has been taken by the actor and by his director, Karl Grune, is justified by its artistic and dramatic results.

The film Abdul is a convincing, repulsive and fascinating figure. He is almost the whole of the film. Nils Asther as his chief of police and leading instrument of villainy, is very good, and there is a brilliant study of the chief eunuch by Esme Percy, but plot and love interest are so subsidiary to the study of the Sultan as almost to be negligible.

Kortner is really brilliant, despite a tendency to under-act, which is emphasized by the slow tempo of many scenes.

The story is a free picturization of the pre-war struggle between Abdul and the Young Turk reformists. After granting a constitution, the Sultan uses his chief of police, Kadar Pasha, to stage an outrage for which the Young Turks are blamed. The anger of the mob is a pretext for abolishing the constitution and executing the reformist leaders, but a new rising directed from Salonika deposes the Sultan.

Incidental to the political theme is Abdul's infatuation for Therese, a Viennese opera singer who is in love with a young Turkish officer. Kadar has the young man condemned to death and Therese consents to enter the Sultan's household in order that her lover's life may be spared. He leads the final revolt and rescues her.

This story is not convincing and is chiefly of interest as enabling the director to picture Abdul's character on its personal side. There is a very amusing scene in which, alone in the theatre, he watches the chorus through opera glasses. Later, it is to Therese that he confesses his fears and indirectly explains the tragedy of which he is the center. All this is of minor interest compared with the study of Abdul the political tyrant, who keeps a drunken German actor to "double" him at public functions and kills the doctor who learns the secret when the false Sultan is wounded; executes the agents who learn too much of his plans, and banquets while he listens to the volleys which end the lives of the constitutional rulers of Turkey.

The selling angle is therefore the historical figure of Abdul Hamid II, and Fritz Kortner. Asther is worth using but Adrienne Ames' part is nothing much and that of her lover, John Stuart, is less.—Allan, London.

The Call of the Savage

(Universal)

Jungle Serial

Universal's latest serial, in 12 chapters, taken from the "Argosy" Magazine story, "Jan of the Jungle," this is in the nature of a somewhat different "Tarzan of the Apes." Featuring Noah Beery, Jr., with Dorothy Short and H. L. Woods in chief support, the serial is crowded with all the action, cannibals, hairbreath escapes, jungle animal battles, villainy and the like which is to be expected. A group of doctors go to the African jungle to develop an infantile paralysis serum, the discovery of which will bring $500,000. One of the doctors attains the goal, two others attempt to get it and in the ensuing excitement, the doctor is lost, his wife killed and his small son wanders off into the jungle with his chimpanzee playmate. Then the story jumps 15 years, to find Jan a familiar of the jungle, wearing on his wrist a band on which is engraved half of his father's valuable formula. Jan is captured by a sea captain, the ship is wrecked, and Miss Short, daughter of a jungle trader, and Woods are rescued by Jan. Then their adventures begin in the jungle, as the two unscupulous doctors return to Africa to find the formula, when they hear the missing doctor has been found, but with his mind gone. The first three chapters, "Shipwrecked," "Captured by Cannibals" and "Stampeding Death," run 28, 21 and 19 minutes, respectively.

His Bridal Sweet

(Columbia)

Numerous Laughs

There are numerous laughs in this more or less slapstick comedy, featuring the "dead-panned" Harry Langdon. Harry, just married, stops with his bride on their way to the train to see the demonstration house of the type they plan to buy. Everything in it is of the electrical gadget type, and Harry's troubles begin before he gets inside. When the house is quarantined for the night, things get worse and worse, as Harry is locked in the bedroom with a burly inebriate. He and his wife escape finally, but it is by way of a window.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Golden Touch

(United Artists)

Excellent

An excellent, and highly entertaining color cartoon, this number of Walt Disney's Silly Symphonies series recounts the story of the legendary King Midas, the greatest gold hoarder of them all, and tells of the lesson he learned in greed and its consequences. The elf comes to him in his counting room, gives him the golden touch, and old Midas is on top of the world, until he discovers that his golden touch makes it impossible for him to eat. Goldie takes away the touch, at the king's appeal, but also takes his kingdom and wealth—for a hamburger sandwich. Unusually clever, the subject appears worthy of special exhibitor attention.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Old Grey Mayor

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

There are amusing moments in this comedy, featuring Bob Hope, comedian of the musical comedy stage, who is the timid suitor for the hand of the daughter of the town's tough mayor. The girl is also the object of the attention of the mayor's friend, equally tough. Hope, practical joker, is tossed out of the office, and conceives a scheme, whereby the girl shall pretend she shot herself. Hope arrives in whiskers and a uniform as an ambulance doctor, and the two drive off to Westchester to be married, after the mayor makes it impossible in the city.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Hayseed Romance

(Educational)

Good

Buster Keaton, frozen-faced comic, is chiefly responsible for the fact that this may rate as a good comedy, although there is little to its story, which is largely concerned with slapstick excitement. Buster answers an ad with an "object matrimony" attached, and goes to work on the farm, despite the advertisers' elderly and bulky appearance. Buster's difficulties with his attic bed, when the roof begins to leak, are amusing. He falls for the owner's pretty niece, decides to leave, and is hauled off to the justice of the peace and forced to marry—the girl he wants.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Baby Be Good

(Paramount)

Good

An attractive little cartoon number of the Betty Boop variety, in which Betty cannot get her small brother to sleep, and tells him a story, in song, of the bad little boy, who did wrong things until he was frightened by a lion. The good fairy permits him literally to go backward, undoing all the things he had done, which story is enacted in cartoon. The youngsters especially should enjoy the subject.—Running time, seven minutes.

Fantasy in Fashion

(Blake—Bondy)

Feminine Appeal

In the nature of an advertising subject, produced by B. K. Blake in the interests of, and sponsored by the manufacturer of "Sheer Ripple," a cotton fabric, and distributed by Al Bondy, this should have a wide feminine appeal. Done in excellently executed color, the subject first tells something of the fabrication of cotton goods, from plant to cloth, then moves to the smart resorts of Florida, where is held something very like a fashion parade of the results of designer's skill with this particular brand of cotton goods. At the theatre there was real feminine interest in the subject, and the advertising message, though much more pronounced in the latter sequences, is not too heavy.—Running time, 10 minutes.

A good time will be had by all!

"Refreshing fun is this show's entertainment and showmanship quality. It is continuously light, gay and airy and, as it tells a catchy comedy romance story, there is never a serious moment. The show is the kind of entertainment in which audiences always find amusement."

NEW BLUE

Not a line of type of any of the previous editions of this famous work is being used in Richardson's new BLUE BOOK OF SOUND AND PROJECTION. Alert to the refinements in equipment, accessories and practices of the last several years that have made his previous editions obsolete, Richardson has written a completely new book. Leading engineers and projectionists who read it in manuscript rate it as the most comprehensive and useful treatise on the subject that has yet been published. It contains over 700 pages and 153 illustrations. The new edition is 6 x 9 in size, allowing for large readable type.

THE AUTHOR

The name of F. H. Richardson is synonymous with good projection everywhere. Three decades spent in this important branch of the theatre have won him international recognition from theatre owners, producers and manufacturers. He has travelled widely in behalf of his profession, has lectured and taught his favorite subject in many places, and has written innumerable articles. His Blue Book School of Projection in Motion Picture Herald is an established feature of the industry. He carries on a vast correspondence with projectionists all over the world, and thousands follow his Questions and Answers in Better Theatres. He is one of the founders of the American Projection Society. His Blue Books, in previous editions, are used in thousands of projection rooms where skill and honest craftsmanship is valued.

Author Will Autograph the First 200 Copies

Because of the wide demand from projectionists and theatre managers for autographed copies of the new BLUE BOOK, Mr. Richardson has consented to autograph 200 books to go to the first 200 buyers. The prompt return of this coupon will reward you with one of these highly prized autographed copies.

Nearly 700 Pages of Text

QUICK-FINDING INDEX SYSTEM

The indexing system used in the new Blue Book is another of Richardson's many important contributions to the art and science of motion picture projection. It is comprehensive and extremely simple and enhances the value of the work to every theatre technician. Since Richardson's books are designed to be used as part of each day's projection routine it is essential that the projectionist find what he wants within the instant. By the indexing method Richardson has especially devised for this new Blue Book a twirl of the pages with your thumb is enough to take you at once to the text dealing with your problem. Projectionists of long experience in projection rooms will be the first to appreciate this time-saver.

BOOK OF PROJECTION

A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO GOOD OPERATING AND QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTING

IN ONE HANDY VOLUME

Richardson's new Blue Book is complete in one handy volume. It is a great improvement over the former expensive and cumbersome three-volume sets. The new book, running to nearly 700 pages (containing 153 illustrations), is up-to-the-minute in sound and projection practices and equipment, and has the most efficient, quick-finding index yet devised for an information text. It is handy to keep and handy to use.

COMPLETE AND UP-TO-DATE

The new Blue Book does a three-fold job: (1) it gives a valuable and detailed description of the construction, wiring and functioning of every piece of sound and projection apparatus used in a modern projection room. (2) It gives careful instructions on the operation and maintenance of this equipment, and (3) it contains a complete trouble-shooting department, enabling the projectionist to spot and repair sudden breakdowns. It displaces all previous texts because of its completeness and up-to-dateness.

New York, N. Y.

Dear Red:

Your publication, the "Motion Picture Daily," is certainly a dandy.

My observation has led me to the deliberate conclusion that it prints the news red hot off the griddle, accurately and concisely, without fear or favor; being neither biased nor prejudiced, for or against any particular political clan or class; investigating thoroughly, all news items before publication in order to be sure they are accurate in truth and in fact.

There has been such an inclination during the chaotic days of the industry to print "anything" so long as it is a story, that it gives me great pleasure to state to you that I consider your daily publication the best daily on the market today.

Very sincerely yours,

CONFIRMS PARAMOUNT REORGANIZATION PLAN

Judge Coxe Releases Company from Supervision of Court; Plan No Shift in Directors

The plan of reorganization for Paramount Publix Corporation was confirmed last Friday in New York by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe and the company thus was released from court supervision. After a little more than two years Paramount's long drawn out process of financial rehabilitation has come to an end and the few things remaining to be accomplished are, for the most part, internal functions pertaining to the launching of the new Paramount company, which can be undertaken independently of the court.

Stockholders to Meet

The first matter to be disposed of in this way is the immediate calling of a special meeting of stockholders formally to elect the board of 16 directors. Ten days' notice of this meeting is required, which has not yet been given. At the same meeting, election of officers of the new company and the discharge by the court of the trustees in bankruptcy of Paramount—Charles D. Hilles and Eugene W. Leake—will be completed.

No change in the proposed board of 16 directors, already agreed upon, will be made. At Friday's session, Judge Coxe cut short the expected opposition to the board of Morris L. Ernst and Louis M. Levy, attorneys for Paramount bondholders, with the statement that the selection of a board was not regarded as within the court's province and should "remain in the hands of those who own the company".

The 16 proposed directors were agreed upon by various creditor groups some weeks ago. They are Gerald Brooks, Stephen Callaghan, Robert K. Cassatt, H. A. Fortington, William S. Gray, Jr., Duncan G. Harris, John D. Hertz, Percy H. Johnston, Henry R. Luce, Charles A. McCulloch, Maurice Newton, Floyd B. Odlum, Charles E. Richardson, George J. Schaefer, Frank A. Vanderlip and Adolph Zukor.

Joyce Allows Claims

Special Master John E. Joyce submitted a report, prior to confirmation of the reorganization plan, which allowed provisionally claims against Paramount amounting to $50,952,937, which were entitled to vote on acceptance of the plan, Section 77-B of the bankruptcy reorganization statutes requiring that in order for a reorganization plan to be confirmed by the court it must have the assent of two-thirds of the creditors and a majority of the stockholders. Assents to the plan received totaled $34,605,368, or approximately $840,000 more than required. In addition, the assents of 2,068,323 shares of the outstanding 3,221,000 shares of common stock were received.

Judge Coxe denied the petition of William Yoost to intervene in the reorganization proceedings in order to enter objections to the company's proposed new domestic recording license agreement with Electrical Research Products, Inc. The petition was denied on the ground that the court held the Paramount trustees and their counsel competent to act in the best interests of the company in effecting the settlement of Erpi's $1,900,000 claim against Paramount, which embraces the new license agreements.

There was no opposition to the plan itself voiced at Friday's hearing. Approval by the court also included confirmation of the plan of reorganization for Paramount Broadway Corporation, holding company for the Paramount Building and theatre in Times Square.

It is expected that the underwriting of the $6,400,000 of new Paramount stock subscription warrants will be agreed upon by the creditor groups in the near future, with present indications pointing to underwriting by a group to include Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Hayden, Stone & Co., Lehman Bros., Lazard Freres and possibly others. The new securities must then be approved by the Securities Exchange Commission.

MPTOA Names Executive Board; Other Units Meet

Exhibitors who are members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America during 1935-36 will have a voice in the national organization through a new executive committee, announced this week, as follows:

George A. Giles, Cambridge, Mass., representing Albany, Buffalo, New Haven and New York City zones; O. C. Lam, Rome, Ga., representing Atlanta, Charlotte, Dallas, Memphis, New Orleans and Oklahoma City; Jack Miller, Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis and St. Louis; Lewen Pizor, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Philadelphia and Washington; Charles E. Williams of Omaha, representing Denver, DesMoines, Milwaukee and Minneapolis; Morgan A. Walsh of San Francisco, representing Los Angeles, Portland, Ore., Salt Lake, San Francisco and Seattle.

Exhibitor Activities in Field

In Boston, the Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, Allied's New England affiliate, was meeting to discuss potential adverse legislation. William McGlaughlin, A. Bendslev and Edward Stoneman were appointed to the membership committee; Frank Lydon, Mr. Stoneman and Mr. McGlaughlin were named to the grievance committee, and Walter Littlefield, R. B. Rubin and Edward Ansin were designated to clearance and zoning. Also appointed were: Max Levenson, Joseph Levenson and Mr. Lydon, to the legislative committee, and Ralph Sindler, Mr. Ansin and Phillip Smith to the cooperative buying committee.

The Independent Theatres Protective Association, Milwaukee called a statewide meeting of all independents for April 12 to protest a four per cent tax bill on admission grosses. They passed a resolution favoring the Pettengill bill to outlaw block booking, and drafted a plan for raising admissions together with circuits. Abram Myers was named legislative representive at Washington.

The organization was successful in obtaining from Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, an assurance that the company's theatre affiliates will not be permitted to book pictures for a fee purely as a booking combine. The organization had protested against Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, Inc., a Fox subsidiary, which was charged with booking on a percentage or flat fee for some 30 theatres, whereas the circuit has only six properties of its own.

Elections at New Orleans

Opposition against daylight saving, and against exchanges favoring circuits in booking and selling arrangements to the detriment of independents, and a stand in favor of dual bill policies were taken late last week in New Orleans at the convention of the Allied Theatre Owners of Louisiana, held at the Jung Hotel

Henry Lazarus was elected president and treasurer, replacing A. J. Bethancourt as president. H. S. McLeod and Joe Alsina were elected vice-presidents, but Mr. McLeod resigned the next day, due to pressure of business. Harry Schulman was named secretary, while the following were elected to the directorate: Philip Sliman, chairman; R. J. Brunet, A. E. Grosz, Frank Ruffino, and J. A. Dicharry, all of New Orleans, and Joe Barcelona, Baton Rouge; D. L. Suddath, Natchitoches. Plans were drawn for the anti-daylight saving fight, which reaches the legislature next week, and decision was made to carry a campaign to continue duals to the courts if necessary.

Deciding upon a new schedule of bi-weekly meetings, the Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York, designated its president, Harry Brandt, to act for members in negotiating new labor scales with projectionists, and began an analysis of new product.

Mr. Brandt named six new committee chairmen, each to appoint his own committee, as follows: Dave Weinstock, light and power committee; Leon Rosenblatt, code; John Benas, film; Morris Fleischman, entertainment; Louis Meyers, insurance; Bernard Barr, legislation. Mr. Fleischman was named board chairman.

Koplar Organizes Suburban Circuit

Harry Koplar, veteran exhibitor in the St. Louis territory, and one of the original franchise holders of First National, last week resigned from the Fanchon & Marco organization to organize St. Louis Suburban Theatres, Inc., which will start immediate construction of a number of neighborhood and suburban theatres in the St. Louis area.

The Fanchon & Marco unit has been operating the Grand Central, Ambassador, Missouri, St. Louis and Fox theatres in St. Louis for the past 18 months. Mr. Koplar was active in the suburban field before joining the Skouras Brothers several years ago.

Mr. Kaplar is president and general manager of the new company. His brother, Sam Koplar, builder and managing director of the Park Plaza Hotel, will be associated with him. The first of the new theatres will be in the West End and North Grand district. The second will be at the corner of Natural Bridge and Grand avenue. A third on the South Side and a fourth in the Maplewood center are planned.

RUSSIAN PICTURES "NOT SUBVERSIVE"

—MATTY RADIN, RADLEV THEATRE CIRCUIT, INC., NEW YORK CITY

DEFENDS SHOWING OF SOVIET FILMS

To the Editor of the Herald:

I had the pleasure of reading Mr. Kraska's letter published in your paper of the April 6th issue. I presume is is an apology for having shown any Soviet pictures, and at the same time correcting the seating capacity of his theatre. He did, however, state that my group had the only theatres showing Russian films, calling your attention to the fact that only two theatres in New York play all Soviet pictures. He should have mentioned that these two theatres are the Cameo and Acme, the latter theatre boasting of the fact that it is "the only Soviet Kino in America."

Let us be frank; I show Soviet pictures in my theatres not with any apology but for the following reasons:

First: They possess great box office value.

Second: They are artistic and well produced.

Third: They educate.

Fourth: They entertain.

Fifth: They create desire to see more.

Sixth: There is a nefarious and unjust agreement or contract on the part of American producers and distributors which makes it impossible for an independent theatre to show first-run films, or to pick the outstanding and meritorious product and leave the rest on the shelf, commonly known as "block booking."

Again, I do not apologize for showing Soviet product in the main and desire to correct the erroneous impression created by your articles that only the metropolitan press so greatly laud and acclaim the Soviet productions. The Nation, The New Republic, Columbia Spectator, National Board of Review, Literary Digest and so many other college periodicals as well as Filmarte, published in Glasgow, Scotland, coupled with the press in Washington, D. C.; Boston, Massachusetts, Hollywood, California and oh so many newspapers throughout the country sing in harmony the praise of Sennwald, Richard Watts, Jr., Bill Boehnel and Thornton Delehanty, and, lest I forget, Walter Winchell, who called Chapayev "the great Soviet wow."

However, if I'm not taking too much of your time in this letter, which by now has taken the shape of an essay, let me say that I fully agree with Mr. Hearst (quite unusual), Mr. Ramsaye and his entire staff on this premise, that if Soviet pictures directly or indirectly tend to destroy our country, its institutions or ideals, these pictures should not be permitted to be imported to the United States. They should not pass censorship and any exhibitor, producer or distributor or newspaper, including Hearst publications, who aid and abet in the exhibition of these pictures or advertising of same, including periodicals, is equally guilty of a nefarious practice. But if these pictures do not, and I say they do not in any shape, form or manner, directly or indirectly tend to be subversive to our institutions, then let the alarmist, slanderer and reactionary who desires to stifle art, freedom of thought and expression hold his peace.

I thank you for having read this letter and would greatly appreciate and feel highly honored if you could see a way clear to quote from this letter in your publication so that my position may be made clear to the thousands of your readers who have known me in the trade for twenty years.—Matty Radin, Radlev Theatre Circuit, Inc., 130 West 42nd Street, New York, N. Y.

MAINE RISES TO OBJECT

To the Editor of the Herald:

I would like to call your attention to Mr. Brady's article on the American Theatre in the March 30 issue.

He says in part—"Just think, that in almost 30 or 40 states, of 48 states in our Union, that the theatre, the spoken theatre, is finished—in Texas, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Maine, New Hampshire, no longer is the theatre heard."

I must object to Mr. Brady's use of Maine in that list. Perhaps he has not heard of Lakewood, the theatre which brings Broadway to Maine. While it is not open in winter, the Lakewood Theatre is active during the summer and includes among its players such well known names as Thurston Hall, Kate Byron, Owen Davis, Jr., Peg Entwistle, Gladys Hurlbut, William Harrigan, Jean Dixon and many others.

A number of plays, successful on Broadway, have had their premiere at the Lakewood Theatre. Many authors come to Lakewood just for the season's outing.

And Lakewood is not the only theatre in Maine. There are at least two others, equally famous, on the coast.

I don't pretend to know much about theatres of drama, but I do know that Maine does have them and manages to have the "mosta of the besta" in actors, actresses and directors.—Ralph E. Gibson, 33 High Street, Fairfield, Maine.

Mexican Players Form Federation

By JAMES LOCKHART

Mexico City Correspondent

Higher pay and better working conditions for regular players and more "breaks" for extras are the objectives of Mexico's first union of film actors and actresses. A group of these players, regulars and extras, met here and decided to form the union, the Federation of Cinematographic Employees of Mexico, after hearing speeches to the effect that employers have it all their own way. Compensation for regulars and extras who become ill or are injured while working on pictures is also demanded by the Federation.

More foreign technical talent has appeared in Mexico's film producing industry with the arrival as members of the staff of Cinematografica Mexicana, S. A., one of the larger Mexican producers, at its Mexico City headquarters of Lauron (Jack) Draper, cameraman, who worked for several years with Metro in Hollywood and France, and Robert Quigley, formerly assistant art director with RKO, Metro, Universal and Monogram. Both are working on Cinematografica's new picture, "Janitzio," a Mexican folk lore story that is nearing completion.

Al Somerbee Given Testimonial in Boston

A testimonial dinner for Al Somerbee, in honor of his assumption of the presidency of the G. B. Lothrop Company after 35 years of service, was held at the Copley-Plaza Hotel in Boston this week. Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, MPTOA affiliate, of which Mr. Somerbee is a member, sponsored the affair. Joseph Brennan, executive secretary of the exhibitor unit, was in charge of arrangements, assisted by Louis M. Boas and Stanley Sumner, acting as treasurer and secretary, respectively.

With some 500 persons in attendance, Governor Curley, acting on telegraphed authority, made Mr. Sommerbee a Kentucky colonel. Thomas B. Spry was toastmaster. Among the speakers were Thomas H. Buckley, state auditor; E. W. Roemer, building commissioner; John M. Casey, former city censor; Herbert L. McNary, city censor; Theodore A. Glynn, former fire commissioner; Lieutenant-Colonel Paul G. Kirk, head of the state police; Edward P. Barry. Among theatrical men present were E. M. Loew, Victor Morris and John Ford, circuit heads.

House Starts Advertising

The Regent theatre, Kansas City, began using newspaper advertising space last week for the first time in 15 years. Operated by the Dubinsky Brothers since 1920, advertising was considered unnecessary for successful operation, but recently competition has developed for the house.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

STARLETS RAISE WAMPAS BABY STAR PROBLEM
36 UNIVERSAL FEATURES, SAYS FRED MEYER
LEGITIMATE THEATRE ON COAST IS CHEERFUL
TEN FEATURES FINISHED, NINE ARE STARTED

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

In tune with Easter, Paramount "Proteges," Warner "Starlets" and Fox "Debutantes" made their budding appearance this week as Spring struck twelve.

Proteges, Starlets and Debutantes are younger players to be groomed for stardom by their studios.

The Paramount list includes:

Gertrude Michael
Gail Patrick
Katherine DeMille
Wendy Barrie
Grace Bradley
Ben Baker
Kent Taylor
Fred MacMurray
Joe Morrison
Ray Milland
Ann Sheridan

Warner selected the following young players:

Olivia de Haviland
Maxine Doyle
June Martel
Nan Gray
June Grabiner
Dorothy Dare

Fox picked these as the company's "Debutantes":

Rita Cansino
Frances Grant
Rosina Lawrence
Barbara Blane

Publication of these names has raised the question of the standing of Wampas Baby Star selections for the 1935-36 season, and the comparative value of Wampas' and individual studio selection.

Studios say the facilities of their complete organizations can better cope with problems of publicity, makeup, casting and general protection necessary to young folk embarking on a career. In a nutshell, they want complete jurisdiction over their contract players, and want no outside organization, whether by political elections or otherwise, to try to forecast their destiny.

Wampas are said to claim that such lists of "Stars of Tomorrow" should not be publicized under the trademark of any one studio. They contend that the original idea of naming "Baby Stars" was an industry affair, and point to past selections, such as Janet Gaynor, Lois Wilson, Lupe Velez, who were helped on their way to the top by the combined efforts of the entire Wampas membership.

It has not been determined as yet whether the Wampas will make their nominations from freelance players or will receive cooperation from studios other than those named.

It is uncertain whether MGM will submit names. Metro's policy is to school and exploit their young talent in their own way, without unusual fanfare.

Lesser Sees Color Gaining

Sol Lesser, though he is not planning a production in color, has some of his own ideas on the subject. He believes that color sequences soon will be used in all black and white films, to lend dramatic emphasis to stories, and give distinction between the real and the fantastic.

"Interest in color is growing daily in Hollywood," he said. "Most major studios have announced shorts to be made all in the new three-color Technicolor process, and many features are also being considered."

36 Features, Says Fred S. Meyer

Fred S. Meyer, former exhibitor leader in Milwaukee, who has been appointed executive manager of Universal City, in a circular letter to studio employees announced that Universal will make 36 features, the usual number of serials, Buck Jones action melodramas, and short subjects. He said plans are being laid for a new administration building, for relandscaping and refurbishing of the plant.

Stanley Bergerman will act as executive producer in the new alignment. Carl Laemmle, Jr., will function as an independent producer with his own unit. Mr. Meyer will confine his own activities to the business end, with studio and picture budgets his particular field.

Legitimate Theatre Cheerful

The legitimate theatre in Los Angeles is looking up.

Producers of the New York hit, "Three Men on a Horse," in negotiating for the Hollywood rights asked $2,000 advance, and 10 per cent of the gross, which on good plays has hit as high as $7,500. Ready to close, the coast producers were informed the price had skyrocketed, the plans now calling for shipment of part of the New York cast to the Coast, the producer taking his own gamble.

"Tobacco Road," with nine performances a week, is averaging between $10,000 and $11,000. Originally scheduled for two weeks at the Belasco, six weeks are now in prospect.

"Ziegfeld Follies," smartly advertised for "one week only," did $37,000.

"Merrily We Roll Along" closed after a brave try, minus about $6,000.

"As Thousands Cheer" opened lustily to good business.

Nine Pictures Start

Although ten features were transferred to the cutting rooms, production became noticeably active as nine new pictures, several of which have large casts, were put into work.

Four pictures were finished at Warner. "G-Men," directed by William Keighley, has James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak, Robert Armstrong. "Crashing Society" has Guy Kibbee, June Martel, Phil Regan, Edward Everett Horton, Zasu Pitts. Robert Florey directed. Completed also was "In Caliente," with Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien, Edward Everett Horton, Glenda Farrell, Leo Carrillo. Lloyd Bacon directed. "The Girl from 10th Avenue," formerly titled "Men on Her Mind," features Bette Davis, Ian Hunter, John Eldredge, Phillip Reed, Katherine Alexander, Colin Clive, Alison Skipworth, and was directed by Alfred E. Green.

MGM completed two. "Age of Indiscretion," directed by Edward Ludwig, will present Paul Lukas, Madge Evans, May Robson. "The Flame Within" includes Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall, Maureen O'Sullivan.

At Columbia, "Jim Burke's Boy" was completed. Directed by Lambert Hillyer, the cast includes Jack Holt, Florence Rice, Jimmy Butler, Katherine Burke.

Paramount's contribution is "The Glass Key," teaming George Raft and Edward Arnold, directed by Frank Tuttle.

Shooting was finished at Radio on "Nit Wits," a Wheeler and Woolsey, directed by George Stevens.

The one independent picture completed was "Honeymoon Limited," Monogram, with Neil Hamilton, Irene Hervey, Lloyd Hughes. Arthur Lubin directed.

Three Independents Start

Independent producers accounted for three of the nine starting pictures. Beacon Productions got "Anything for a Thrill" underway, with Charles Starrett, Virginia Cherill, Al Herman directing.

Excelsior started "Hell Breaks Loose," directed by Sam Newfield and featuring Guinn Williams, Sally Blane.

"Rustler's Paradise" was started by Criterion Pictures, with Harry Carey.

Fox started "Farmer Takes a Wife," Victor Fleming directing, with Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda.

Warner started "Page Miss Glory," Cosmopolitan Production, starring Marion Davies, supported by Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Mary Astor, with Mervyn LeRoy directing.

At Radio work began on "The Peacemaker," to feature Richard Dix, Louis Calhern, Margot Grahame.

Two pictures started at Universal. In "Diamond Jim" Edward Arnold is playing the character role, and Edward Sutherland directing. "Border Brigands" is a Buck Jones action melodrama.

MGM began work on "Masquerade." Robert Z. Leonard is directing and the cast will feature William Powell, Myrna Loy, Mady Christians, Virginia Bruce, Frank Morgan, Reginald Owen, Henry Travers and Lucille Watson

Majestic Shifts Title

Majestic Pictures has changed the title of "Thunder in the Streets," just completed by Larry Darmour, to "Motive for Murder," because of possible confusion with the title of a United Artists release, "Thunder in the East." United Artists suggested the possibility of confusion.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—A splendid picture, excellent action and will please both adults and children. Most exciting race sequence seen in months. Drew better than average attendance. Played February 17.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunison, Utah. Small town patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—We discarded a newer picture and replaced it with this old one and our judgment was good this time. If you have not played it, pick it up and you will be glad you did. Running time, seven reels. Played March 22-23.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, The Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—Repeat this picture by all means if you have a dull day you want to raise. This played four days on first showing over a year ago; returned for one day and did capacity business. Played return engagement March 19.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Hiawatha, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Better than average, but not up to all the fuss made about it. Drew only average business. Played March 10.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Am informed we were the first in the state to use the Chevrolet factory tieup with the local Chevy dealer in connection with this picture. If you have time before playing it's a dandy. By all means get the special trailer from Columbia. The picture is there and will satisfy. Running time, nine reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebilt, Iowa. General patronage.

First National

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Here's a swell picture with good songs, a dandy cast and plenty of action. Running time, 97 minutes. Played March 3-4.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LIVING ON VELVET: Kay Francis, George Brent, Warren William—What a honey. I would like to have one like this on every program for a while. Perhaps I could lift the old place out of the mire. Running time, 8 reels. Played March 24-26.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

MAYBE IT'S LOVE: Gloria Stuart, Ross Alexander—While this can't be rated any better than a program offering, it does rate as a nice little piece of entertainment. No box office appeal but if you can get them in and not promise too much, it will please most of your patrons. Running time, 62 minutes. Played March 22-23.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MAYBE IT'S LOVE: Gloria Stuart, Ross Alexander—Gloria Stuart can play in any picture for me and Ross Alexander is a coming starlet. The picture was thoroughly enjoyed by our "Pal Night" crowd who are increasing weekly. Running time, 62 minutes. Played March 6-7.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Sprigs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Ann Dvorak, Lyle Talbot—A nice little program picture with plenty of action and the always-present fine supporting cast which can be seen in Warner-First National productions. Running time, 61 minutes. Played March 15-16.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WOMAN IN RED, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—The censors who panned this one must have been trying to earn their money, for I saw nothing objectionable about it. A good, entertaining story, excellent acting, plenty of thrills and a good courtroom scene make up what I call an excellent show. Pleased my patrons. Running time, 68 minutes. Played March 23-24.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—This picture and Universal's "Imitation of Life" are the two best so far this year. "Bright Eyes" is a cleanup at the box office. The best business in many months. Many came back the second night to see it once again. Go after it, boys, you have a great show here, and you will make more money than any picture released in six months. Congratulations, Fox.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Swell! Elegant! Supreme. And, of course, Colossal. And all other adjectives referring thereto. Packed the house two times in one night, here in a hamlet of 500. They even drove fifty miles to see this one. Actually outgrossed Will Rogers, who has been ace box office here for many moons. We advance-advertised this by sending cut postcards. You can't go wrong on this one. Plug it to the limit. Played March 24-25.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Good picture, but not Rogers' best by a long way. It did only 70 per cent of "Judge Priest" business. I just saw Rogers' new picture, "Life Begins At 40" and I want to tell all you fellows that this is the best picture Rogers ever made, outside of "State Fair." When you play "Life Begins at 40" "give it the works."—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—Good western, but it drew slow at box office because George O'Brien new in this town. Played March 30.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—His best picture since "State Fair." You cannot oversell this one, so get out the old dust rag and start dusting off the front row seats. Running time, 80 minutes. Played March 24-25-26.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Hiawatha, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

MYSTERY WOMAN: Mona Barrie, Gilbert Roland—The mystery is why was it made. It is deadly slow, lacks the tempo that should go with a mystery picture. Just another program picture that will not even ripple the surface with your audience. At least it did not with mine.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—The general consensus among our patrons was that Fox must be trying to use Gaynor, finest box-office star among the femmes, and Baxter, a grand actor, to make money for them in a cheap picture. As always, they present swell performances but if Fox wants to keep them at the top of the list, they'll have to do better by them in stories. Played March 17-18.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

UNDER PRESSURE: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—Too much technical stuff and too much McLaglen. The men may like it, but the women will turn thumbs down on it. Deals with sand hogs, so-called tunnel builders. We had a number walk out on it. The usual McLaglen-Lowe opus. They quarrel, they fight—the same old technique since "The Cock-eyed World." Every once in a while Fox tries them out again and that is tough on the exhibitor. Fox does not seem smart enough to know that this eternal bickering and the inevitable battle that always ensues, gets old, especially when these two stars have always done this same thing. The audience can anticipate every sequence in this pair's pictures. It has been done so often the same line.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien, Dorothy Wilson—Unusually well liked. Good cast, direction and photography. Our best weekend business for many moons. Running time, seven reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—George always delivers for us, especially when it is a Zane Grey story or some other equally prominent author such as Harold Bell Wright. This lived up to our expectations but did not draw quite as good as the Zane Greys do. Played March 6-7.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, Jane Darwell—If this is not included among the ten best of the year, there will be a mighty number of fans whose opinions aren't worth much. Here's one picture you can't over-advertise in advance simply because you can't do it justice. A big bouquet to Lasky and the cast, particularly Loretta Young and Jane Darwell. And why doesn't Hollywood boost this Darwell. She's a coming star if there ever was one. Business swell and audience reaction great. Running time, 83 minutes. Played March 13-14.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

BABES IN TOYLAND: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy, Charlotte Henry—This is a fine, entertaining picture; wonderful settings; great acting by all the cast; the stars fine; comedy funny; but it did not draw at this house as a special. Too good for a programmer, and not good enough for a special, is about it for this town. Played March 17-18.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theare, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Robert Young, Stuart Erwin, Leo Carrillo, Betty Furness—Why they released this football picture so close up to the opening of the baseball season I will always wonder. For fall, it is and would have been a natural, but the public is not football-minded now and the picture flopped for that one reason, I think. A little more restraint would have been better all around for the good of the picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—I know of no picture that would be more certain to take a nosedive in this house than one headed by Harding and Montgomery. My public is getting fed up with these collar ad Adonises. Sophisticated society stuff is what we are getting in a lot of pictures and my public is craving some action and a little of the rough and ready in their pictures. Where are the he-men of Hollywood? Gable and Beery and that is the lot. The rest of them are a lot of stuffed shirts and the audiences are getting satiated with them and the box office shows it. I forgot Bickford, who gets nothing to do. The above picture that I am reporting on is dialogued to death and it is "My darling this and my darling that" until it gags the audience and did that thing. This Montgomery is not the fair haired child that Metro thinks he is. He is just a type of which there are about eight others that were shook out of the same sack. The audience almost get up and cheer when we have a picture that has been taken out of doors and has some action.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Una Merkel—A swell picture that was well received by our weekend audience. Should do business in any situation. Running time, 80 minutes. Played March 15-16.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town-general patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery—Swell entertainment—if your patrons enjoy the light, breezy comedy type of picture. The cast is perfect in this and they romp through the whole thing as though they were having the time of their lives. Business not quite up to expectations, but good, and audience reactions were distinctly favorable. Running time, 84 minutes. Played March 17-19.—M. R. Harrington, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Charles Butterworth--Personally, I thought this decidedly weak, but it seemed to please the patrons. Good acting, but too much Charles Butterworth, and I wish some of Billie Burke's enemies would tell her she talks too fast. However, seemed to please the patrons and that is all that is necessary. Running time, 84 minutes. Played March 29-30-31.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Charles Butterworth—

Good picture. Swell pictures. Good stars. Picture liked by everyone. Business fair.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombard, Chester Morris, Zasu Pitts, Leo Carrillo, Nat Pendleton—Why Metro was so dumb as to change this title from "Repeal" to "The Gay Bride" is more than I can tell, but the box office will tell them, or did, that it was a grievous error to put a title like that on this picture of a story that was so widely read in the Saturday Evening Post. I pegged it for a Friday-Saturday picture and so it was, but the damn title killed business. Strange what a title will do to the box office in a small town. We stressed the story in the advertising, but they evidently don't believe in what they see in the papers. Lombard overplayed her role; she emoted too much for the Friday-Saturday crowd.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, Edward Everett Horton—Another artistic failure; beautiful, no doubt, but it is one of those princess and prince things that the producers must put out once in a while. Personally, I think that Novarro is getting through and outside of Laye's voice, she looked too old for the part she took. If prestige will pay your bills, this is your meat, but if you have to use money, then you will be out of luck or at least that is the writer's experience.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—This one is almost too gruesome to be really entertaining, but the realistic Chinese background makes it sufficiently interesting to excuse its other shortcomings. I believe it will give as much satisfaction as the average program picture, but nothing more notwithstanding its quite lavish presentation. Running time, 86 minutes. Played March 29-30.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, The Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—This is one of Garbo's best pictures, but in my town it did not do as much business as a plain program picture. Running time, 89 minutes. Played March 15-16-17.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—By far the best Garbo ever made. A great story, a good cast, and a profit on the run. Bill it for all you are worth. It's a great show.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Drama, comedy, tragedy and romance in the animal kingdom, with Sequoia National Park for a stage, this is the best animal film I ever saw. Pleased old and young alike. Jean Parker and Russell Hardie are very good and don't forget little Harry Lowe, Jr., in a very clever part. Beautiful scenery, a good musical background and animals perfect in their parts make this production one of the very best. Played March 27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WICKED WOMAN: Mady Christians, Charles Bickford—Miss Christians and Charles Bickford certainly make a fine combination and we had lots of favorable comments on this picture. You don't have to apologize for this one. Running time, 74 minutes. Played March 21.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town-general patronage.

Monogram

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Arline Judge, Ray Walker—If you want to freeze your box-office so it will never thaw out, play this three days. It was not accepted here for either good or bad entertainment. They did not come out.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Arline Judge, Ray Walker—Seemed to please, but further than that we say not. We thought the photography was very ordinary and the usually fine supporting cast we are accustomed to seeing, was lacking. Running time, 65 minutes. Played March 13-14.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Jimmy Fay, Arline Judge, Ray Walker—This did pretty well here. A nice program picture with quite a little action, excitement and comedy. Well liked by all. Jimmy Faye will bear watching as a child actor. He's plenty good. However, methinks that some of our patronage was due to the fact that La Temple's name was mentioned in the advertising sent out by the distributor. Played March 3-4.—Chas. Summers and Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

MONEY MEANS NOTHING: Wallace Ford, Gloria Shea—Fair program picture. No drawing power. Wish I hadn't played it. Running time, 63 minutes. Played March 27.—J. T Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne, Verna Hillie—A picture with plenty of action from start to finish. A James Oliver Curwood story with some of the most beautiful scenery we've shown for some time. Played March 8-9.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

WOMEN MUST DRESS: Minna Gombell, Gavin Gordon—Another fine picture from Monogram. Clean and entertaining. Well acted and directed. Good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—This play surprised me. I thought it would be a dead one, but it turned out to be a good play. Sylvia Sidney and Gene Raymond certainly make a great pair. We even had two people faint on this one. Running time, 79 minutes. Played March 9-10.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—A good picture to good business. An exceptionally good story, well acted.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert—Not a drawing card here at all. Production like all Cecil B. DeMille's was great but that does not bring them in. Let's get away from these costume pictures again. Running time, 101 minutes. Played March 10-11.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Henry Wilcoxon, Warren William—Wonderful picture of its kind. But it did not do much business for me. Typical DeMille production, and where this type of picture is liked it will go well, but the small towns do not appreciate the magnitude of this production. Consequently, when we pay top money, it just does not leave a profit.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross—Good music and a dandy cast if they had left Joe Penner out of it. How people can go for his silliness is more than we can tell. However, the young folks seemed to get a big kick out of his antics. Running time, 83 minutes. Played March 24-25.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack—This is the kind the young folks like. Good, light entertainment to good business.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE: Walter Connolly, Paul Lukas—Fair detective play. This play surrounds the life of a criminal and how he is changed by the faith of a good Catholic priest. Running time, 65 minutes. Played March 5-6.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE: Walter Connolly, Paul Lukas, Gertrude Michael—Business normal. Two or three walkouts on this picture, but those who commented were uniformly well pleased. Connolly, as usual, was admirable and Miss Michael is very beautiful as well as capable. Played March 30.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Very good picture and Colbert is natural draw. Played March 8.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Splendid romantic drama with both Claudette and MacMurray doing most pleasing work. Good story, well directed. Fred in role of careless appearing young reporter, who eats popcorn and "watches the world go by," as he sits on a park bench with Claudette. Running time, 80 minutes. Played March 17-18.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Ray Milland—Just fair, some comedy and rather draggy in a lot of spots.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LEMON DROP KID, THE: Lee Tray, Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy—Only fair. Hardly up to average. It's just a picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—Excellent. Everyone spoke very well of it. Did extra at box office. Has everything in it but girls, but what do we care as long as they flock to see it. Running time, 108 minutes. Played March 17-19.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Sir Guy Standing—We have waited for years for this picture. I bought it on every group of Paramount Pictures that has been released in five or six years and at last we get it, and what a picture it is. I call it one of the best of this or any other year. I am sorry to report it did not do much business, in fact just about average, with top film rental, so we lost money. The picture will be listed as one of the ten best. Step on it, boys,

Little Boy: Mommy, what's a Werewolf?
Mama: Your papa says it's a swell title!

you have a great piece of merchandise here. Put it over if you can. I couldn't.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: Burns & Allen, Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—Dandy little picture and will please most all. Lively action and comedy. Don't be afraid of this one. Played March 23.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—This is the kind of a picture my patrons like. It has everything for an evening's entertainment. Paramount has some mighty fine pictures this year.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple, Sir Guy Standing—This picture would have been O. K. if we had played it before "Bright Eyes," but following that picture it just fell flat. Only fair entertainment and a little disappointing to the Shirley Temple fans.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Edward Arnold, Arthur Byron, Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin—Don't think our patrons cared for this. In fact, believe they would have thanked us for a right good out-of-door instead. Mystery angle O. K., but a litle too much pacifist propaganda. Running time, 83 minutes. Played March 15-16.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett—Do not make the mistake I did and sit idly by and let this picture flop. Put the bundling thing over in a big way and sell this picture for all it's worth. It is entertainment and deserves extra billing. Will weaken a little and tell you Joan Bennett was never more beautiful and all others connected with the picture are okay.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer—Played this on a midnight showing with fine results. Plenty of chuckles and the "bundling scene" brought gales of laughter. An awkward situation deftly handled and inoffensively so. But it is no bed-time story for the kiddies. Running time, 72 minutes. Played March 16.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, "Chic" Sale—A very well executed western of a different style. For once there is no mortgage on the farm for the hero to step in and lift off. Very good mystery holding the audience in suspense until the last. "Chic" Sale furnishes plenty of laughs. Running time, 64 minutes. Played March 27-28.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Hiawatha, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—Splendid picture and made to order for women. Best dance numbers and staged more cleverly than any shown here recently. Very good draw. Played March 15.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunison, Utah. Small town patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—Fair love play. Will please the ordinary crowd. Nothing extra. Running time, 65 minutes. Played February 26-27.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—No wonder Cuba got all riled up over this thing. It is a shame to waste good talent and expensive sets with such as this. Cheap story spoils the whole works on this one. Running time, seven reels. Played March 22-23.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—Just an average program. No wonderful acting or dancing. Fair business. Raft is much better in rough pictures. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 12-13.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

SHE LOVES ME NOT: Bing Crosby, Miriam Hopkins, Kitty Carlisle—The best Bing Crosby ever appeared in. It's a fine show and real entertainment and a fair profit at the end of the run.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott—Not as many western fans out as might have been expected. Billy Lee especially pleasing; our audiences particularly attracted by the juvenile actors. Business normal. Played March 16.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—A good picture and cast well; pleased all. Aviation pictures seem to get them in. Played February 22.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant—Story of flyer made blind by accident and his later success with an invention for "blind flying" (radioed direction.) Myrna Loy, also in flying role, does very nice work, and the romantic angle is pleasing. Picture more than satisfied. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 24-25.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

Ella: What's a Werewolf, Betty?

Betty: I dunno, but I'm sure gonna see the picture to find out!

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant—Another grand picture with plenty of action and one of the sweetest of the feminine stars. I wish Paramount had her all the time. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 20-21.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—This play was good but it failed to draw any kind of a crowd. We should have done a landslide business on this play but it failed to click with our patrons. Running time, 79 minutes. Played March 2-3.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—A swell picture! Anne Shirley should go far with such a grand personality. Support by O. P. Heggie and Helen Westley was as fine as could be had. Clean and interesting throughout. Running time, 78 minutes. Played March 22-23.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

AGE OF INNOCENCE: John Boles, Irene Dunne—This is really a very fine picture. But small town exhibitors had better lay off. Just didn't go over here at all. About all it drew was some not exactly printable remarks as to the picture's worth, from our patrons. They just don't go for this type of picture here. Played March 10-11.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin—A swell picture. My patrons like Stu' Erwin and he's really himself in this picture. Good for any spot where they like good wholesome comedy, with the smut done away with. Played March 28th.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town-general patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—A swell comedy and will be liked by your patrons if you can get them in. For us it turned in the poorest box office report in a long time.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—My audience likes a western once or twice each month, and this one pleased them very much. The real facts are we play westerns because they make us money to pay for the clucks we're forced to run, against our better judgment and the wishes of our audience. Played March 23.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town-general patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—From start to finish this picture was great. Above average business. Pleased everyone that saw it and they were not slow in telling me. Pictures of this type are always welcome. Running time, 78 minutes. Played March 8-9-10.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—One of the best railroad pictures we ever played. Certainly a novelty. Action and lots of it. Great scenery. This picture should satisfy any audience. Clean and entertaining. Played March 19-20.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—This is a mighty fine western picture. Stars fine and all the cast. Very interesting story. Years ago would have drawn good business as a special, but now it did not do it, though it is extra good entertainment. The highbrows will not go to see a western (not even a "Covered Wagon"). Played March 24-25.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

CLIVE OF INDIA: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—Another class, not mass, picture. Did not draw any additional business and pleased about 50 per cent of audience. Story is jerky and long drawn out. Not so hot for the sticks. Played March 17.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND: Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Jack Benny, Sydney Howard, Mitzi Green—A fair picture that did the smallest Friday-Saturday business this year. This picture and Universal's "The Good Fairy" hold the record for poor business in 1935.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Anna Sten, Fredric March—Sten is an actress; of that there is no doubt. But, this is the third time we have run this picture. It is Tolstoy's "Resurrection," and Universal made it silent and again in sound, and I ask you if that is not too much of a handicap for any picture. It was. There was no material change in the story, the same except a different cast. The picture was whipped at the box office before it started. Too bad; it was well produced and fine character work on the part of Sten and March.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Universal

CHEATING CHEATERS: Fay Wray, Cesar Romero—Satisfied everyone; business normal. Fay Wray is good, besides being pleasing to the eye, and Cesar Romero should be heard from. Played March 9.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall, Frank Morgan—A good picture of its kind. The cast do very well, but for some reason it did the smallest Sunday-Monday business this year. I think the title is bad, and people just stayed away.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—My choice for the best picture in months. Drew very big for me. Picture pleased everyone. It has that rare quality we all wish for in a picture, the ability to get people out and make movie fans of them. Played March 20.—Russell Anderson,. Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—Here is the best picture released this year. Absolutely the best story, best cast, and best produced picture this year. Out of the ten best, this rates No. 1. Wonderful picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

I'VE BEEN AROUND: Chester Morris, Rochelle Hudson—A very good program picture. Played on a double bill and I guess they were satisfied. I call it good entertainment.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—Although business was not as good as expected, those who attended were well pleased. Miss Barnes is excellent, and Grant Mitchell and Eugene Pallette furnish the comedy. Played March 23.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

RENDEZVOUS AT MIDNIGHT: Ralph Bellamy—A good program picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART: Baby Jane, Mary Astor—A weak story which even the hard work of the cast fails to put over. This new baby star is worth watching. Younger than Shirley Temple and a different personality, she proved the one redeeming feature in this picture, which can only be classified as program, at the best. Running time, 76 minutes. Played March 20-21.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART: Mary Astor, Roger Pryor, Baby Jane—A very good program picture; clean and entertaining, and this Baby Jane is a clever kid. The picture gave good satisfaction. The whole cast very good.—Played March 26-27.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STRANGE WIVES: Roger Pryor, June Clayworth, Esther Ralson, Ralph Forbes—Fair program only. Tale of the young man whose bride brings all her relatives to live at his expense. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 15-16.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

STRANGE WIVES: June Clayworth, Roger Pryor—Both "Rendezvous at Midnight" and "Strange Wives" are good program pictures to play on a double bill. Both clean entertainment, but it takes two of most of the program pictures nowadays to make a show. Very few will stand alone, even with good short subjects. If the idea of building up this double feature thing is what they are all doing, they are getting away with it in a big way.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull—The patrons didn't go to sleep on this one; neither did they have too much to say one way or the other. So this will probably rate fair entertainment. Used as a midnight preview feature. It served the purpose. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 23.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Bros.

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—Paul Muni and Bette Davis deliver a fine performance. A splendid picture for rural trade and a western title to get them in from the farms. Good business getter for midweek or weekend. Played February 20.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

BORDERDOWN: Paul Muni Bette Davis—It's a toss-up as to who does the best job of acting in this one—Muni or Bette Davis. They both turn in swell performances that will long be remembered. Good story, a bit sordid perhaps, but well told, and though the action is conspicuous by its absence, the dialogue and splendid acting do not let the interest down for a single minute. Not for the kiddies. Business good and audience reaction most favorable. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 24-26.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—Good picture, good cast and fair business.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

RIGHT TO LIVE, THE: George Brent, Josephine Hutchinson, Colin Clive, Peggy Wood, Henrietta Crosman—A good feature and seemed to please all, but for some reason the second night slipped. Running time, 66 minutes. Played March 28-29.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Warren William—A good story of political intrigue giving Stanwyck another opportunity for dramatic presentation of a fine role. Warren William also fine. Running time, 64 minutes. Played March 27-28.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Donald Woods—Pleased most of them, but not up to expectations. Drew fair, but not a super super as advertised. Played March 3.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Donald Woods—Very disappointing from every angle. Plot like a dozen other musicals, disguised with costumes and customs of the gay nineties. Music had a sameness that became tiresome. The whole thing could have been cut to advantage, but even so could scarcely rate much better than program class. Business not too good. Audience reaction only fairly favorable. Running time, 87 minutes. Played March 15-16.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Donald Woods, Hugh Herbert, Ned Sparks—A good production for some towns, but not this one. The picture was enjoyed by the few who saw it. When I say few, I mean the smallest attendance that I have ever had for Monday-Tuesday. Running time, 82 minutes. Played March 25-26.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—This pleased about 90 per cent. Picture is slow in spots but there is enough comedy scattered throughout to make it a good show for any day of the week. Rudy does some fine singing as per usual of his pictures. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 31-April 1.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Hiawatha, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

WHITE COCKATOO, THE: Jean Muir, Ricardo Cortez—Ran this while we are having days and days of wind and dust storms, so howling wind and slammings doors are no treat to us. Added to this was a lot of French dialect that could not be understood and a crazy cockatoo that solved a murder mystery by flapping his (or her) wings. Pleased about fifty per cent. Jean Muir is very good. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHITE COCKATOO, THE: Ricardo Cortez—An extra good mystery murder picture. Pleased all and did good at box office. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 20-21.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

I'M A FATHER: Andy Clyde—A very good comedy. Play it. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

MEN IN BLACK: 3 Stooges—Very good comedy. Sure to get laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

Educational

HELLO, SAILORS: Tom Patricola, Buster West—A swell comedy for small town patronage. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY: Will Mahoney—One of the best I have ever run or seen. Running time, 20 minutes.—

Tony: Hey, Joe, whatsa dees Werewolf?

Joe: Everybody wantsa see one, but nobody wantsa be one!

J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

SONG PLUGGERS: Sylvia Froos—Not much to this except for a very catchy song number. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PALOOKA FROM PADUCAH: Buster Keaton—This one will keep the crowds roaring from beginning to finish. Running time, 19 minutes.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Hiawatha, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

HEY, HEY, FEVER: Happy Harmonies Series—The old Fairy Tales come to life in beautiful color. This series by MGM is the best yet. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LIVE GHOSTS: Laurel and Hardy—Got plenty of laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LIVE GHOSTS: Laurel and Hardy—This is no doubt the best laugh of all the Laurel-Hardy comedies. —Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

LOST CHICK, THE: Happy Harmonies Series—Every one of this series seems better than the preceding one. They are bringing out some of the two and three-year-old kiddies and their parents. They are enjoyed as much as the feature. Running time, 1 reel. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

OPENED BY MISTAKE: Todd-Kelly—Another Todd-Kelly scream, or series of screams. This team sure gets the laughs. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHRIMPS FOR A DAY: Our Gang—A very good comedy that pleased the Family Night patrons, especially the kiddies. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TAKING CARE OF BABY: Oddities—Just why this one-reeler was produced I'm sure none of the MGM organization has been able to figure out, and the goofy guy that figured it out surely must be nuts. We canned it after the first run. Running time, 1 reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town—general patronage.

Paramount

NERVE OF SOME WOMEN, THE: Paramount Varieties—The daredevils of the fair sex doing their stuff for the camera. Interesting and thrilling. Running time, 11 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SPORTLIGHTS: Here's another short which we never hesitate on using. How in the world they continue to show so many interesting things is more than I can tell. But still they come and no let-up on quality.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BANDITS AND BALLADS: Ruth Etting—Everyone seemed to enjoy this two-reeler. Lots of good comedy in it and Ruth Etting's singing is really good. Everyone came out humming "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree." Running time, 2 reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town—general patronage.

DIONNE QUINTUPLETS: This short surprised us very much by drawing extra business and who is there who has seen this subject and not fallen for those big, big eyes? We thought this a swell subject.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BIG BAD WOLF: Silly Symphonies—The "Three Little Pigs" back again with the villainous wolf pursuing "Little Red Riding Hood" and being foiled. Great. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

OH WHAT A BUSINESS: Universal comedies—Another of those dandy vaudeville offerings presented a little differently. Running time, 19 minutes—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Dowager: What is this Werewolf picture you're announcing?

X. Ibitor: From all the questions, it looks like it's going to be a box office miracle!

WANTS MORE ONE-REEL VAUDEVILLE COMEDIES

"We are getting too many cartoon comedies and not enough vaudeville act comedies of the type of Paramount's Headliners," writes Herman J. Brown of the Majestic and Adelaide theatres at Nampa, Idaho.

"Independent producers should make them and make them good. We get travel, screen song and cartoon stuff and that ends it and it is not enough. It is stupid and reflects the natural tendency of the producer to be unoriginal, imitative. The shorts we get are good, but the single reels are in a three way channel."

STRANGER THAN FICTION: No. 6—Up to the usual good standard of these varied presentations. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Vitaphone

BROADWAY BREVITIES: Now these generally are very good. Our people like these and we plan on playing every one of them. Some are exceptionally fine.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CORN ON THE COP: Harry Gribbon—Won't lay 'em in the aisles, but is as good as average. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GOOD MORNING, EVE: Leon Errol—Beautiful color, some good music and spectacular pageantry make this a very entertaining short. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HIS FIRST FLAME: Shemp Howard, Daphne Pollard—Good. Will get laughs on Saturday. Running time, 2 reels.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

HONEYMOON HOTEL: Merrie Melodies—colored cartoon greatly enjoyed by our patrons. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. R. Harringon, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MELODY MASTERS: Never get a bad one of these. They are always good. Of course some are better than others but we'll take our chance on any of them any old time.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SAMOAN MEMORIES: E. M. Newman Travel Talks—Nothing particularly outstanding in this travel reel. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SHEMP HOWARD COMEDIES: What's the matter with our patrons? Aren't they like other people? Seems that elsewhere this star's comedies are going over, but they certainly do not here. And what's wrong with most all comedies? They generally seem to be terrible with few exceptions.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SONGS THAT LIVE: Gus Edwards—Just fair. Running time, 1 reel.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

THE RAVEN

Universal

Although suggested by the poem of the same title, this production emphatically is not a picturization of any part of or any of the personalities dealt with in Edgar Allen Poe's classic. Featuring a pair of actors whose reputations have been made by their participation in similarly atmosphered pictures, it is essentially a super-terrorizer. It is the story of a madman whose inhuman tendencies are made more morbid by his continual study of the weird significance of the intent of the Poe poem. He desires to possess a beautiful girl, lures her, her sweetheart, father and a man more beast than human to his home, and perpetrates one more fiendish act after another, in the end to fall victim to his devilish plot.

Production values being all that anyone could expect in their ability to transform blood into ice water, the screen play, which permits endless opportunity for nerve tensing reactions, is by David Boehm and Jim Tully, whose grim realistic stories of tramp life have made him famous. Direction is by Louis Friedlander, making his first effort with horror material.

The two players featured in the production's most grim and even grisly situations are Karloff and Bela Lugosi, whose names are synonymous with entertainment of this character. Romantic interest is centered upon Irene Ware, recently seen in "Night Life of the Gods" and "Rendezvous at Midnight," and Lester Matthews, a newcoming young British actor, who before this picture is released will have been in "Werewolf of London." The story's human interest centers about Samuel Hinds, now in "Private Worlds," in the role of the girl's father. Inex Courtney, Spencer Charters, Ian Wolfe, Maidel Turner and Arthur Hoyt complete the cast.

HOT NEWS

Columbia

This story seeks to capture the drama, romance, excitement, fun and thrill of two newspaper cameramen whose job it is to photograph the hot news for which the world is waiting. Covering fires, accidents, floods, police activities and shipwrecks, in line of duty, the story is given a triangular love interest when both men fall in love with the same girl. Then, pursuing a familiar vein with the consequent comedy, action, near tragedy, menace and suspense with the hero bravely rising to an occasion previously muffed, it concludes in the expected fashion.

With the exciting character of its story content of potential interest to thrill action fans, plus a romantic angle that should be appealing to women, the principal selling quality seems to be the production itself which is readily understood by the meaning read into the title. Yet the cast offers one name, Richard Cromwell, which because of the success of his most recent picture, "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," should have a stimulating box office effect. The trio who are associated with him in most of the action are Wallace Ford, in the role of resourceful boss cameraman; Billie Seward, seen in many Columbia pictures, as the girl over whom both lose their hearts and eventually split up, and Jack LaRue, the gangster whom Cromwell once unwittingly saved from police clutches only to score a job saving scoop when he photographs him as Ford is busy filming the arrival of a visiting king. Others in the picture are Wesley Barry, Ernie Adams, Mark Lawrence, George Offerman, Gene Morgan, Stanley Taylor and Charles Wilson.

The director is Lambert Hillyer, maker of "Against the Law," "Behind the Evidence" and many other dramatic action excitement pictures.

DINKY

Warner

Not by far is Jackie Cooper this production's sole showmanship asset. An emotion-stirring story of a boy and his mother, who are innocent victims of cruel dishonesty, it seems to be full of the qualities in theme content and production values that appeal equally to old and young and both sexes.

The picture is based on a story by John Fante, Frank Fenton and Samuel Gilson Browne. Screen play is by Harry Sauber, author of "Happiness Ahead." It is being directed by D. Ross Lederman.

Principal locales are a boys' military academy and an orphan asylum. First Jackie appears as "first boy." His mother, a victim of her employer's treachery, is sent to prison and the news is kept from Jackie. The school snob sees that he learns about it and as other parents are demanding that this contaminating influence be removed from their children, Jackie runs away. Found and returned to an adjacent orphan asylum, Jackie organizes a football team whose objective game is with the cadets. The story is highlighted by a fire in the orphanage from which Jackie is rescued by the cadet snob. The game is on, and the perpetrator of the crime for which Jackie's mother was jailed having been arrested, she arrives in time to see her son score the winning points in the final minutes of play.

The cast, which has Mary Astor as the mother and Roger Pryor as her friend, features many children, including Betty Jean Haney, Jimmy Butler, George Ernest, Edith Fellows, Sidney Miller, Richard Quine and Frank Gernardi. Adults are Henry Armetta, Jenry O'Neill, Florence Fair, Joseph Crehan, Addison Richards and James Burke.

Selling that convinces patrons that the production is not essentially a juvenile attraction naturally is in order. The latent material is undoubtedly there. The right kind of showmanship should bring it out.

FRISCO LADY

Universal

Murder and mystery in San Francisco's Chinatown, always a reliable lure for the thrill-shudder fans, are the principal ingredients of this production, which also tells a unique romantic story.

The story is an original by L. G. Blochman, author of "Chinatown Squad," "Secret of the Chateau" and "Bombay Mail," the two last named produced by Universal. The screen play is by Dore Schary, a specialist in mystery drama and romance, as indicated by association with "Blue Moon Murder," "Murder in the Clouds" and "Red Hot Tires." Direction is by Murray Roth, recently credited with "Million Dollar Ransom" and "Don't Bet on Love."

Principals in the cast are also most familiarly known for their connection with similarly atmosphered pictures. In the leads, Valerie Hobson, soon to be seen in "Werewolf of London," "Bride of Frankenstein" and featured in "Mystery of Edwin Drood" and "Rendezvous at Midnight," is teamed with Lyle Talbot, last seen in "It Happened in New York" and previously in "Return of the Terror," "Murder in the Clouds" and "Dragon Murder Case."

Featured supports include Hugh O'Connell, Andy Devine, last seen in "Hold 'Em, Yale," following his appearances in "Hell in the Heavens" and "The President Vanishes"; and Henry Armetta. Others prominent in the story's action are Leslie Fenton, Clay Clement and E. Alyn (formerly Fred Warren).

With a lot of money and a girl's honor and reputation at stake, the story focuses attention on the age-old conflict of the Orient and the Occident. Playing the subject for all it's worth in the line of trick mystery and tense drama, it brings an ex-cop into the case not only to protect the girl and win her affections, but to solve the mystery of the many killings to assure his reinstatement on the San Francisco police force.

THE HEALER

Monogram

In story content this is the dramatic, romantic story of a doctor whose miraculous healing powers made him beloved of those he cured as well as all who knew him. It's a simple story, told in straightforward fashion which builds strong romantic conflict embellished with drama and thrill that make use of the most potent entertainment elements.

The cast in itself, when recent performances are noted, is a decided box office asset. Ralph Bellamy, now in "The Wedding Night" and soon to be seen in "Air Fury," plays the leading role. Opposite him is Karen Morley, who because of her outstanding work in the forthcoming "Black Fury" with Paul Muni, is sure to add measurably to her many followers. Third most important character is Judith Allen, who, luring Bellamy away from the plain folk and Miss Morley, is the motivating force which builds the story's tense drama. One other character, Mickey Rooney, seen in a role of a crippled child whom Bellamy had partially cured is also a focal character about whom the story's thrill centers when Bellamy rescues him from the pretentious sanitarium as it is destroyed by fire and the one who leads Bellamy back to the girl he loves and the place where he was most appreciated. Others are Robert McWade, Bruce Warren, J. Farrell MacDonald and Vessie Farrell.

The story is adapted from the published novel by Robert Herrick with screen play by James Knox Millen and John Goodrich. Direction is by Reginald Barker, maker of "Moonstone" and the current "Women Must Dress."

Although the title and atmospheric content might lead one to believe that there is a direct similarity between this and story of the "Miracle Man" type such is not the case. Actually it is the picturization of an idyllic world of faith and trust blasted when the lure of money, fame beyond dreams and infatuation for a girl beyond his station leads to disillusionment that only a dramatic restoration to the old order can cause to live again.

THE CUTTING ROOM

ALIAS MARY DOW

Universal

The type of story, plus the value of the personnel chosen to interpret it, should be conducive of much worthwhile showmanship. While not at all new, the plot and the manner in which it is developed make use of elements that have proved their entertainment and exploitation value. It is the dramatic and romantic story of a waitress dancehall girl who for a fee, but with little sincerity, yet to save a mother's life, poses as the matured personage of a child once kidnaped. A strange girl in a strange world, with a continual yearning to return to the atmosphere from which she came, she encounters many dramatic and romantic experiences that not only lead her to true love, but also permit her to capture the kidnaper of the girl she is supposed to be.

The original story is by Forrest Halsey and William A. Johnston. The screen play is by Gladys Unger, Rose Franken and Arthur Caesar, a trio which, individually, have accounted for several recent popular successes. Direction is by Kurt Neuman, recent maker of "Let's Talk It Over" and "Half a Sinner"; also "Wake Up and Dream."

Sally Eilers, last seen in "Carnival," and again in a hard, brittle characteristic role, has the lead. She has two lovers; in the early waitress day, Chick Chandler, and later in the most sophisticated times, Ray Milland, one of the "The Gilded Lily" trio. Roles of the father and mother are assumed by Henry O'Neill, seen in many Warner pictures, and Katherine Alexander. Supporting players include Clarence Muse, Lola Lane, Corbit Morris and Phyllis Crane.

The title naturally suggesting a criminal-court drama, care should be taken that advance publicity completely identifies the production's character. Exploitation explanatory of the elements with which it deals, properly applied, should be able to do this.

HOORAY FOR LOVE

Radio

Comedy romance, music and dancing, both as an essential part of the story and in specialty form, are the materials of which this production is being made. It is based on a story by Marc Lachman with screen play by Lawrence Hazard, author of "I'll Love You Always," and Ray Harris, who participated in the preparation of "Laddie," "We're Rich Again," "Enchanted April" and "Many Happy Returns." Music and lyrics are by Dorothy Fields and James McHugh. Direction is by Walter Lang, who handled "The Mighty Barnum" and "Carnival."

Against a theatre atmosphere it tells a story of a young fellow who wants to be a producer and also star the girl who is the apple of his eye. As all the trials and tribulations of one so inclined are graphically narrated, the future builds to a situation wherein his prospective father-in-law is forced to marry an old dowager in order to get finances wherewith the show may be produced and the sustaining love affair brought to the proper climax.

Ann Sothern and Gene Raymond, last in "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round," are teamed in the leads, with Pert Kelton in a characteristic showgirl role. A newcomer, the veteran stage actor, Thurston Hall, known to many for his participation in radio broadcasts, particularly with Eddie Cantor, is making his screen debut. This group with Georgia Cane, carry the straight story thread, which is highlighted by both Raymond and Miss Sothern in several song numbers against spectacular production and personnel backgrounds. Specialties feature Bill Robinson, the famous colored dancer seen with Shirley Temple in "The Little Colonel," Jeni LeGon, another noted colored dancer, and Maria Gambarelli, ballerina dancer, who also will be seen for the first time in a feature picture.

THE G-MEN

Warner

The terse title readily identifies this production's character. Based on the most sensational of the last few years' newspaper headlines, it is a story of the deeds, danger and heroism of the agents of the U. S. Department of Justice in the new war on crime. Blending fact with fiction, the theme of the story follows one of the most notorious "public enemy" cases.

The cast is made up entirely of known screen personalities. James Cagney, who broke into pictures originally in gangster roles, will be seen as the epitome of all G-men. As the story closely follows the fact matter of one of the most vicious cases with which the Government has had to deal, even going into the locales where most of its dramatic action took place, roles that were actualities a few months ago, are played by Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak, Robert Armstrong, Barton MacLane, Lloyd Nolan, William Harrigan, Russell Hopton, Edward Pawley, Noel Madison, Monte Blue, Regis Toomey, Harold Huber, Addison Richards and Raymond Hatton.

A topical story, the production is adapted from a story by Gregory Rogers, with screen play by Seton I. Miller. The director, William Keighley, recently completed "The Right to Live," and has handled many topically based productions, among them "The Match King."

CRASHING SOCIETY

Warner

Three established comedians are featured in this "society" comedy romance. The yarn has a unique fun premise which completely eliminates any atmosphere of sophistication. It deals with the mix-ups that ensue when a bungling business manager seeks to revive a busted aristocratic family's fortunes by marrying their destinities to the "daughter" of a pair of bucolic hayshaking social climbers. Comedy motivation is given a semi-dramatic twist in the climax for a rather tense but nevertheless all's-well-that-ends-well finale.

In the story, Guy Kibbee and Zasu Pitts are teamed in the leads with Zasu as the ambitious climber into the elite set and Kibbee the husband willing to spend any part of his oodles of millions that she may achieve her ambition. In the role of their daughter, but actually a waitress to whom Kibbee has taken a shine, will be seen June Martel, one of Warner's newer young players. Edward Everett Horton is the go-between for the Kibbee family and the parents of Ross Alexander, about whom the legitimate if somewhat artificially stimulated romance is spun. Gordon Westcott again will be seen in one of those difficult parts to which he seems doomed, as the snake-in-the-grass secret husband of Miss Martel whose efforts to do a little blackmailing cause him to be shown up as a bigamist. For a specialty feature, Judy Canova, hill-billy singer, soon to be seen in "Caliente," will be seen.

The production is based on a play, "Social Pirates," by Ralph Spence, the screen play is by Edward Kaufman, who did the screen plays on "Romance in Manhattan" and "Gay Divorcee," and had a hand in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," and by Sy Bartlett, associated with many Warner productions. Ben Markson contributes added dialogue. Direction is by Robert Florey.

HIGH FIDELITY

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Corpus Christi, Texas

Dear Herald:

From the window of the rooms we occupy we can look right out on the bay and every time the wind comes off the bay it smells like a gas main had busted, and yet they tell us how healthy it is here in Corpus Christi. Well, maybe it is.

Corpus Christi is a town of something like fifty thousand people, including about ten thousand fishermen and families who live along the water front in anything from shacks built of drygoods boxes to trailer houses, and from there on up but mostly down. The business section is very much like any other. They have chain stores, chain garages, chain oil stations, chain theatres, (except that one chain owns all the theatres), chain hotels and the finest and longest dock we ever saw.

Keeping the Pot Boiling

But speaking of docks, there may be longer ones but we'll bet there are no better ones. This one is about a mile and a half long and the large ocean-going boats can dock here in 35 feet of water, and some of the largest freight boats that run the ocean come here for cargoes. One boat is loading cotton and lead ore to go to Italy, which makes us wonder if they are getting ready to fight over there, if so, let 'em fight. A Japanese boat recently loaded with a cargo of scrapiron and cotton and lead to go to Japan, which might indicate that they were going to shoot a few Russians, all of which indicates to us that about the whole world is soon to declare an open season on everybody else. Yesterday there was a boat came in here loaded with bananas, and today, and in fact right now, we are eating one that cost as high as ten cents a dozen under the NRA and we'll betcha that the boy who raised that banana lives on scenery, seasoned with ocean water, and the transportation company had huckleberry pie for dinner.

Yesterday they had a big parade of beautiful floats of all kinds and descriptions and the R & R theatre circuit had one that ought to have taken first prize. It was a dandy and the chief architect of the float was Mr. Thames, manager of the Palace theatre, and Mr. Thames, by the way, is a man who helped put Corpus Christi and Texas on the map, although they made the map before Mr. Thames left Little Rock, Arkansas, where he was helping make theatrical history, and, while he didn't help make the map, yet he was the man who discovered and named the Thames river at London, England.

We saw Mr. Thames but didn't get to see Mr. Collins, (the man who operates the Ritz theatre), who is another reason why Corpus Christi is such a fine city. We are sorry we didn't get to see Mr. Collins for we were told that he was one of the shining lights of the town, but we did get to visit Miss Bernice Blanton, the brunette who tickles the keys of Mr. Collins' typewriter, and Miss Hurene Cobb, the lady who doesn't claim to be a relative of Ty Cobb but who handles the books of the R & R theatres in Corpus and who wouldn't dispute us when we say that she is better looking than the balance of the whole Cobb family put together. The R & R boys know how to pick good looking office help, we can see that right now, but, gee whiz, what kind of young men do they have in Corpus Christi anyhow?

Before we leave the subject we would like to advise you that another boat has just come into the harbor here from the Pacific Northwest loaded with potatoes. They tell us that the boat came through the Panama Canal and one fellow said it carried a cargo of three hundred carloads of potatoes. They talk in big figures down here. Guess they must have heard the president's Warm Springs speech when he said "Big figures don't mean a thing to me."

San Antonio, Texas

We got here a little too late to see the boys who are furnishing South Texas with amusement in the afternoons, and last night we didn't feel well enough to fight the traffic downtown, and listen Elmer, when you fight the traffic in San Antonio in the early evening you will know that you have had a busy half hour (and maybe two hours,) and we didn't feel equal to the task last night.

In the morning we are heading for the north land and probably snow banks and sand storms, but somehow we feel that the North is calling us, and when the North calls us we have to go, and besides that we want to get back where our "home doctor" can look us over and change the medicine. However, we don't feel that any change is necessary.

Prefers the Monkeys

San Antonio gets its name from the Mexican language and we are told that better than 40 per cent of the population is Mexican, notwithstanding that the Alamo is located right in the heart of the city. According to Uncle Sam's latest guess the town has a population of 231,000 people, the most of whom are under the NRA and we trust are doing well, and we presume they are. If you are going from Winnipeg, Canada, to Mexico City (a distance of some 3,000 odd miles) get on highway No. 81 and stick to it and you will come right through our country and on down to San Antonio, but you better stop and look our country over, although this is a pretty good country down here. There are two things we didn't hear in San Antonio, a jazz orchestra and a love song crooner, but maybe the town has them, since all well regulated towns seem to have, and maybe they were entertaining the public while we were out in Breckenridge park watching the monkeys, but then somehow we'd sooner watch the monkeys pick fleas than to hear crooners anyhow.

We came through the country yesterday from Corpus Christi that was originally civilized by Mr. Taft, brother of the ex-president, and if you are looking for a beautiful country that has been planted to corn, cotton, carrots, beets, onions, cabbage, spinach and other crops you should see this country, which is as level as a billiard-table as far as you can look, and then you can't see the edge of it. The town of Taft is located about in the center of this country and the work is mostly done by Mexicans instead of American labor. Mexican children from 10 to 18 years old work in the vegetable fields instead of going to school. Anyhow we are going to go home and let Texas run her own business, and we are going to stop right here and give you a rest. How's that?

Films Used in Damage Action in Massachusetts

The Haverhill Fruit and Produce Company, defendant in a damage action brought by 10-year old Daniel Nadreau and his father, Joseph C. Nadreau, of Haverhill, resorted to motion pictures, in superior civil court at Lawrence, Mass., to prove that the boy was able to climb and play like other boys.

Daniel was struck by one of the fruit company's trucks three years ago, which is the basis of the action, the boy claiming he has been unable to participate in sports to the same extent as before the accident. The pictures, taken by Joseph Shaw of Medford, amateur, were supposed to have shown the boy actively playing. Daniel said that the boy in the picture was his older brother.

New Children's Magazine To Have Child's Film Guide

The Children's Magazine, new publication which will appear initially in September, will include a children's motion picture guide among its features. The section will contain pictures and articles on child stars having an appeal to children between seven and 16. Hal Kafka is managing editor, J. G. Tanenbaum editor, and Charlotte Carter associate editor. David L. Herman is publisher.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 261.—(A) Name the general requirements necessary for good sound reproduction in theatre auditoriums. (B) Name the reasons why constant care should be exercised to prevent the projector mechanism oil from getting on the sound equipment. (C) Explain, in detail, why projectors, in the reproduction of sound pictures, should never be run at any speed other than the standard 90 feet per minute, regardless of any desire to speed up or shorten the show.

Answer to Question No. 255

Bluebook School Question No. 255 was: (A) What is the practical effect if the picture is too small for the distance of the screen from the rear seats?

There were several excellent answers, but I believe we may rightly select that of L. Hutch and D. Goldberg as best. These gentlemen say:

"We regard this question as covering a subject of much dispute among authorities. As we see it, if the picture be too small the question immediately arises as to just what 'too small' may mean. Mr. Richardson, the Bluebook School has taught us to study projection, or at least to make a very serious attempt to do so. To us it seems the 'too small' question may be answered in more than one way. In this our manager, who has been kind enough to join with us in Bluebook School study, is in agreement. What is perhaps the best answer, everything considered, is that the picture dimensions should be those that best serve the entire auditorium, and that of course depends a lot upon the depth and width of the seating space.

"We would say that within reasonable limits, a too-small picture (viewed as too small from the viewpoint of seating space) makes the seats down in front more valuable and those at the rear less desirable. A small picture, of course, requires less light for a given brilliancy of illumination, therefore is less costly to project. It has a flatter field, hence may be assumed to be sharper in focus over its entire area. Faults in the film or in projection, being less magnified, will be less visible, unless brilliancy of screen image be increased proportional to the reduction in size. As a general thing, objects will be more nearly of life size, the advantage of which may be viewed differently by different individuals. We, however, are of the opinion that your published position in the matter is correct.

"Another point is that if the maximum viewing distance (screen to rear seats) be long, the picture brilliancy must be so high that it will be hard on the eyes of those seated down front, or even in the front half of the auditorium."

RESUMING THE BLUEBOOK SCHOOL

With the first of a new series of questions, the "Bluebook School" is resumed in this department. Many of the new series of questions have been especially prepared by a group of leading sound engineers. Others will be selected by Mr. Richardson himself. Not only are the "regular students" urged to continue, but projectionists who have not previously participated in the "school," and also managers, are invited to submit answers to the new group of questions. For the next several issues, the answers presented will be to the final questions in the previous series, and with each of these answers a question in the new series will be published.

I compliment these gentlemen on their answer.

Messrs. C. Rau and S. Evans say: "Minimum picture width should be twelve feet for the smallest auditorium, and 20 feet for the largest, save in exceptional cases where shape of seating space may make necessary some little increase. Generally speaking, the 18-foot picture is of sufficient size for 1,200 to 2,400 seats. For theatres of less size the picture size may be reduced until for 500 or less seats (except the auditorium be very deep) a twelve-foot or even in some cases a ten-foot picture, may best serve the needs."

D. Danielson expresses his views as follows.

"I believe there is a tendency toward larger pictures. Of late there has been considerable inclination to use the magnascopic effect on important scenes, which is, of course, a temporary increase in picture dimensions.

"However, increase in picture dimensions has the effect of decreasing the value of front seats. On the other hand it increases the value of those seats at the rear, especially in the event that the picture detail be small.

"In future we will be getting away from the wider theatres and will probably have a minimum of 30 feet from the screen to first row of seats. There seems to be some question as to just what the maximum width of screen image should be. At times it appears as though the room available for placement of a screen is the limiting factor. I believe the final maximum will be limited only by seating space, finances, projection equipment, personal opinion, harmony of picture size with theatre decorations, etc. It is no easy matter to place any maximum upon screen image size." Concerning which, had we sufficient space, I would have a little argument with Brother Danielson on that point.

Marcus Calls for Industry "Champions" to Defend It

Louis Marcus, present mayor of Salt Lake, a Paramount theatre partner and a pioneer distributor and exhibitor in that section, presented the case of "The Motion Picture and Public Opinion," last week, to the Extension Division of the University of Utah. He told the students that the motion picture is, and has been practically since its inception, in need of champions rather than anything else, "especially if we consider only the viewpoint of a comparatively few people who, with the best of intention and the best of thought, believe themselves to be the moral censors of the particular community in which they live."

"The motion picture has done much in its attempt to try to reach a great number of people with the idea of educating," observed Mayor Marcus. He compared the six to eight million people reached every day by the motion picture to the 42,000,000 mass circulation of the daily newspapers, and 27,000,000 radio families. He estimated that the average feature cost between $200,000 and $250,000.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE INDUSTRY MUST LEAD

As concerns showmanship, it becomes more apparent that national advertisers, department stores, et al, are taking quite a bit of the play from the theatre. Sales promotion angles of one kind or another, contest and club ideas follow with amazing rapidity over the radio, in newspaper and magazine advertising. Gags and slants peculiar to showbusiness have been revamped by smart merchandisers and put into action.

There are of course many spots where such activities are accepted wisely by showmen sufficiently adept in turning the tide of these promotions into theatre channels. But situations of this kind are not in the majority.

Not so long ago, the motion picture was definitely identified with unquestioned leadership in developing hard-hitting selling ideas. That this leadership must remain ours if profitable grosses are to continue was emphasized by Martin Quigley who, speaking before the Show of Showmanship Motion Picture Club Forum, said in part:

". . . Despite anything of any other character that might be done anywhere else, throughout the length of the industry, there is nothing to suggest continued progress and development unless there is continued progress and development in methods of promotion and exploitation."

ALSO A FIRST

It so happened that Ed Douglas received official recognition from the Borough President of Brooklyn a few days before he was a guest at the Motion Picture Club to again accept his Quigley February Bronze from Grover Whalen. Reports of both ceremonies were carried in last week's pages and this is jotted down to forestall a lifting of eyebrows from readers inclined to wonder at the magic (?) of Ed being in both places at one time—or in one issue, should we say?

Fuzzy Knight is of course the first manager to win two Awards, but if Ed is record-minded he may claim to be the first to receive two presentations on one plaque.

What the snapper is, we can't say, but Bill Hendricks sends newspaper clippings announcing the appointment of ole Colonel Howard Waugh to the position of Bishop of the Memphis Diocese, in the Liberal Church of Denver. Informed of Waugh's ascension, Mort Blumenstock made whatever comment the occasion calls for by saying:

"It must be a very liberal Liberal church."

CAN'T EXPECT MIRACLES

No matter how strongly the cause of exploitation may be championed, over-enthusiasm cannot be looked for from managers handicapped by the "opry house" type of operation. The world's greatest publicity fireball is only a wet match if his theatre is lacking physically.

The Spring and Summer number of Better Theatres, edited by our amiable confrere, George Schutz, sets forth in detail a mass of helpful information, authoritative articles and careful indexing to aid those whose situations require such servicing.

Exploitation cannot be expected to accomplish miracles of rejuvenation for theatres in desperate need of face-lifting and general modernizing. Ballyhoo not backed by comfort and convenience is just so much noise.

SAD COMMENTARY

". . . If it were not for the fact that thousands of theatre managers the country over, and myself included, were afraid of losing their jobs, these managers would write you, for publication, letters telling you how much they appreciate the splendid stand you are taking in our behalf. The articles recently published on the editorial page of the Round Table Club are splendid, and I know that theatre managers are appreciative of your efforts in their behalf, but what can they do to show their appreciation, when any article or letter under any manager's signature, especially on the subject under discussion would result in dismissal from service, on some trumped-up charge. . . . "

The above is an extract from a recently received letter and represents a condition the industry can hardly view without concern. 'Tis a sad commentary indeed upon the present state of morale in the theatre.

Lynn Open-Letters Editor for "Sequoia"

Lynn Smith, Crystal Theatre, Gonzales, Texas, for "Sequoia" wrote in form of open letter to the editor of daily stating that with all the ado about better motion pictures, he wanted to take that means of informing the Gonzales public of the "finest, most educational and thrilling film this theatre has shown." Editor gave letter four column break, donating space.

Lynn constructed entire atmospheric front with box-office and sides covered with artificial moss on which was hung antler's heads, skins, and other appropriate fixin's.

Tipped-In Stills Offered to Readers

What no doubt might be effected in similar situations is the star-newspaper tie-up promoted by Lionel H. Wasson, publicity chief, Central States Theatres who put the stunt on in Ames, Iowa, as follows:

Paper runs a "Personality of the Week" four column box on drama page with copy on star booked at the local house in the chain. Stuff is called—keyhole portrait—and contains a lot of low down on star's likes, dislikes, background and other newsy reading.

The topper on the gag is an actual eight by ten colored glossy still of that star which is tipped into the box, the photo being included in every copy of the paper. Paper advertises the slant as a tieup with the MGM studios and asks readers to send along names of other stars they would like to see publicised in the same manner.

Sounds like a smart variation of the newspaper stuffer slant and should do well where it can be put across. It's novel and Lionel states there is quite a demand for the different photos used weekly.

Longenbach Stages Fashion Show for "Women Must Dress"

The College Theatre in Bethlehem, Pa., for "Women Must Dress," was the scene of great activity when Hal Longenbach decided to put on a fashion show. Special runway was built as well as revolving pedestals to set off models. Department store tied in supplying latest models for the show and devoting windows and ads to the fashions with theatre plugs.

Other merchants contributed footwear and accessories, with beauty salon holding exhibitions of hairdressing, using models as subjects. Aaron Klein, director of the Civic Little Theatre rehearsed the girls in posture, carriage and gestures in order to make the show as professional as possible.

Honor Composer At "Marietta" Opening

Standout music tieups were made by Billy Ferguson on opening of MGM's "Naughty Marietta" at New York Capitol, one being a "Composers Night" wherein many musicmen attended in a body to honor memory of Victor Herbert who wrote the score for original production. Nelson Eddy, male lead, gave three recitals in advance of date and these were used to steam up interest among opera patrons and musical organizations. Announcements were sent to Blue Book names, superintendents and principals of New York schools.

New slant was claimed for theatre front with novelty neon sign (see photo) across entrance above box office. Letters had chromium steel background reflecting red neons in front, giving double sign effect. At side was seven foot head of MacDonald with animation supplied by winking eye.

Advance type of sky-reflector was used for bally, machine shooting beam claimed to be six million candle power. Apparatus projected on solid backgrounds and clouds and shoots color beam, takes up 70 feet of space and moves under its own power.

Press book request standees were distributed at night clubs. These contain names of all songs in the score and proved helpful. Radio stations also cooperated as this is said to be anniversary of "Marietta." Complete scores were furnished leading community singing groups in return for plug.

MacDonald exploitation stills suitable for show shoe windows, florists, and piano stores were circulated, and another neat hookin involved pet stores that tied in copy on live canaries to voice of the star.

DeHaven Posts "Devil Dog" Ad on City Hall

Manager Director Milo DeHaven, Chakeres Theatres, Inc., Greenville, Ohio, on "Devil Dogs" had girl in aviator's outfit distribute Old Gold samples in offices, homes, stores and on street corners. Quaker Oats streamers were planted in grocery stores in Wilmington, Ohio, also, as date was being played in both towns, and heralds with theatre imprint were distributed.

DeHaven promoted a fine bit of publicity when he obtained permission to mount a 24-sheet on the City Hall, which he reports was the first time these towns allowed theatrical advertising to be thus displayed.

Quigley Silver Plaque Goes to Kentucky Warnerite; Illinois Fox Manager Finishes Second

The Blue Grass State now joins up with the winners, as Manager William J. Reilly of Warners' Kentucky, in Henderson, snaps across the tape in the March competitions just a long whisker ahead of the field with his campaign on Fox's "Little Colonel."

And only just a bit behind in a rush comes Fred C. Souttar, skipper of Fox's Midwest Lincoln Theatre, in Belleville, Ill., with a very brave showing on MGM's "David Copperfield," which nets him the second prize, the Quigley Bronze.

Both these showmen are first-time winners, and Souttar has the further distinction of being the first theatreman from his circuit to enter the charmed circle.

Grouped in a bunch are the First Mention showmen, three taking down these honors as follows: Bill Barron, Warners' Kenyon, Pittsburgh, on "Devil Dogs"; Morris Rosenthal, Loew's Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn., on "Whole Town's Talking," and Al Weiss, Loew's Oriental, Brooklyn, New York, on U. A.'s "Clive of India." Rosy did his usual bangup job, while both Barron and Weiss take bows for their work in subsequent-run situations.

Selection of the Honorable Mentions, if anything, proved to be as difficult as picking the top finishers. The same situation as obtained in the past month repeated itself with the result that 19 entries are so labeled. Incidentally, it was the intention of the judges to confine the Honorables in 1935 to a smaller number, but with the quality and quantity of campaigns the picking becomes tougher each month.

Interesting is the fact that 10 of the March winners click for the first time and gratifying is the number of new circuits and independents represented among the "Honorables." Readers will note the inclusion in column to left of names of pictures and this addition will be carried from now on so that entrants will know what features brought in the honors. The suggestion is "Fuzzy" Knight's. A-MIKE.

Fields Prints Special "Devil Dogs" Tabloid

Jules Fields, De Witt, Bayonne, N. J., got out a four-page De Witt Movie News devoted entirely to "Devil Dogs" and distributed throughout city and outlying districts. Entire staff was dressed in marine uniforms with imprinted chest bands and accompanying photo shows airplane skeleton and 24-sheet pasted to floor.

Jules also constructed art set piece featuring stars in picture and obtained full window on tieup with toy airplane manufacturer. Local bus line carried bumper cards and taxis helped advertise the picture.

De Vilbiss Entertains "Old Girl" Original

The highlight of Temple De Vilbiss' campaign on "Grand Old Girl" at the Colorado Theatre, Pueblo, was the invitation extended to Laura Bales, resident of Parsons, Kan., former Pueblo school teacher and the inspiration for the scenario, to attend the opening of the picture. Delegation met Miss Bales at station with battery of photographers and story with pictures broke dailies.

Another stunt pulled was tieup with Western Union for wire service set up in lobby (see photo) Temple reports that two hundred messages were sent the first afternoon.

SEES NEED FOR "ART" THEATRE

Metropolitan Round Tabler Looks Forward to Special Theatres and Shows for 'Intelligent Minority'

by MILTON H. CHAMBERLAIN

Plaza Theatre, New York City

PLAYS SECOND RUNS AT HIGHER SCALE

Possibly one of the world's most unique theatres is the Plaza, in the heart of New York's Park Avenue sector. For here is a house that, if anything, caters to a special class of patronage, plays second and third runs with an admission scale about twice as high as surrounding houses.

Milt Chamberlain has managed the present and former Plaza Theatres almost continuously since 1918 and has worked out a number of proven slants to attract what he terms the "intelligent majority". He believes there is a growing potential audience in many situations composed of those who do not ordinarily attend the movies. —A-MIKE

Is there a market for "intelligent" movie entertainment? I think so; not a vast one, perhaps, but in every community in America a considerable and influential element—the people who "don't go to the movies much"—who can be appealed to with profit by alert and intelligent managers.

Admittedly, the mass turnover in entertainment merchandising for some time to come will be found in mass audiences, mass product, mass selling. Eventually, if the motion picture is to achieve its full possibilities as a form of expression, on art form, if you will, I look forward to special theatres in every town and community, and special pictures to show in them, which will appeal primarily to educated and cultured people, just as in the publishing field we have tabloids and New York Timeses, pulp magazines and Atlantic Monthlies.

Meanwhile there is a growing potential audience—not necessarily the intelligentsia but the "intelligent minority"—which is not now being reached for one reason or another but which can be "sold" on movie entertainment with product now available if they are properly approached.

How to reach these people and make them friends and patrons of your theatre?

Intelligence and Good Taste Required

Primarily, it seems to me, intelligence and good taste are required to start with before a theatre can hope to atract intelligent audiences. You can't turn an ex-shipping clerk loose with the title of manager and expect him to win the respect, and the business, of thinking people. By training and education he must be able to meet such people on their own intellectual level, go into their homes and clubs and meetings and discuss the things they are discussing. All about his theatre, in his advertising, in what goes on his screen, must be evidence of his own ability to distinguish between cheapness and worth—in short, good taste.

Direct Mail Productive

In advertising especially is it important to use intelligence to interest intelligent people. We have found direct mail advertising most effective, but it has to be good. Cheap literature, such as a chain-store grocery manager might stuff mail-boxes with will not do; nor will the blatant and extravagant claims of press sheet superlatives. A simple, well written letter or circular or program which gives actual information, time-schedules included, is appreciated by your fastidious movie prospect. We frequently send out special invitations with a neatly printed announcement describing the theatre's advantages to lists of new arrivals at the better hotels and new lessees in nearby apartment houses. A self-addressed post card requesting that their names be placed on our permanent mailing list is enclosed for their convenience. The weekly mailing list, incidentally, totals about 7,000 names.

Of even greater importance than advertising of course, is the show itself. Naturally, a theatre catering to sophisticated audiences week in and week out has to make a selective buy of pictures, both features and shorts and then choose with utmost care. Some forty or fifty pictures a year which achieve wide general popularity will be equally appealing to the most intelligent of audiences, such as "It Happened One Night," "David Harum" and "One Night of Love." With good luck, there may be an equal number of pictures that do not mean much elsewhere but which can be played to advantage in the better houses—pictures like "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," "Crime Without Passion" and most George Arliss films. For the rest, the manager of your "intelligent" movie house has to pick from special sources—an occasional foreign picture including English importations which do not achieve general distribution; and, of great value to houses of this kind, or houses which would go after this special business, revivals of past successes. It is a pity more exchanges do not maintain prints of outstanding hits of other years. Those that can be had invariably do well both at the box office and in winning the good will of special audiences. We have revived such classics as "The Guardsman," "Trouble In Paradise," "Outward Bound" and "Reunion in Vienna" time and again with success. In short, the better cartoons are appreciated as well as good travel subjects, sport reels, screen souvenirs and good musical novelties.

Extra Attentions Expected

A sphere of activity of great importance, it seems to me, for any theatre that would attempt to appeal to the better element in its community or neighborhood is active cooperation with better film groups, parent-teachers organizations, literary societies and churches. Just the names of such organizations suggest dozens of ways in which the theatre can make its influence felt and respected among the substantial, intelligent people whose patronage it would attract.

Finally, as to the theatre itself, its appointments and the manner in which it is conducted. Fastidious audiences expect more conveniences, more service than others and the house that would win them over permanently, or even bring them in occasionally, has to provide them. Hearing aids for the deaf, tea and coffee service in the lounge with a trained hostess to supervise it, the finest projection and sound facilities available, personal attention to their comfort and enjoyment while in the theatre, are a few of the special things we try to supply. Vulgarity and cheapness, whether in the manners of an employee or in an offensive news item or in decoration and furnishings, have to be studiously avoided. Just as in advertising intelligent people resent being oversold through newspaper copy in poor taste or a trailer which promises too much, so they are apt to be offended by garish display and over-decoration in the theatre itself.

I look upon the few so-called art theatres in various metropolitan centers throughout the country and such specialized operations as our own here in New York as pioneers in the specialized theatre of to-morrow; it seems to me that managers who, by fortune of suitable location, are today in a position to build good will among special audiences can already profit by doing so, and certainly will in the not distant future.

Some Copperfields From Afield

Before Herman Bamberger left the Paramount in North Adams, Mass., for Springfield, he engineered a contest for "David Copperfield" in which 10 merchants cooperated; each store featured photo of star in "Copperfield" and entrants were asked to supply correct list of names of the stars, giving the parts played by each and name of store in which each photo had been seen. Tickets were awarded to winners.

Other stunts were "Copperfield" calling cards left at homes, book marks in libraries and accompanying photo shows lobby display used two weeks in advance.

In Atlanta, Ga.

Eddie Melniker at the Loew's Grand for his street bally had a 10-foot book placed on truck with life-size cutout spotted around and driven about town; another bally was old-fashioned tallyho driven by four ponies with theatre banners on sides. Blotters were picture cuts, distributed in schools and offices.

In Nashville, Tenn.

Ray Jones at Loew's Vendome contacted paper on classified ad tieup, offering tickets to anyone finding and returning any lost articles advertised in daily. Department store came through with ads for millinery section using cuts of stars in picture with demure bonnets and copy tying in with picture comparing chapeaux styles then and now.

And in Omaha

At the World Theatre where Charlie Schlaifer, advertising director, and Ted Emerson, manager, secured cooperation of public libraries for all librarians to plug picture and book. Displays were placed in circulating library windows, special dramatization of script was given over radio and special screening was held for selected list.

THE STAR GUESSING CONTEST

Warner Zone Chief Details Ways and Means of Planting Profitable Contest Put On in His Theatres

by RALPH E. CRABILL

Warner Jamestown District Manager

What has proved to be a positive business builder during the two weeks of its run, is the star guessing contest via the screen as put on in his zone by Ralph Crabill, Warner Theatres Jamestown district manager, who was kind enough to forward the details. Crabill's procedure has had to do in this case with the theatres in his district, but no doubt interested members will be able to adopt the stunt successfully to their individual situations.

Organizing the Contest

From the trailer material which may be promoted or secured at little cost, as the case may be, two single reels are made up, each consisting of six stars appearing in coming pictures who are presented by picture or by voice alone. These reels are run for two weeks, one each week.

Patrons are presented with identification blanks which are to be filled in as each star appears in the reel. Lights are to be brought up so that patrons may see to write. Patrons retain answers until conclusion of contest and prizes are given for correctness and novelty in form of submission of answers. Judges should be local prominents and prizes announced and awarded on a special night at the theatre.

Prizes and Other Tieups

These awards are of course to be promoted from local merchants who are to receive screen and other credits. Crabill suggests that as the merchants obtain three weeks screen credits—a week in advance and the two weeks of the contest—that the prizes be worth while and that at least ten be promoted.

Newspaper cooperation is also in line, with daily participating in credits in exchange for publicity explaining contest and carrying long lists of stars from which those in contest are selected.

Street ballys, lobby displays and prominent windows are also helpful and contest should be underlined in advance and currently in all heralds, window cards, ones and threes, in addition to newspaper ads. Trailers plugging the stunt in advance and during the first week are also suggested.

About the Actual Reels

The success of the stunt in the theatre depends upon how well the operators handle the guessing reels and Crabill stresses the importance of going over each reel carefully with operator. On the voice reproduction guesses, lights must be doused before shot appears so that identification cannot be made. Operators should also familiarize themselves with ends of voice shots so that they can pick up light immediately on next frame.

If time permits, the completed reels should be run several times in advance so that operator is entirely familiar with each change. Careless projection will ruin the contest completely.

Other Suggestions

Prizes should be carried in newspaper advertising as well as all other copy. Cash of course is preferable but desirable merchandise is also acceptable, and these latter should be displayed in lobby, tastefully presented. Where more than one theatre is concerned, perhaps Grand Prizes can be awarded. In this case, the best answers from each house are entered for the main awards.

Managers can build up the contest by making brief talks from the stage in advance and at various lunch club and other local organization meetings.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

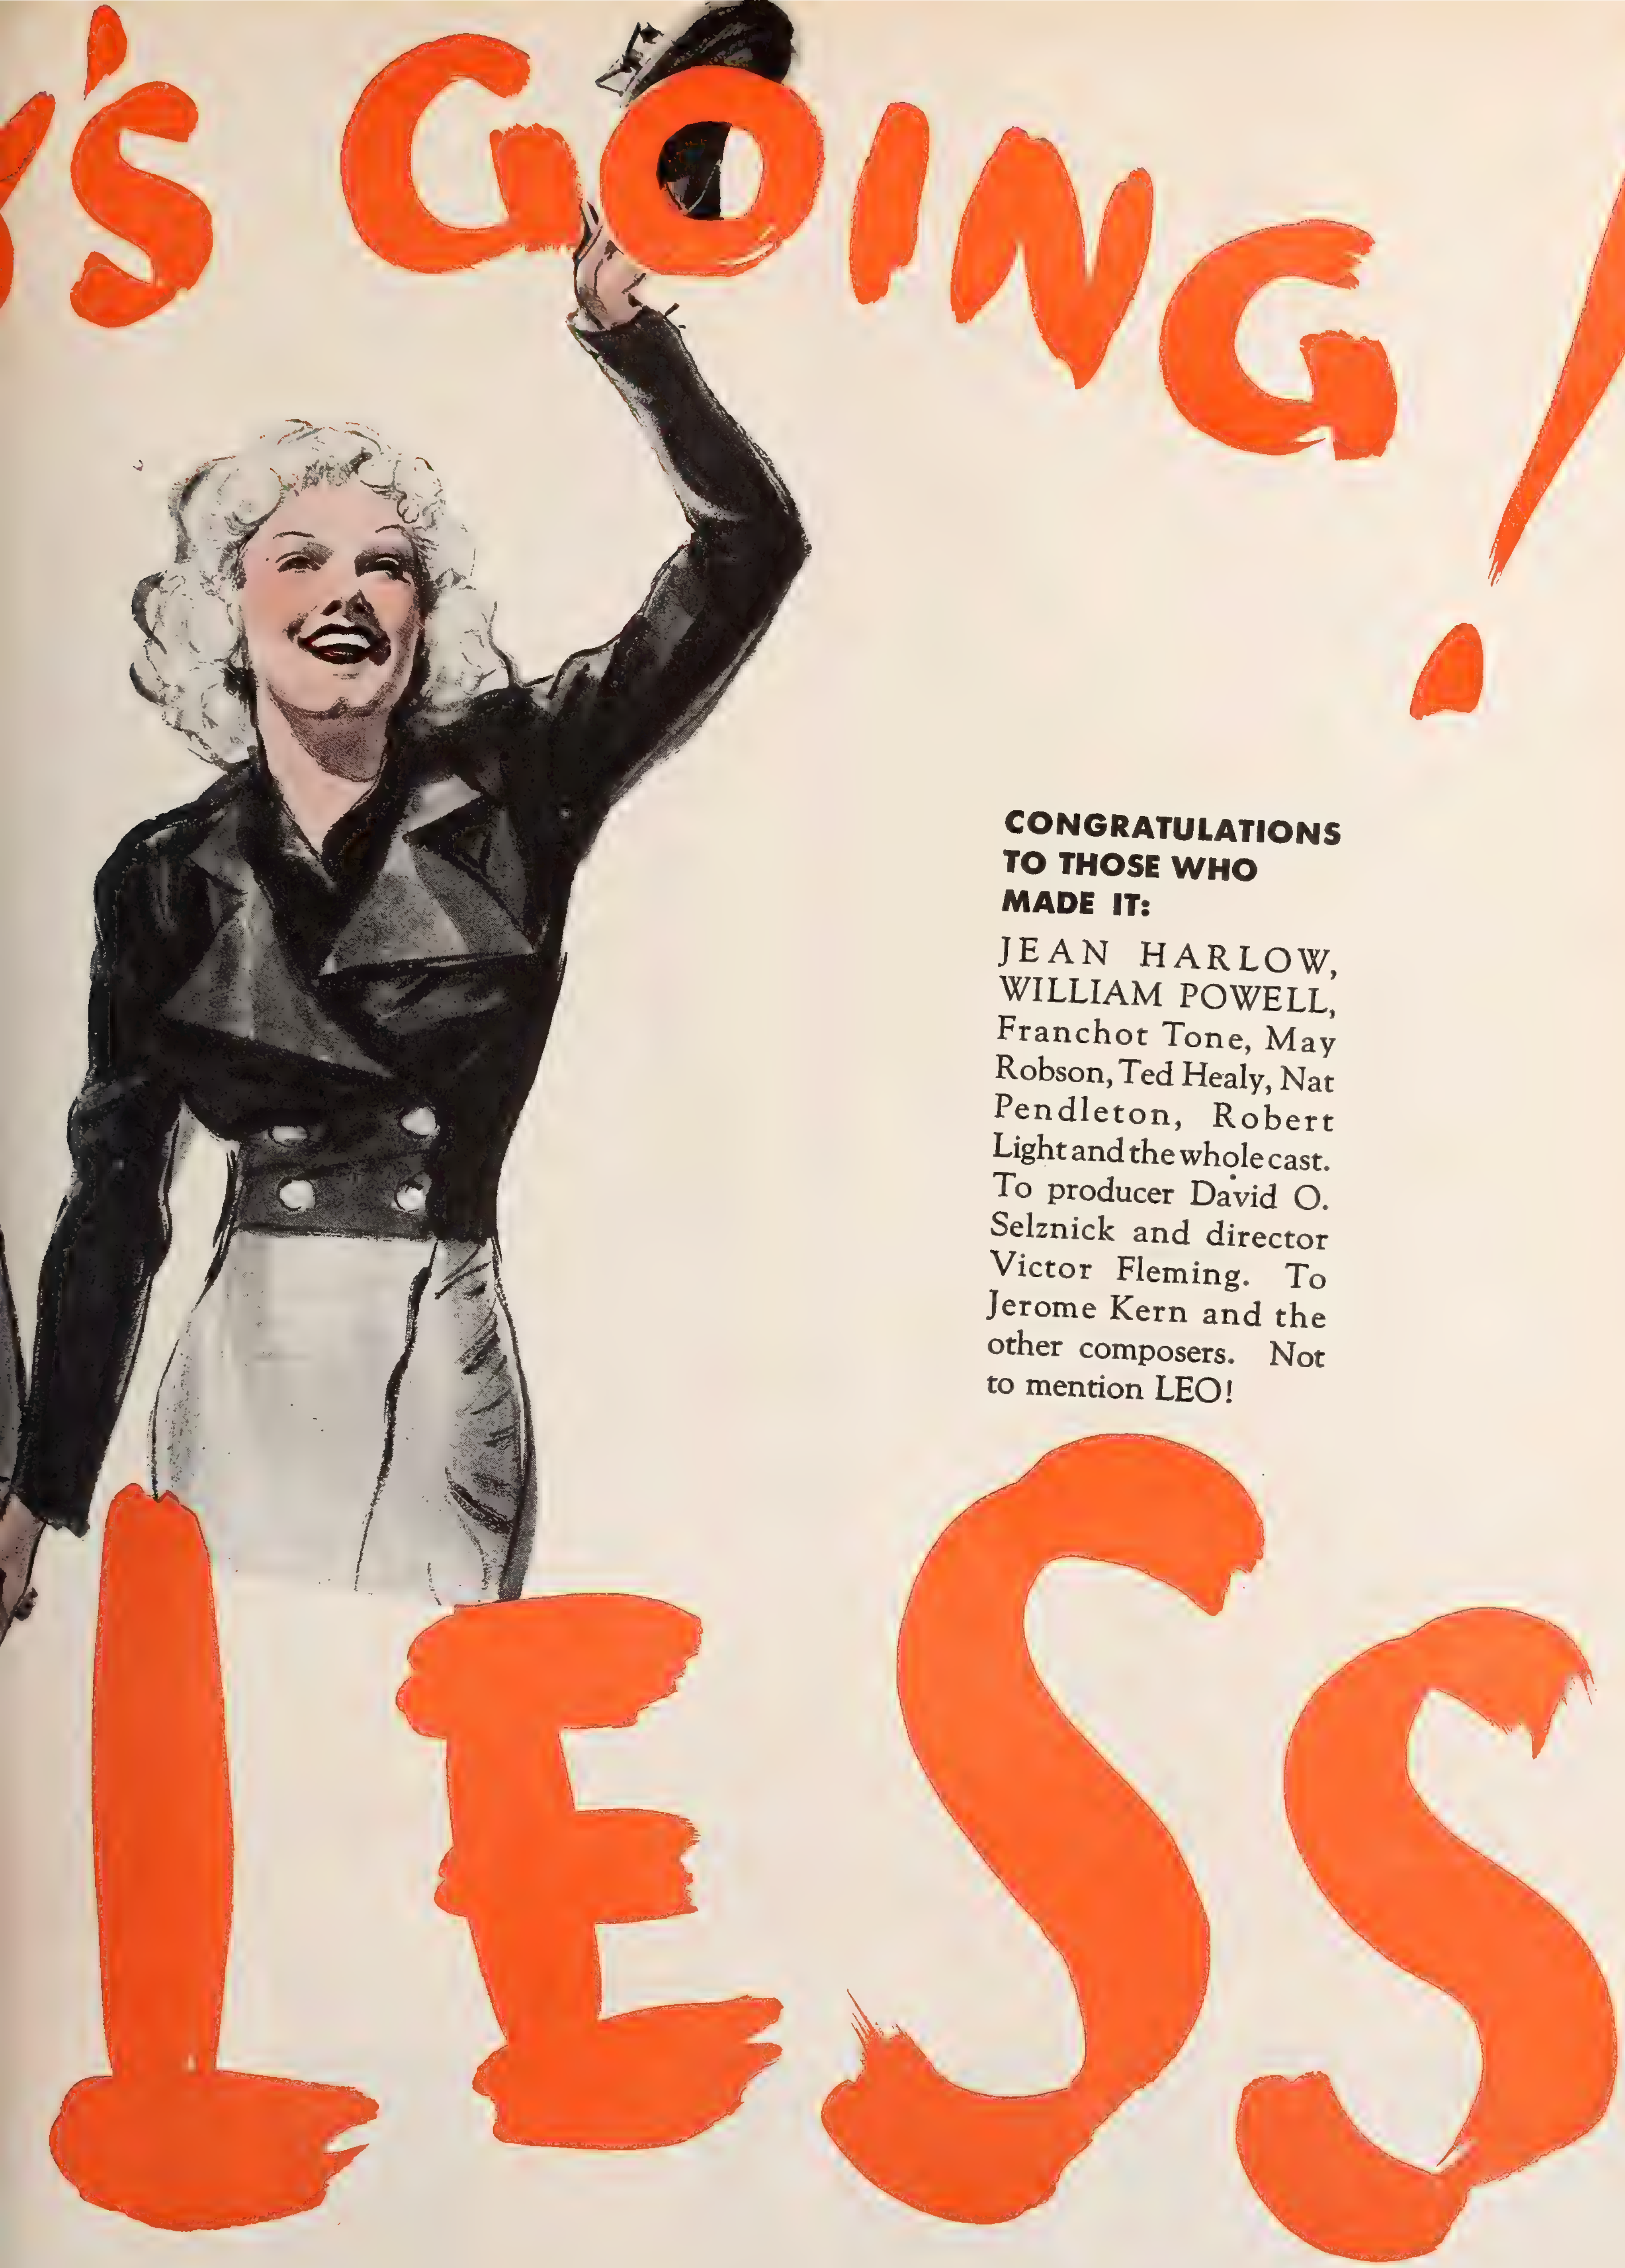
8,000 24-sheets covering 1500 cities nationwide. Above is the new flash poster replacing the one which has already been on the boards for a solid month! Never before such advance selling for a big show!



CONGRATULATIONS TO THOSE WHO MADE IT:

JEAN HARLOW, WILLIAM POWELL, Franchot Tone, May Robson, Ted Healy, Nat Pendleton, Robert Light and the whole cast. To producer David O. Selznick and director Victor Fleming. To Jerome Kern and the other composers. Not to mention LEO!

—And now let's turn to PAGE 35

"A thunderbolt of film courage! Muni's supreme achievement on the talking screen. Characterization stamps its star as a peer in his class. It will be Michael Curtiz's claim to a directorial award when they're being handed out late in 1935. An excellent, unforgettable production—a valiant effort of the Warner Brothers. Countless laughs as well as breathless gasps. The film leads up to a sensational, smashing climax. The concluding reel is so amazing and breath-taking that it just must be viewed to reap its deep, powerful significance. 'Black Fury' is really one of the greatest motion pictures ever made!" . . . . Irene Thirer in the New York Post.

"Grand, smashing melodrama. Writers and adaptors have handled a controversial theme with rare diplomacy, and the actors have given them magnificent assistance. Probably Paul Muni's most impressive performance. More effective than 'I Am a Fugitive.'" — Eileen Creelman in the New York Sun.

"The film is riotous with action. It tells an entirely plausible story. Muni's performance is dazzling in its force and power. He assumes the character of the 'bohunk' miner, engaging, simple and heroic, with a skill unmatched by any actor in recent films. He makes the difficulties of Jan exciting. A spectacular cast supports him, with Karen Morley, J. Carroll Naish, John Qualen, Vince Barnett, William Gargan and Sarah Haden. It is a rousing, he-man and action-packed melodrama that is excellently produced and brilliantly acted." . . . Bland Johaneson in the N. Y. Daily Mirror.

"Takes its place as one of Hollywood's most arresting screen achievements. Paul Muni's characterization surpasses even his memorable portrayal in 'I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang.' The Warner Bros. Studios which, more than any other, are alive to topical subjects, have made of it an important and courageous document. 'Black Fury' is bound to become one of the most widely discussed productions in years. It is not to be missed." — Rose Pelswick in N. Y. Eve. Journal.

"Melodrama at its best. By far the most courageous document that Hollywood has produced. It lashes forth with the fury of a wounded animal at bay. A melodrama so tense and thrilling that it may leave you slightly blanched around the gills but also blissfully happy with excitement. Good performances also by Karen Morley, Vince Barnett and William Gargan. Michael Curtiz's direction is the best he has ever done — thoughtful, lucid and vivid." —Wm. Boehnel in N. Y. World-Tel.

"Dynamic film. Muni has set an acting standard that should win every Academy award. A rousing, exciting melodrama. Screen entertainment that will stir you as you never had been stirred. Striking film. By all means see this picture." . . . . Al Sherman in the New York Morning Telegraph.

The Greatest of All Warner Bros.' Trail-Blazers!—Br

MUNI in "BL

A First Nat

"Paul Muni acts strong, daring role. Punch-packed as a power-house, a dynamo of drama. 'Black Fury' is earthy, elemental, brutally primitive; it is possessed of strength, suspense and daring seldom encountered in motion pictures and distinguished by what must be adjudged its star's most vital characterization. The tale that is told on the screen of the Strand will leave you gasping and quivering with the shock of its dynamite. Paul Muni undergoes a complete transformation. Here he assumes a character totally unlike any before portrayed in his extensive career. Terrifically suspenseful scenes match anything the screen has seen for sheer tense drama. The direction of Michael Curtiz imparts still further power to a Titan-strong tale." . . . . Regina Crewe in New York American.

"One of the most thrilling climaxes the screen has offered in months. 'Black Fury' easily surpasses anything that has come out of Hollywood in the last two years." . . Martin Dickstein in Brooklyn Eagle.

"Hollywood makes a trenchant contribution to the sociological drama in 'Black Fury.' Magnificently performed by Paul Muni. Warner Brothers exhibited almost a reckless air of courage in producing the picture at all. Mr. Muni is altogether superb in all the varied scenes which describe Joe Radek's climb out of peasant obscurity to the forefront of a crisis which he never understands. In the smaller roles there are a score of splendid characterizations. Both in Michael Curtiz's direction and in the screen play by Abem Finkel and Carl Erickson, the photoplay achieves a melodramatic vigor and an air of cumulative power which is so rare in the Hollywood cinema." . . . . Andre Sennwald in the New York Times.

"'Fury' may well be considered one of the greatest dramatic pictures of this or any other year. Different drama, without any excusing or qualifying concessions, it rips, tears and crashes in honest, straight from the shoulder style into the powerful story it tells. . . . Finely and authentically produced." . . . G. McCarthy in M. P. Herald.

"Has a breathless suspense that keeps the audience on the edge of their seats. Michael Curtiz moves his story along with the precision of a sledge hammer at work, and gets the maximum dramatic effect. He has hand-picked a staff that gives him and Muni splendid support." . . . . New York Daily News.

REPUBLIC IS BORN

A NEW national distributor steps forth—Republic Pictures Corporation—born of independent beginnings as every big company in the industry has been, and with personnel abundantly experienced. For instance, there's Mr. W. Ray Johnston, young enough to make us forget that he began in the days of the late and able Mr. Charles Hite at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle when the Mutual Program was forming to give competition to the august General Film Company. General was a crystallization of patent proprietors and infringing "independent" competitors brought together in peace under blanket license. Mutual, like contemporary Universal, was a coalition of a new crop of independents. The "independent" path has been the way into and upward in the world of the motion picture ever since. It is a process of attainment by energetic merit.

THE $5,000 LOOK

ONCE each week a young man from an agent's office goes to the paymaster's office of Paramount studios in Hollywood and picks up Miss Mae West's salary check for $5,000. He then proceeds to hunt up Miss West and let her look at the check. After she has regaled her eyes upon it he continues on his errand to deposit it in the bank to her credit. It seems that she has no doubt about the matter, but she just wants to see it—every time.

THREE POINT LANDINGS

MR. LEO BULGAKOV, formerly of the Moscow Art Theatre, has made the thrilling discovery that everything in Hollywood, seemingly, including the camera, the microphone stand, the dollies, the lights and the monitor booth, all stand on three legs. It is, to be sure, simple geometric principle, because four legs call for a perfectly level floor for stability, while three always make contact. After a while Mr. Bulgakov will maybe learn that the triangle, the three point suspension as it were, is the most stable element of drama, in Hollywood and elsewhere.

GADGET of THE WEEK—From Detroit come tidings that the scientists have evolved an electrical device, amplifying brain impulses, which will trace the curve of the intensity of a man's thinking processes. Another older method, and more positive, is to deal him a straight flush open in the middle.

NEWSREEL SCALES

THE newsreel cameramen are in negotiation, not to say controversy, about, mainly, hours. There have been issues and debates on the subject for some years. Generally speaking the newsreel cameramen have never been much more regimented than the newspaper reporters, with whom they are blood brothers, plus several hundred pounds of equipment.

Without respect to or consideration of the points at issue, it may be observed that the real value of the newsreel man can never be measured on any scale of hours and pay.

The fact is that the actual value of the newsreel cameraman is to be measured almost exactly by how much fun he gets out of the job. That, to be sure, does not argue that he is to be paid off in fun, only. The best newsreel men are underpaid at the scale and others are overpaid. Unions and scales came into the newsreel business with the coming of sound, brought in chiefly through the agency of the organized electrical workers accompanying the recording mechanisms. The result, including the influence of sound itself, has been to reduce employment and to increase costs of production. The product fares no better with the customers than in the silent days.

MR. RICHARDSON'S BLUE BOOK

THE announcement of Mr. Frank H. Richardson's new Blue Book of Projection, the sixth edition, gives occasion to the observation that the author's career in motion picture journalism is unique in covering a quarter of a century of continuous active service and in a single position—the authority on the projection machine and the affairs of the man—Mr. Richardson will insist on two men—in the booth. Aggressive, emphatic, philosophizing Mr. Richardson has achieved the triumph of becoming an institution while remaining exceedingly active and extant. His new Blue Book, the authority of the craft of the projectionist, published by Quigley Publications, will appear shortly.

OPINIONS

MR. ANDRE SENNWALD has decorated his New York Times column with a reference indicating, perhaps not too seriously, resolutions for 1935 including "to love Terry Ramsaye." The editor of the Herald requires no resolution to admire the excellent writing concerning the screen performed by Mr. Sennwald. But the charm of his skill still does not inhibit variance with his opinions on art, and maybe politics.

THIS WEEK---

THEATRE GAINS

Theatre business on the Coast has increased 15 to 20 per cent in the past year, reports Al Hanson, Los Angeles city manager for Fox West Coast. Other industries likewise are showing gains, he said. He declared that the four yearly drives conducted by the circuit have been successful, the plans being in the nature of profit-sharing with managers. Charles Skouras has taken over four first-runs in Los Angeles. . . .

"PROPAGANDA"

Termed "commercial propaganda," the radio code authority has banned free handling by broadcasters of the United Artists program, "Last-Minute Flashes." These programs should be handled only at commercial rates, according to a bulletin issued to broadcasters from the authority's headquarters in Washington. . . .

RUSSIAN PURCHASE

Soviet Russia last week bought its first American films with the purchase of "The Invisible Man," "Peter," "La Cucaracha," "The Three Little Pigs," "Penguin Island" (both Disney), for Russian distribution. The films had been sent to Moscow for the World Cinema Festival. Other deals are reported pending. . . .

DANZIG DECREE

A recent decree of the Senate of the City of Danzig, in Europe, requires a "kultur" film be shown with every feature presentation. The "kultur" film must be of specific length and must pass the Danzig censor relative to its artistic, educational and political value to the state. . . .

DROP SOVIETS

When the Boston American Legion protested that "reds" were flocking to the Majestic, showing Soviet films, the Levrad Corporation abandoned the importations. Al Tulipan, manager, however, explained the move as due to unsatisfactory business, rather than to the Legion's demand. . . .

RESOLUTION

Meeting in 39th annual convention at Columbus, Ohio, last week, the Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs adopted a resolution to recommend legislation looking to moral training in schools and the production of better motion pictures. . . .

AD SHORTS

To sell Westinghouse Streamline Refrigerators this year, the company plans to rely largely on one-minute film trailers, in Technicolor. With six available, the company claims outlet through 5,000 theatres, the subjects made in Hollywood with experienced players. . . .

DOUBLE BILLS

A Columbus study revealed 26 out of 30 neighborhood houses playing double bills at least one day last week, one, the Rivoli, playing duals plus vaudeville one day. Many are charging 10 cents, a few 15 cents. One downtown theatre played doubles the entire week. . . .

TO REMAIN WHN

Loew's officials have decided not to change the name of its radio station WHN, to WMGM. The reasons: WHN has become fixed in the public mind and is easier to remember than WMGM. Real success is reported lately with the station's amateur hour, and a deal is reported in progress with Ward Baking Company to sponsor the amateur broadcast. . . .

KENTUCKY COLONELS

The expansive regiment of Kentucky Colonels, of whom many are somehow concerned with the motion picture industry, will rally in and about Louisville on April 29, the session extending through May 4. It so happens that the Kentucky Derby will be run at about that time. Churchill Downs, therefore, is likely to be the parade ground. Budd Rogers, general sales manager of Liberty Pictures, is the latest to join Governor Ruby Laffoon's Colonels. . . .

SOUTHERN PRODUCTION

Reported in New Orleans is the plan of George Orth, New York, recently consulting with A. Harrison, Jr., of New Orleans, to construct a two-stage sound studio in the southern city. Planned, says the report, is acquisition of a 50-acre tract, work to start May 1. Production, and renting of studio space is part of the reported plan, despite the conclusion the city is not suitable atmospherically for film production. . . .

BOOK TITLES

The Federal Trade Commission has announced at Washington that Charles Scribner's Sons has agreed not to sell books under titles differing from those under which the books were serialized in magazines, unless the original title is clearly indicated on the book. The specific case involved Arthur Train's book, "No Matter Where," published earlier in "Good Housekeeping" as "The Man Who Went Back." . . .

NEW BLIMP

From John Arnold of the MGM camera department on the Coast has come the invention of a new camera blimp, which is to be used for the first time on Irving Thalberg's "No More Ladies." The development has an automatic finder, and weighs only 100 pounds, as compared, it is said, with the regular blimp's weight of 240 pounds. . . .

SELZNICK'S OFFER

Beside saying he has received a "handsome offer" to join another company in a production post, David O. Selznick would have nothing to say relative to the report he is to leave MGM. Reports declared he would form a new producing unit, with Myron Selznick, but that has been denied. It is understood in Hollywood, however, that a new unit is definitely planned. . . .

LOEW'S IN CHICAGO

Loew's has closed for five theatre sites in Chicago in its invasion to seek representation for MGM pictures. Seven other deals are expected momentarily. Robert Lynch and Ernest Schwartz, of the MGM Philadelphia sales office, are in Chicago working on the theatre acquisitions. Extending the policy abroad, Loew's has purchased the Capitol, Madrid. . . .

NEW COLOR FILM

Eastman Kodak's house organ, "Cine-Kodak Salesman," reports a newly developed 16mm. color film, Kodachrome, which may be used in ordinary cameras without special lenses and may be projected with regular lamps. Three very thin emulsions on the negative, each sensitive to a primary color, is the method. . . .

U. S. PLANS TO INCREASE LIMIT ON THEATRE LOANS

Legislation to Extend to $50,000 the Amount of Loans for Modernizing Structures under Housing Act will be Followed by Federal Campaign to Acquaint Exhibitors with Privileges Available

Enactment of pending legislation by Congress to increase to $50,000 the amount to which loans for modernization of theatres and other business structures may be insured by the Government under the Federal Housing Act, will be followed by an intensive drive by the Housing Administration, to acquaint every motion picture theatre owner in the country with the privileges of which he may avail himself to rehabilitate and modernize his property.

Under the present act, the insurance limit guaranteed banks by the Government is $2,000 and while a number of exhibitors have made mortgages in that amount in order to secure money with which to improve their theatres, the great majority, it is said, have been unable to take advantage of the law because the maximum securable was insufficient for any extensive renovation.

Extension of the limitation to $50,000 is expected by the Housing Administration at Washington to find immediate favor in exhibition, which automatically would also benefit theatre equipment manufacturers and construction interests furnishing new material.

Contrary to reports which have reached the Administration, there has been no contraction of the Administration's activities in recent weeks as they concern theatre loans, and applications may be made as heretofore, if the $2,000 maximum now available is sufficient for the borrower's needs.

MODIFYING OF STATUTES SOUGHT TO INCREASE SERVICE TO THEATRE

Reports also have been received that bank enlisted by the Administration in making the actual loans have refused exhibitors' applications. While it is true that in one or two states some handicaps have been encountered because of state laws which permit the charging of a higher rate of interest than the Government will allow, there has been no general rejection of applications by the Washington authorities, and negotiations are now underway in the high-interest states for modification of their statutes, so that the banks will be compelled to lower their rates in keeping with the FHA's regulations.

It is also possible that some of the complainants in exhibition may have applied for loans to banks which, for one reason or another, have not participated in the Government plan. Authorization is given banks by the Administration to participate in the plan when the banks make such application.

UTMOST CONSIDERATION ASSURED EXHIBITORS FOR THEIR COOPERATION

While the acceptance or rejection of an application is up to the local bank, any exhibitor whose request for a loan has been denied for any reason other than that a poor risk was involved, need only write to the officials of the Housing Administration and his case will be investigated and, if possible, he will be financed.

Because of the fact that the exhibitors of the country have cooperated wholeheartedly with the Administration in its publicity work, they will receive utmost consideration, it was indicated at Washington.

Housing Administration officials are highly grateful for the showing of their films. They are showing that appreciation in concrete ways by making every effort to help every exhibitor who has difficulty in obtaining a loan, it was said.

Exhibitors everywhere recently received material from the Administration outlining the assistance they can obtain from the Government. As soon as the bill to increase the loan maximum is enacted, additional material will be sent out showing how best a theatre owner may take advantage of these facilities.

On pages 16 and 17 appears a color map of the United States which shows at a glance exactly where the Warner circuit, now the third largest in the business, has its houses. In each state where Warner theatres are situated the number following the name of the state indicates the number of theatres operated, while underneath each name is the Warner houses' total seating capacity in that state. Following the map is a state and city listing of theatres.

This is the third of a series of theatre listings of the large circuits in the United States. Paramount Publix holdings were listed and mapped in the isue of January 5, Loew's in the February 7th issue. The Fox and RKO structures will be presented soon.

Arrange Standing Exploitation Show

As a result of the interest shown in theatre campaigns displayed at the first annual Show of Showmanship, a permanent exhibition of these exploitation pieces was announced Tuesday by A-Mike Vogel, chairman, Managers' Round Table Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, at a general meeting of Skouras Metropolitan circuit managers in the Paramount Building. Space has been set aside in the offices of Quigley Publications, 1790 Broadway, where the campaigns, including winning Quigley Award entries, will be available for examination by all interested managers.

Mr. Vogel credited increased theatre grosses and managerial promotions to the Quigley Awards, quoting statements from various circuit heads to this effect. He also emphasized the rulings of the Awards competitions which gave every entrant an equal opportunity to win, irrespective of his situation. It was shown that plaques had been won frequently by managers in subsequent runs and neighborhood houses.

"If managers would stop worrying over the proximity of opposition houses and concentrate on getting a fair share of business from their immediate drawing areas, a happier state of affairs would come about for all concerned," said Mr. Vogel.

"Plenty of live showmen in the subsequents roll up fat grosses on pictures that have not been milked dry in the first runs. These men have forgotten the existence of competing theatres. As far as they are concerned, dates are first runs.

LICHTMAN ATTACKS USE OF GIVEAWAYS

Says Practice Is Damaging Quality of Films and Heading Exhibition Toward 'Nickelodeons'

The practice of giveaways, two-shows-for-the-price-of-one, Bank Nights and other inducements calculated to stimulate theatre business came in for a severe attack this week from Al Lichtman, vice-president and general manager of United Artists, who said such methods not only were impairing the quality of films but slowly were heading the whole system of motion picture exhibition toward disaster and the days of the "catch-penny nickelodeon."

"The film industry is no longer thought or spoken of as being in 'swaddling clothes,'" Mr. Lichtman said. "With the release of such intelligent and highly entertaining pictures as 'David Copperfield,' 'Les Miserables,' 'One Night of Love' and others, motion pictures attain their full maturity.

Cites High Production Costs

"I was impressed, on my recent trip to Hollywood, by the amount of money producers are spending. A good picture costs not less than $400,000. One film this year already has run up to $1,700,000.

"And yet in Chicago alone exhibitors are giving away $30,000 worth of pottery a week on premium nights. They are giving more dollars' worth of merchandise than a major department store can sell in a year. That money eventually comes out of the producer's pocket because it forces him to make cheaper pictures. When an exhibitor spends so much for premiums he is forced to chisel elsewhere. In the end the product is cheapened, the public sours and the vicious circle is completed."

Mr. Lichtman said that if the public demands double features the distributors should allow them—but not two features for the price of one.

"Cut-Throat Practice"

"This is only a cut-throat practice and exhibitors should remedy it by charging admissions fair to producers and thereby encourage the making of better films," the United Artists executive said. "Most exhibitors will fight any outside factors that attack their business. Why shouldn't they be equally patriotic and fight the enemies from within?

"The exhibitor must keep the business healthy by not cheapening the product with such degrading tricks as premiums, bank nights, double features and similar 'rackets.' This is equivalent to telegraphing the producers to stop making good pictures!"

Chicago's premium war was further complicated when Essaness Theatres extended the practice of giveaways throughout its circuit to meet the competition, using one "Bank Night" plan, 15 on "Screeno," 16 "Stamp Clubs" and 18 dish and kitchenware giveaways. More than one plan is in use.

In Ohio, the House judiciary committee of the legislature at Columbus recommended for passage a proposal to submit to a vote of the people a constitutional amendment permitting the state to operate lotteries.

A Des Moines grievance board ruling on Bank Nights was upheld by the federal court in that city, which refused to grant an injunction restraining the board and six major distributors from interference with the practice.

Although the Kansas City office of Fox Midwest Theatres declared that the idea will be confined to that territory, it was believed that the "Gift Stamp" premium plan starting at Kansas City Easter Sunday may be adopted also by Fox divisions elsewhere. Cash prizes will range from $5 to $50 and merchandise prizes will be awarded.

At the same time, the state attorney-general's office in Missouri ruled that "Bank Nights" constitute a lottery and are illegal. A bill to outlaw the plan was recently killed in the House.

Federal court at Los Angeles temporarily has prevented the discontinuance of "Bank Nights" there, Judge McCormack ruling in the test case of the Oxnard Theatres, Inc., against the Local Grievance Board and distributors. The court denied a motion for dismissal and gave the defendants 20 days in which to answer.

At Milwaukee, the Grievance Board ordered the Hollywood theatre to discontinue awarding bags of groceries.

The Bank Night plan in Florida experienced a setback with the announcement by Postmaster Wall at Tampa that newspapers would be barred from the mails if the line "Bank Night Tonight" appears in any future theatre advertising.

WEBB RESIGNS AS PATHE PRESIDENT

Stuart W. Webb resigned this week from the presidency of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Webb had served three years in that office. Frank J. Kolbe, a partner in Young & Kolbe, New York investment brokers, was elected president of Pathe, and Robert W. Atkins of Proctor & Paine, also a stockholder, was elected executive vice-president.

Mr. Webb has been identified with the motion picture industry since 1928, when he was brought upon the film scene under the regime of Joseph P. Kennedy in FBO. Mr. Kennedy subsequently took over management of Pathe and Mr. Webb transferred his attentions to that concern. After the sale, in 1930, of Pathe's studio and production assets to RKO, Mr. Kennedy withdrew from active participation and Mr. Webb became president of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Kuykendall Scores Pettengill Measure

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, told the annual convention of the Tri-States Motion Picture Theatre Owners at Memphis on Monday that if the Pettengill bill prohibiting block booking were to pass the moral issues involved would not be solved and the law would be a detriment to both the industry and the public.

"We find to our amazement that several organizations within the industry are taking the trouble to support this measure," Mr. Kuykendall said. "These groups are misled and misinformed as to the results that would be achieved.

"Exhibitors would continue to buy, as now, separately rather than in groups, the pictures that bring hte best results at the box office. It would be no help to the small town operator if he were forced to go to an exchange center to see all the product before buying, and it would be demoralizing to the production end of the industry."

Other speakers at the convention were M. A. Lightman, Harry Martin of the Memphis Commercial-Appeal and Jack Bryan of the Memphis Press Scimitar.

No election of officers was scheduled for the convention, the annual election being held at the autumn meeting. A resolution was passed putting the association on record as endorsing block booking, provided reasonable cancellation be allowed by distributors in all contracts.

Support of the Pettengill bill was pledged at a meeting of directors of the New York Allied unit in Albany this week.

KAO Board Elections Make "Truce" Permanent

The stockholders of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation in annual session last week reelected 12 of the 13 directors of the company, thus wiping out the lines of demarcation within the KAO board which have existed for several years and have brought the faction representing the large M. J. "Mike" Meehan stock interest into sharp conflict with RKO interests over theatre financial policy on a number of occasions.

A balance of representation between RKO and Mr. Meehan was effected a year ago when Herbert Bayard Swope entered KAO and the provisional truce which resulted was so successful in quieting opposing factions on the board, it was said, that last week's meeting was influenced to make the arrangement permanent. Reelected were Herbert Bayard Swope, chairman; David Sarnoff, M. H. Aylesworth, L. E. Thompson, W. G. Van Schmus, Paul M. Mazur, Frank B. Altschul, M. J. Meehan, Donald K. David, Jay E. Eddy, Malcolm Kingsburg and Peter J. Maloney. Elected was Monroe Goldwater, law partner of Edward F. Flynn, whom he succeeds.

Rochfort Promoted

Robert Rochfort, who has been attached to the Paris office of Paramount, has been appointed director of all the company's exchanges in northern Africa.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

THEIR STARDOM PROPHESIED. The Warner Starlets of 1936-37—those feminine players on the Warner roster judged most likely to attain the screen's firmament next year. Reading up the ladder, they are Myra Moore, Olivia de Haviland, Maxine Doyle and Dorothy Dare, demonstrating on the lot the promise attributed to them. Meanwhile, it will be noted, sets are being built and technicians ride the cranes in attention to immediate attainments.

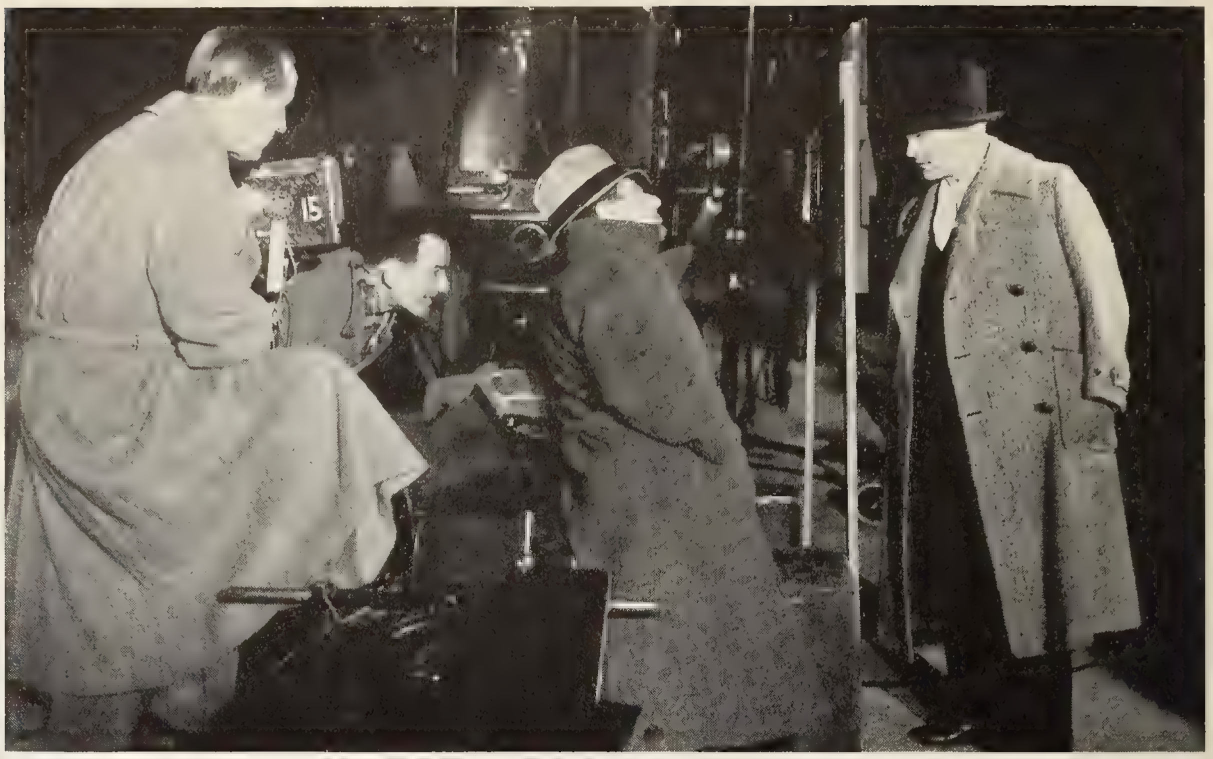
SEASONAL ZIP. (Below) With zipper. As we approach the swimming months, Annie Darling (soon to be seen in Universal's "The Bride of Frankenstein") comes up with this one-piece garment of washable print cotton and they're both attractive.

GOIN' FISHIN'. Col. Royal Quincy Byron, public relations executive of RKO Theatres, pictured as he left New York for Bermuda in relentless pursuit of the obstinate Tuna.

TO HEAD NEWSREEL. Sir Malcolm Campbell, the famed English autospeedster, who has been named editor of British Movietone News, succeeding Gerald Sanger, now producer.

INTENSE. And petite. A Helen Hayes type. So they say of Luise Rainer, dynamically pictured above. Prominent on the Continent as a dramatic actress, she has been signed by MGM for screen roles in this country.

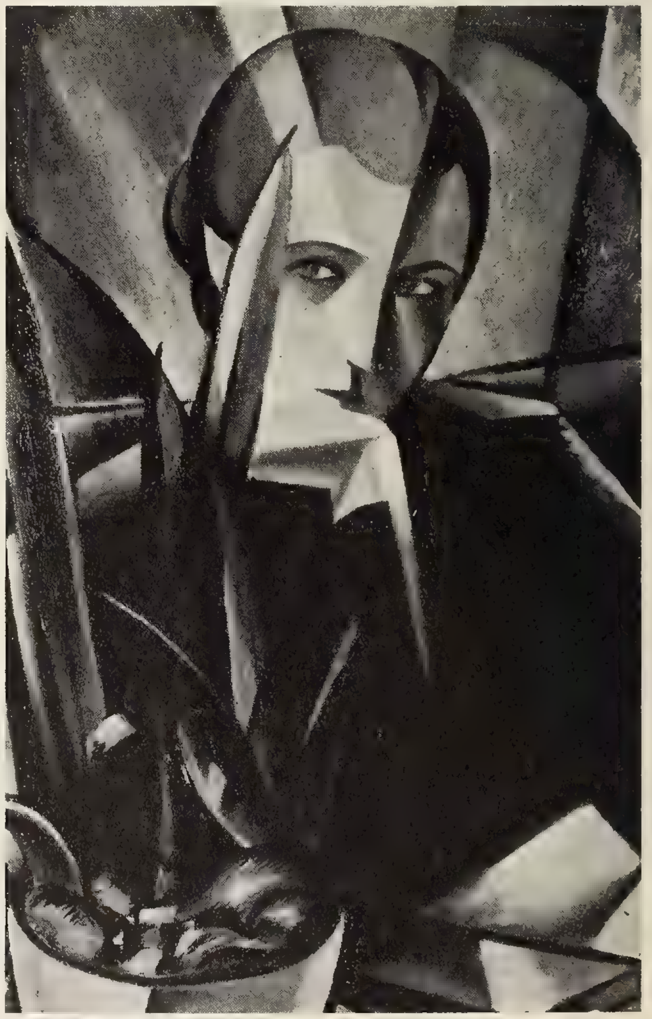
FIRST LAP. Helen Vinson at the end of her plane trip from Hollywood to New York, to sail for England to appear in "King of the Damned," GB production shortly to go into work.



THROUGH A FENCE. Will James Cagney be seen at this point in "The G Men," his new Warner Brothers picture, and this is how matters were arranged by Director William Keighley and Cameraman Sol Polito.

FIRST ASSIGNMENT. (Left) Jean Dixon, for years a prominent actress of the New York stage, who will make her screen debut in "Mr. Dynamite," forthcoming Universal production in which she will appear opposite Edmund Lowe.

DIRECTOR HONORED. Louis B. Mayer, vice president of MGM in charge of production, and some of his guests at a party given in Los Angeles for W. S. Van Dyke, in tribute to the latter's direction of "Naughty Marietta." Shown are Van Dyke, Elsa Lanchester, Mayer, Jeanette MacDonald, star of the musical; Eddie Mannix, Nelson Eddy and Hunt Stromberg, producer.



EXHIBITED. A reproduction of the oil painting, "Reflections," in the exhibit of the Society of Independent Artists at the Grand Central Palace in New York. It is the work of Tony Gablik, Warner art director.

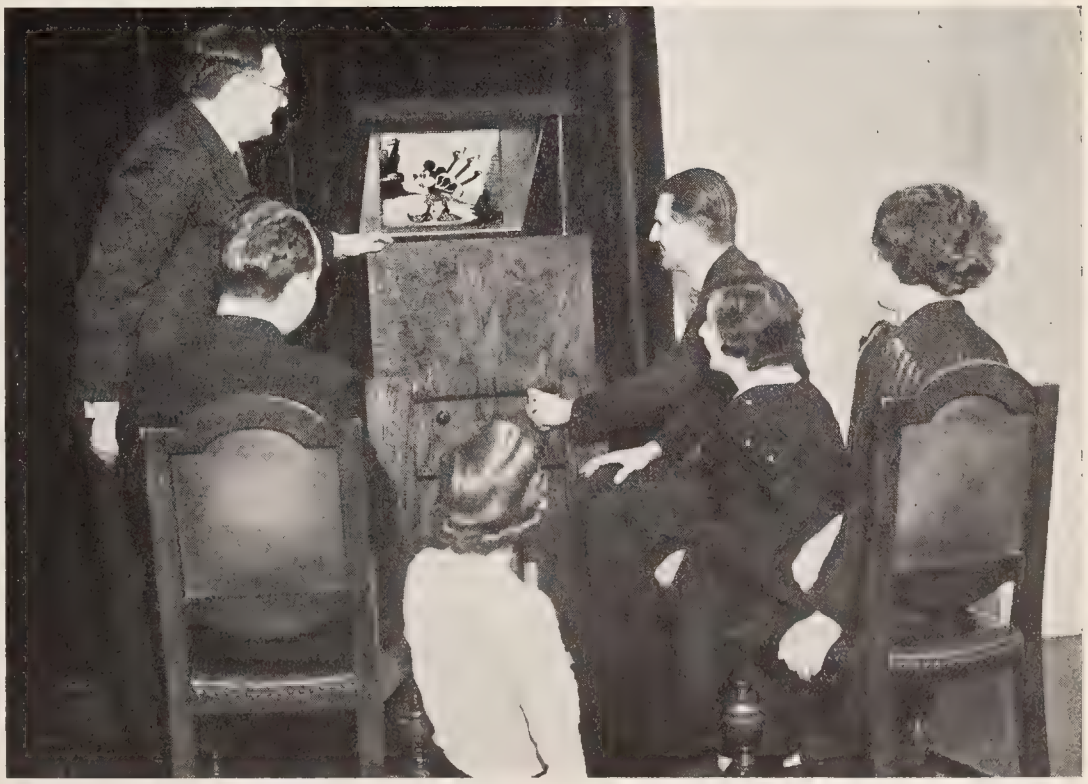
REWARDED. Because of their sales record, Arthur C. Bromberg, Monogram Southern franchise holder, gave his district salesmen a trip to Hollywood. Arrivers and greeters:

H. Y. Harrell, H. H. Everett, William Fulton, Cy Dillon. Carl Floyd, John Wayne (Western star), Bromberg John Mangham, Leon Seicshnaydre, Trem Carr, vice-president; Henry Glover, Jack London and Ed Orte.

SIGNED. (Right) Joseph Calleia, Broadway stage star, whom MGM has placed under contract. His first picture will be "Public Enemy No. 1."

WORKWARD. Following a vacation in the East. Marlene Dietrich has returned to Hollywood to begin a new picture. She is shown as she entrained in New York for Chicago.

ARRIVES FOR PREMIERES. Joseph Moskowitz, treasurer of 20th Century, greeting Darryl F. Zanuck, vice president and production chief, on the latter's arrival in New York for premieres of "Cardinal Richelieu" and "Les Miserables."



MICKEY GETS TELEVISED. The adventurous Mr. Mouse added to his career as a United Artists star the other day when one of the Walt Disney cartoons was transmitted from the Baird television studio in London to the room shown above, ten miles distant, to demonstrate new high-definition reception. The screen employed measured twelve by nine inches.

14 PRODUCERS BOUGHT 48 BOOKS AND PLAYS IN MARCH FOR 1935-36

28 Original Manuscripts, 15 Books and Plays Purchased, Largest Number Since Last Nov.; Paramount Heads List

Producers in March started with vigor to build 1935-36 feature release schedules with outstanding books and plays, 14 companies acquiring 28 original manuscripts, 15 books and five plays, for a total of 48, the largest of any month since last November. Purchases were made as follows:

Company	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals for Month
Burr	..	1	..	1
Cameo	3	..	..	3
Columbia	3	4	..	7
Fox	3	3	..	6
Goldwyn (UA)	..	1	..	1
Mascot	..	1	..	1
Metro	3	..	2	5
Paramount	7	..	2	9
Premier	1	..	..	1
Radio	1	2	..	3
Reliance (UA)	2	1	..	3
20th Century (UA)	1	..	..	1
Universal	3	2	..	5
Warners	1	..	1	2
TOTALS FOR THE MONTH	28	15	5	48

Original-story purchases continued in March to be the chief source of material, providing 59 per cent of all material purchased, against the 31 and 10 per cent contributed by books and plays, respectively. For seven months, since last September 1st, these three story sources stand as follows: original manuscripts, 50 per cent (186 purchases); books, 38 per cent (142 purchases); plays, 12 per cent (42 purchases), for a total of 370 for the period, as follows:

Month	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals
September	28	40	7	75
October	25	20	6	51
November	39	17	8	64
December	19	19	6	44
January	26	14	7	47
February	21	17	3	41
March	28	15	5	48
Totals for Seven Months	186	142	42	370

Virtually all purchases now made are for 1935-36 programs, which are the principal subjects of conference both in distribution and production quarters, as executives prepare to gather in annual sales convention, in May and June, for an unusually early selling season.

There were many important properties acquired in March. Of special interest to exhibitors, for their possible box-office value, are several widely read books and some successful stage plays.

Richard Grace's well known novel, "Arctic Wings," was taken by Columbia and "Bracelets," a Vina Delmar manuscript, went to Paramount. Clarence Budington Kelland's "Dreamland" was a Goldwyn acquisition, for Eddie Cantor, while Fox negotiated the popular expose of the so-called "400" set, "Farewell to Fifth Avenue," by Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr.

Metro purchased "Gold Eagle Guy," Melvin Levy play, and Reliance bought "The Last of the Mohicans," James Fenimore Cooper. The Milneaux play, "New Divorce," from the French, was another Paramount acquisition. The company also took Ferenc Molnar's "Pastry Baker's Wife." One of the outstanding purchases of the month was Warners' buy, "Three Men on a Horse," the Alex Yokel play of the season.

Paramount made two important acquisitions in the properties of the life of Garibaldi and of Victor Herbert, including some 500 Herbert musical compositions for inclusion therein. The 48 March purchases, complete, with available production credits, follow:

Alias Mary Dow, original, William A. Johnston and Forrest Halsey, purchased by Universal, which assigned continuity to Rose Franken and dialogue to Arthur Caesar.

WARNER'S 438 THEATRES MAKE CIRCUIT 3d LARGEST

Centralized Operation Maintained While Theatre Company Shows Steady Profit; Houses in 23 States Now

Warner Brothers Theatres, Inc., which started with one little nickelodeon opened in Newcastle, Pa., 22 years ago by the four Warner brothers—Harry M., Major Albert, Jack L., and the late Sam Warner—today is the third largest circuit in the business and is the largest in the United States to have kept clear of receivership. [Map showing Warner theatres is on pages 16 and 17; listing of houses is on pages 18 and 19.

Operating in 23 states of the Union, there are 438 theatres in the Warner fold, controlled and manager on a centralized basis direct from the company's home office in New York, in contrast with the extensive program of decentralization of operations embarked upon two and one-half years ago by Paramount, Fox and RKO.

Despite depression and the fact that two years ago there were several situations in the Warner circuit which had to be closed or otherwise disposed of because of the general business retrogression, the theatre subsidiary has continued to return a profit to the parent company, while its outlook for the coming new season was said to be better than at any time in five years.

Warner Bros. reported that it had bettered its earning position during the fiscal year 1934 by $3,761,235, reducing losses from $6,291,748 in 1933 to $2,530,513 in 1934, and at the same time doubling its cash position to $4,664,138, better than in any year of the depression. Largely contributing to this condition was the theatre department.

The 438 Warner theatres currently operating in strategic territories seat a total of 594,296 persons, an average of 1,300 a theatre. The circuit has less than one-half as many theatres as has Paramount, whose houses in the United States total 970 and seat 1,131,561 persons, but the Warner seating capacity averages approximately one-third more per theatre.

Four More States Than in 1931

Warner today is operating theatres in four more states than in 1931, having at that time but 19 states on its theatre map. The four additional states are Kentucky, with eight theatres; North Carolina, one; Oregon, two, and Texas, one.

As Warner entered the year 1931 it had 476 theatres in its circuit, 38 more houses than it operates today. The majority of theatres dropped since then were in the Philadelphia territory and today there are only 58 Warner houses in that city as compared with 86 early in 1931.

In 1933 Warner Bros. formed Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, under the laws of New York State, to manage all theatres owned by Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc. The new unit then was described as part of a reorganization of the corporate structure of Warner theatres throughout the United States.

More Acquired in East and Midwest

Within a few months thereafter, negotiations were under way for acquisition of a number of theatres in the East and Middlewest. Ohio and New England then were regarded as the two most advantageous sectors for theatre additions. At the time, Publix, RKO and the various Fox units were in the process of decentralization, dropping houses daily. Warner started a program in direct contrast with decentralizing.

The reason for the Warner move, it was said at that time, was to make the circuit more compact, with elimination of darkened houses in situations which were not supporting existing theatres. To this end, approximately 40 unprofitable Warner theatres were dropped, although in some situations where houses were closed, the company retained them in the hope of reopening when conditions warranted.

Warner was, then, undertaking a program of inter-company reorganization to be followed by expansion, which was carried out without the receivership eventuality which several other companies experienced.

Zones Given More Latitude

Since the Warner organization first started building up its circuit into national prominence, actual management of the various properties has been vested in the home office, nor does the company contemplate decentralization. Although its district managers recently were granted wider operating authority, final authority remains at headquarters under Joseph Bernhard, head of the theatre subsidiary.

Zone managers now are given direct charge of operation of their units, this including authority to purchase all supplies and equipment, and individual auditing systems for each zone have been inaugurated.

The 438 theatres currently are under the supervision of the home office and 12 zone managers in the field. James Coston is in charge of zone operations in Chicago and Milwaukee. Cleveland is the headquarters of Nat Wolf; I. J. Hoffman is at New Haven; Don Jacocks, Newark; Moe Silver, Albany; Ted Schlanger, Philadelphia; Harry Kalmine, Pittsburgh; J. J. Payette, Washington, D. C.; Herbert Copelan, Atlantic City; L. J. Halper, Hollywood; Howard Waugh, Memphis.

Contrary to reports that Warner Brothers is considering further divestments of theatre holdings, it was indicated at a meeting of the company's zone managers in New York that additional acquisitions may be undertaken within the year.

Ben Berinstein is negotiating with Warner for the repurchase of four houses in Elmira, N. Y., sold to the circuit several years ago. Only one of the four is open.

Educational Marks 20th Anniversary

Next month Educational Pictures will celebrate its twentieth anniversary as a producer of short subjects exclusively. The celebration will be in the form of a special sales and booking drive by Fox Film, distributor of Educational product, concentrating on the short subjects.

In May, 1915, Earle W. Hammons, founder of the company and still Educational's president, organized Educational Films Corporation of America. Twenty years ago, Mr. Hammons, a real estate operator, undertook to supply screen entertainment and deliver a talk on the film, before a meeting of the Red Cross at Briarcliff Manor. He used a scenic picture just completed by Robert C. Bruce, a friend. The interest shown in the picture gave rise shortly after to the formation of the company, which at first contemplated the production of pictures for school, club and other non-theatrical purposes. Later attention was directed toward the theatrical field, with special concentration on the short subject, which was followed by the organization of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. In 1933 the distribution of Educational product was transferred to Fox Film.

Among the players who appeared for Educational during the 20 years were Johnny Hines, Dorothy Mackail, Lloyd Hamilton, Wallace Beery, Lewis Stone, Bing Crosby, Edward Everett Horton and Shirley Temple. Well known producers, and directors did early work for Educational. Joe Cook, Buster Keaton, Ernest Truex, Sylvia Froos, Tom Howard, Tom Patricola and Buster West are among the stars now appearing in Educational subjects.

Among the new two-reel pictures ready for the anniversary celebration are: Joe Cook in "A Nose For News"; Ernest Truex in "Only The Brave"; Buster Keaton in "Tars and Stripes"; Tom Howard and George Shelton in "Grooms in Gloom"; Sylvia Froos in "Stepmother Blues"; a comedy with Junior Coghlan and Dorothea Kent; Buster West and Tom Patricola, signed last week, in "Dame Shy."

Single-reel pictures include several Paul Terry-Toon cartoons, "The Life of the Party," a Song Hit Story featuring the Cabin Kids, and several new subjects in the Treasure Chest series.

A. T. & T. Quarterly Earnings $30,097,288

The American Telephone & Telegraph Company reported this week a net income of $30,097,288 for the first quarter of 1935, equal to $1.61 a share earned on 18,662,275 shares of capital stock.

This income compared with $32,992,340, or $1.77 a share, for the 1934 quarter.

Company Plans New House in West Kentucky

The West Kentucky Amusement Company, with headquarters at Mayfield, plans to open a new theatre shortly at Fulton. Seating 800 to 1,000, the house will be modernly equipped, with the latest sound equipment and air conditioning. H. C. Neale, who managed the Princess and Dixie theatres in Mayfield for several years, will manage the new house.

Screen Writers' Meet

The new board of directors of the Screen Writers' Guild on the Coast held its first meeting early this week.

Harry Arthur Hits Coast Zoning Plan

The plan of Fox West Coast to consolidate the 28 different zones proposed in the Los Angeles clearance and zoning schedule into about nine zones and to increase the requested seven days' protection to 14 days for each five-cent advance in admissions was the subject of a bitter attack by Harry C. Arthur at a Code Authority meeting in New York last week at which Harry A. Babcock, an official observer for the Federal Trade Commission, was present.

Mr. Arthur said that the "extension of zones as proposed by Fox West Coast would perpetuate a monopoly and would put independents out of business," adding that "the only chance independent exhibitors have is to play within the zones as constituted."

The hearings of the Code Authority on FWC's application for a rehearing of the Los Angeles plan were described on Friday as illegal procedure by Ben Berinstein, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California. Mr. Berinstein said that the Los Angeles plan had the approval of the exhibitors of the territory and the Code Authority and that the code does not authorize petitions for rehearings such as the one now in progress in New York. Neither, Mr. Berinstein asserted, does the code provide for changes in an adopted clearance and zoning plan by any procedure such as that invoked by FWC. The Code Authority postponed its ruling on the case to April 23.

Fanchon & Marco to Split Operation in Three Sections

Fanchon & Marco has determined to divide its theatre operation into three divisions, operating from New York, St. Louis and Los Angeles. The plan will become effective in the fall, when Harry Arthur will move his headquarters to St. Louis and supervise the middlewestern houses from that point. Jack Partington will be in New York and Marco Wolff in Los Angeles. The circuit operates four in New England, five in St. Louis, two in Salt Lake City and 23 on the Coast.

The circuit is closing the Ambassador in St. Louis on Saturday because of inability to obtain sufficient first run films for the Ambassador, Fox and Missouri. First runs will continue to be shown at the Fox and Missouri, Class A at the Fox and Class B at the Missouri.

David Bernstein Marks 30th Year with Loew's

David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer of Loew's, Inc., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Loew's subsidiaries, last week observed his thirtieth year with Loew's. He joined Marcus Loew's People's Vaudeville Company in 1905, operating a penny arcade on 23rd street, in New York.

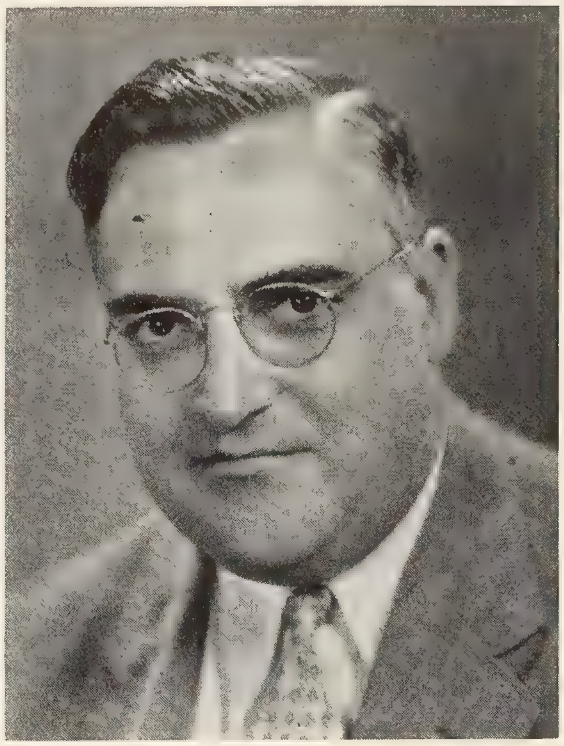
REPUBLIC PICTURES SUCCEEDS MONOGRAM; NEW NATIONAL UNIT

Exchanges Will Remain in Individual Hands but Owners Will Not Own Any Part of Republic Pictures Company



W. RAY JOHNSTON

TREM CARR

The industry's ninth so-called "national" producing and distributing structure was born over the weekend out of the W. Ray Johnston—Trem Carr—Monogram Pictures interests, to be known as Republic Pictures Corporation. With Republic there came the beginning of a related development to eliminate much of the competition and confusion of many independent distribution interests now doing business on the state rights market.

Monogram will deliver the remainder of the product promised for this season, and then bow out. Republic's first release will start the 1935-36 season.

Six-Year contracts will be closed within the week with the exchanges now affiliated with Monogram as franchise holders, and these will be merged into the new organization as rapidly as possible. The names of all the 33 exchanges will be changed to Republic Pictures. They are now known by the names of their individual owners or by individual company names.

Republic Pictures is not buying any interest in these exchanges. Their ownership will remain in individual hands as at present. However, the exchange owners will not own any part of Republic Pictures, as they did in Monogram. Their stock in Monogram will be purchased out of a liquidation fund set up for the purpose. This fund will pay a "handsome" profit to the exchange owners according to the management. Mr. Johnston and Mr. Carr hold together 46 per cent of Monogram's stock.

The new company also is conducting negotiations to acquire and merge additional exchanges in those cities where elimination of competition will strengthen the distribution facilities and product structure.

A new exchange is being set up at 515 Tenth street, Des Moines, and the home office executives Wednesday were completing plans for establishment of exchanges in New York and Philadelphia, to follow withdrawal of distribution arrangements from Harry Thomas' First Division exchanges. Last month Monogram repurchased Mr. Thomas' franchise in those two places. Whether Republic will establish its own New York and Philadelphia branches, or sign six-year distributing contracts with existing exchanges, had not been determined at press time.

Exchange to Become Unit

Each exchange becomes, for six years, a unit of the corporation, distributing Republic Pictures exclusively. This arrangement differs from the prevailing system of national distribution only in that the exchanges will be operated by their owners, and not by employee managers who have no interest other than a job. As a result, Republic's management believes that the exchange owner-operators, having their own business at stake, are more apt to further gross sales.

However, the local franchise system which made each exchange an independent, all differently named, is abandoned in favor of the national selling procedure of clearing and confirming contracts through New York headquarters.

Previously, under the franchise plan of local autonomy, when Monogram in New York was negotiating a contract with, for example, the circuit of 438 Warner theatres, permission first would have to be obtained from each of a dozen or more of the franchise holders in those territories where Warner operated. And, if any one franchise owner refused to permit sale of the product to the theatres in his territory, because he favored a deal with another account, then the New York office could not conclude the arrangement for that territory.

Republic Pictures will supply all prints and the exchanges will receive a flat percentage of the gross, paying exchange and sales overhead. They also will buy accessories outright, retailing them to the account. The amount of the gross percentage varies according to the size, overhead and potentialities of the business of each exchange.

Monogram Franchise Holders

The complete exchange structure, although practically the same as Monogram's, will be announced within the week. Monogram's franchise holders included:

Albany: B. H. Mills.
Atlanta: Arthur Bromberg Attractions.
Boston: Hollywood Films, Herman Rifkin.
Buffalo: Standard Film Exchanges, Jack Berkowitz.
Charlotte: H. H. Everett.
Chicago: Security Pictures, Irving Mandel.
Cincinnati: William Onie.
Cleveland: Monogram Pictures Corporation of Ohio, Nat Lefton and J. S. Jossey.
Dallas: Independent Film Distributors, Claude Ezell and W. G. Underwood.
Denver: J. H. Sheffield.
Detroit: Graphic Exchanges, Inc., Sam Seplowin.
Indianapolis: L. W. Marriott.
Kansas City: Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., Robert Withers.
Little Rock: Independent Film Distributors, Inc., B. F. Busby.
Los Angeles: Howard Stubbins.
Milwaukee: J. G. Frackman.
Minneapolis: Monogram Pictures Corporation of Minneapolis, Gilbert Nathanson.
New Orleans: L. Seichshnaydre.
Oklahoma City: Independent Film Distributors, Inc., Sol Davis.
Omaha: L. O. Ringler.
Pittsburgh: Monogram Pictures, Inc., J. H. Alexander.
Portland, Ore.: C. J. Farnes.
St. Louis: Premier Pictures Corporation, Nat Steinberg and Barney Rosenthal.
Salt Lake City: W. D. Frazer.
San Francisco: Cooperative Film Exchange, Floyd St. John.
Seattle: Monogram Exchanges, Inc., J. T. Sheffield.
Tampa: Carl Floyd.
Washington, D. C.: Liberty Film Exchange, Sam Flax.

The corporate structure of Republic Pictures is practically the same as Monogram's. W. Ray Johnston is president; Trem Carr, vice-president; J. P. Friedhoff, secretary and treasurer; Edward A. Golden, sales manager, and Edward Finney, director of advertising and publicity. The post of secretary of Monogram, held by Madeline S. White, was combined with that of treasurer in the new setup, although Miss White's status as executive assistant to the president remains unchanged.

Republic Productions Formed

Republic Productions, Inc., has been organized as a wholly-owned subsidiary to handle production, which will continue at the Pathe Studios in Culver City. The present Monogram production personnel is maintained in its entirety. Monogram's west coast corporate organization is Monogram Productions, Inc., with the same list of officers as the New York company.

Officers of the production company are the same as the parent corporation, with the following, in addition, continuing to hold their present posts: Robert Welsh, executive producer; Herman Schlom, production manager; Ernie Hickson, technical director; Lindsley Parsons, coast publicity head, and Billy Leyser,

CONSPIRACY CHARGED IN U.S. SUITS LAUNCHED BY THEATRE CONCERNS

State Theatre at Lincoln, Neb., Says Contracts Were Rejected; Two New Jersey Actions Are Aimed at Block Booking

Charging conspiracy and combination resulting in its ultimate ruin, State Theatres, Inc., Lincoln, Neb., brought suit in federal court last week against Lincoln Theatres Corporations of Delaware and Nebraska; J. H. Cooper, New York; R. R. Livingston, Lincoln; Paramount Publix, Paramount Distributing Corporation; Warner Brothers; Vitaphone; Vitagraph; First National; RKO; RKO-Pathe; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Universal; United Artists and Fox. Amount of damages sought totals $444,000, under the triple damage clause.

Paul Good, former state attorney general and victor in the Youngclaus protection suit in Nebraska, is in charge, for the plaintiff, assisted by Loren Laughlin.

Charge Product Was Assured

Assertion was made in the petition that the State theatre was only incorporated and equipped to the extent of $12,000, after the defendant film companies had assured president G. L. Hooper, Topeka, Kan., and general manager George Monroe, Beatrice, Neb., that they would sell them second-run pictures, which, prior to 1931, according to the charges, were not exhibited in Lincoln along with numbers of first-run pictures, because of Mr. Cooper's monopoly of the local situation. Mr. Cooper, charged the petition, had as many as five theatres closed at one time in the city as well as having all the available first-run product bought to discourage any competition.

Declare Contract Rejected

After the State opened and a contract signed by them was forwarded to MGM, it was refused, giving evidence, alleged the petition, that there was conspiracy between LTC and the defendant MGM. This happened in order as contracts were presented to each of the other defendants. In addition, it was charged that LTC closed its Delaware Corporation in 1932 and moved the assets over to the present Nebraska Corporation, to defraud creditors of the former corporation. After tying up the second-runs, stated the petition, prices were cut, the shuttered houses opened and double featuring started, contributing to the damage to the State, finally forcing its closing April 30, 1934.

Statement was made that 90 per cent of feature film is controlled by the defendants and that, as in other Nebraska keys, Paramount Publix had entered exhibition for the purpose of controlling the business in Omaha, Grand Island, Norfolk, Columbus and Freemont, so also had the company, in association with Mr. Cooper, sought to control the Lincoln situation.

The State operated to a profit of $15,000 in the depression years of late 1931 and early 1932, which if continued for the duration of the lease would have amounted to $125,000. Instead, indebtedness of $11,000 was faced when the house closed. Damages of $148,000 on that basis were figured with added attorney fees bringing the total threefold to $444,000. Another suit of triple proportions is contemplated of like content for Independent Theatres Corporation, which had a similar experience.

Meanwhile in New Jersey, the Ledirk Amusement Co., owner of the Palace Theatre at East Orange, and the Strand Theatre Operating Company, having the Strand in the same city, filed trade conspiracy suits in federal court at Newark against 27 film corporations and individuals. Ledirk is suing for $745,000; the Strand corporation for $315,000. Withholding of product with resultant depreciation in the value of their theatres was charged by both plaintiffs. The suits were aimed at block booking.

Companies named include Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and 10 other Warner-controlled companies; United Artists; Columbia Pictures; Radio Corporation of America; several RKO companies; Fox Film; Paramount Pictures Distributing., and five Paramount subsidiaries; First National Pictures, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Vitaphone, and Stanley Company of America.

The individuals named are Harry M., Jack L. and Major Albert Warner; Joseph Bernhard and Don Jacocks, all of Warner Bros.

It was reported from Washington that the Department of Justice does not consider the recent St. Louis indicements involving Warner, RKO and Paramount and several of their officials, on charges of monopoly of product, as sufficiently strong to warrant any nationwide investigation. However, the Department's agent is continuing his preparation of the case against the event of its coming to trial.

The Ambassador Theatre in St. Louis announced it would close its doors in a week, for an indefinite period, because of inability of the management to obtain sufficient first-run product to keep that theatre and the Fox and Missouri houses in operation. The Ambassador and the other two are Fanchon & Marco theatres.

Conspiracy and restraint of trade were charged to seven producing and distributing companies and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in a suit filed last week in Des Moines federal court by Don and Eunice Thornburg, operators of the Family theatre at Marshalltown, Iowa. Film companies named are Paramount, First National, MGM, Fox, Vitaphone, RKO, United Artists.

LONDON TO HEAR ABOUT AMERICAN CODE

Martin Quigley to Explain Workings to the Producers' Group of the Federation of British Industries—Carl E. Milliken Represents MPPDA

Will H. Hays, President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., has received from Film Producers Group, Federation of British Industries, an invitation to present at a conference in London an explanation of the Production Code under which the organized motion picture industry in the United States is operating. The conference is intended better to familiarize British producers with the requirements of the Code in order to facilitate distribution of their pictures in the American market.

On account of engagements in the United States which make it impossible for him to attend the conference, Mr. Hays has invited Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief of Motion Picture Herald and Motion Picture Daily, to attend in his stead and has designated Governor Carl E. Milliken to attend as secretary of the Association. Mr. Quigley has accepted the invitation and together with Governor Milliken will arrive in London on May 2nd.

"For many years," said Mr. Hays, "Mr. Quigley has cooperated actively in the industry's plans and arrangements to provide effective self-regulation of the moral character of motion pictures to the end that pictures should attain the widest possible acceptability with the public.

"In the development in 1930 of the Production Code to its present scope and character, Mr. Quigley played a leading part. Prior to that time and since, he has taken an active interest in the work and is well qualified to detail for the information of British film interests the Production Code as it affects the exhibition and distribution of motion pictures in the United States.

"Mr. Milliken, in his official capacity, is thoroughly familiar with the details of the industry's progress under the Code, and will be of assistance in meeting the purposes of the British invitation.

"The Association and myself are gratified that Mr. Quigley and Governor Milliken are able to attend the conference."

Paramount Team Wins Bowling Championship

Paramount last week won the championship of the Motion Picture Bowling League, RKO and Fox taking second and third.

The five high men in order of score in the competition were: Clausen, Paramount; Ronan, RKO; Fuchs, Paramount; Cosmos, Fox; Adams, Paramount.

WILL INCREASE PRODUCT

editor-in-chief of the house organ, "The Cooperator."

A new advisory committee of home office executives and exchange representatives was formed to plan and direct the policies of the new organization, and determine the type of production to be pursued, as follows: Mr. Johnston, Mr. Carr, Norton V. Ritchey, foreign distributing head; and these exchange owners: Herman Rifkin, Boston; Claud Ezell, Dallas; Irving Mandel, Chicago; Arthur Bromberg, Atlanta; J. S. Jossey, Cleveland; Floyd St. John, San Francisco.

Monogram had a similar committee, which was limited, however, to Johnston, Jossey, Rifkin, Ritchey and Mandel.

Ritchey Heads International

Another company, called Republic International Corporation, was formed, with Norton V. Ritchey as president, Mr. Johnston as vice-president and J. V. Ritchey as secretary and treasurer, to continue to handle foreign activities, maintaining agencies in London, Paris, Buenos Aires and the Far East. Mr. Johnston had not previously been an officer of the Ritchey company, which has its headquarters in the Republic home offices in the RKO Building at Rockefeller Center, New York.

Some $2,000,000 in new capital is being added for production purposes. About 60 per cent, or $1,200,000, was supplied by "outside interests," and the balance by the Herbert Yates-Consolidated Film interests, which previously have financed Monogram projects.

The participation by Mr. Yates in Monogram, while confined solely to financing, is expected to result in Republic distributing the product of other companies financed by the Yates interests, principally Liberty Pictures and Majestic Pictures. Mr. Johnston would not discuss the merging of these interests for purposes of concentrating distribution.

Would Continue as Producers

Mr. Johnston did say, however, that it is intended to place the distribution of other independents in the Republic machinery, eliminating much of the unnecessary exchange competition in the field. These additional units, such as Liberty Pictures and Majestic, would continue as producers, contributing a number of features to Republic for distribution. At present these companies are compelled individually to make separate deals with independent exchanges on the state rights market, and in some places the product of the two, plus Monogram's pictures, has been sold through two and three different exchanges. Under the intended plan all would be brought under the same exchange system.

Majestic is headed by Herman Gluckmann, and Liberty by M. H. Hoffman, with Budd Rogers acting as sales manager for both. Their headquarters are at 1776 Broadway, home office of Mr. Yates and Consolidated Film Industries.

Whichever companies are brought into the Republic distribution structure, and deals are expected to be concluded shortly, will automatically lose their identities from a distribution standpoint. That is, their product will be sold as Republic, presented only on the screen in the name of the producer.

Will Increase Product

One of the first product expansion moves to be undertaken by Republic will be the increasing of the present Monogram lineup from 20 features and eight westerns, to 26 features and 16 westerns, eight of which will star John Wayne. That much is definite. There will be additional product, depending on the distribution deals to be made, but not more than ten additional, for a total of 36 features and 16 westerns in 1935-36. Rather than extend the program beyond this, Republic will assign some of its contemplated productions to any other independents brought into the fold, if it is necessary.

PATRONS GET MAE WEST WEEK

Mae West for breakfast, dinner and supper was virtually the portion of the San Angelo, Texas, patrons of manager Pete Barnes of the Angelus. In one week, playing two days each, he showed Paramount's "Belle of the Nineties," for the first time; "I'm No Angel," for the second time, and "She Done Him Wrong," for the third time. His "Mae West Week," Mr. Barnes reported to the Paramount studios, gave him a gross 30 per cent better than average.

Mr. Johnston declared Wednesday that there will be a 50 per cent increase in negative costs of Republic pictures over those made by Monogram. There is no radical change contemplated in production policy, which for the most part has been confined to pictures intended for the family trade. The increased budget, however, will allow for considerable strengthening of story properties, talent structure and production itself, while the plan to line up other independents under the Republic distribution banner is expected to provide a wider variety.

Although a complete production schedule will not be announced for two weeks, Trem Carr this week acquired rights to "The Legion of the Lost," by Ex-Legionnaire No. 1384; Gene Stratton-Porter's "Harvester" and "Michael O'Halloran," "Forbidden Heaven," by Christian Jope-Slade, which Sada Cowan was assigned to adapt, and "Leavenworth Case," by Anna Green.

Reginald Barker to Direct Four

Mr. Carr also has signed Reginald Barker to direct four productions on the 1935-36 program.

The first John Wayne western by Republic will be "Westward Ho," while "The House of Seven Gables," by Nathaniel Hawthorne, previously purchased, also was placed on the schedule.

The passing of Monogram as an independent producer and state rights distributor, and the birth of Republic Pictures Corporation as a national organization, comes on W. Ray Johnston's 21st anniversary in the business.

Born in Bristow, Iowa, Jan. 2, 1892, and educated at Janesville, Iowa, high school, and the College of Commerce, at Waterloo, Mr. Johnston started as a reporter on the Waterloo Reporter, leaving for the Citizens' Gas and Electric Company, of Waterloo. Several years later he became secretary to a local banker whose interests served to bring him to the secretaryship of the Vaughan Land Company, the Western Realty and Investment Company and the Iowa Mausoleum Company, all of Waterloo. Here, at 19, he was in charge of 35 mausoleum salesmen and a construction crew of several hundred men.

One day in 1914, when a business acquaintance of Wilbert Shallenberger, who was interested in Thanhouser, Mutual, Majestic, New York, and Keystone film companies, remarked to Mr. Johnston that the position of secretary to Charles J. Hite, Shallenberger associate, was open, he traveled to New York and a motion picture career.

"The Million Dollar Mystery"

Two months later he became secretary of Syndicate Film Company, which was organized by Hite and Shallenberger and his brother, W. E. Shallenberger, to distribute "The Million Dollar Mystery." At a negative cost of $70,000, it grossed $1,600,000.

Mr. Johnston introduced Al Jennings, Oklahoma bandit, to pictures, and acted for Mr. Hite in supervising two theatres at New Rochelle, N. Y. He was a Thanhouser actor, managed that studio and was assistant treasurer. In 1917 he joined W. E. Shallenberger in Arrow Film, continuing for seven years, becoming vice-president and general sales manager.

In January, 1924, Mr. Johnston organized Rayart Pictures, running a stock investment of $10,000 up to $1,250,000. During the changeover to sound, he produced 24 silent westerns to serve unwired houses, and allied himself with Trem Carr, independent producer, who took charge in Hollywood, while Mr. Johnston handled business details from New York.

Monogram developed in 1931 as a cooperative venture with Mr. Carr and the exchange franchise holders, patterned somewhat after the old First National idea.

Mr. Johnston represents the independent producers and distributors on the Code Authority, and has been active in campaigning for their rights.

Paramount Trustees' Plans On Litigation Are Approved

Reports approving with minor changes the proposals of the Paramount Publix trustees for settlement of various litigations constituted the only developments of importance since the federal court approved the reorganization two weeks ago. Reports of approval by the trustees for settlement of the Chicago Marks Brothers litigation, retention by Paramount of the Astoria, Long Island, studio and film depot, and dissolution of the Elwood theatre property in Miami, Fla., were submitted last week by Special Master John E. Joyce to Federal Judge Coxe, who approved them Tuesday.

The Marks settlement provides for discontinuance of litigation by Paramount in consideration of payments to the latter of $56,208 by the Continental Illinois Bank. Leasing of the Long Island studio by Paramount News until 1941 is authorized in the special master's report, while the Elwood proposal provides for assignment to Paramount of a mortgage held by the former on the Miami Community Theatre Building, together with two mortgage notes totaling $73,180, as against indebtedness of Elwood to Paramount, and cancellation of $56,000 of claims against Paramount and payment to the latter of $33,180.

Pathe News Employs Three Regular "Voices"

Pathe News, entering its 25th year as a newsreel, has engaged the service of three announcers who will regularly handle the accompanying description on the reel. Harry Von Zell, Columbia Broadcasting announcer, has been signed as the regular "voice of Pathe News," which is released by RKO. Teddy Bergman, radio dialect comedian, will handle the dialogue on all humorous material, and Clem McCarthy, racing authority, will do the talking for all sporting events.

Quality Is Vital, Says Will Hays

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, speaking last week at the annual meeting on the Coast of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, stressed the point that quality in supply and quality in demand are both vital considerations for the industry. Mr. Hays is now back in New York.

He urged the continuation of production of diversified entertainment, feeling certain quality can be produced in quantity and that public support can be still further encouraged. He pointed out that indications from various parts of the country were to the effect that the industry had successfully met its responsibility to the public, and added that the motion picture industry stands now in a position of high respect and friendship, with an increasingly appreciative public.

Louis B. Mayer was reelected president of the association on the Coast for the fifth term. All other officers were likewise reelected, including Jack L. Warner, first vice-president; Winfield Sheehan, second vice-president; Fred W. Beetson, secretary-treasurer; Joseph I. Breen, director of Production Code Administration. The board of directors was reelected with two exceptions, Henry Herzbrun succeeding Emanuel Cohen for Paramount and Stanley Bergerman succeeding Carl Laemmle, Jr., for Universal.

20th Century Has Second Birthday

Darryl Zanuck, vice-president and in charge of production of 20th Century Pictures, reaching New York by plane on Tuesday, proposed a shutdown of all studios for one month to solve the double feature problem. He said production would move from California unless the taxation situation is definitely cleared.

"Cardinal Richelieu," starring George Arliss, opens Thursday at the Radio City Music Hall, and "Les Miserables," starring Fredric March and Charles Laughton, opens Saturday at the Rivoli.

The 20th Century producing company was organized in April, 1933, by Mr. Zanuck and Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, who is also president of 20th Century. With the release of "Les Miserables" and "Cardinal Richelieu" the current season's schedule calls for the production of only one more, Jack London's "Call of the Wild," in which Clark Gable will be starred.

Technicolor Net Loss For 1934 Is $282,608

Technicolor, Inc., and wholly owned subsidiaries, for the year 1934, has reported net loss, after taxes, depreciation, amortization of patents, and the like, of $282,608, and after capitalizing expenditures of $30,806 deemed to be patent and research costs. This compares with net loss of $249,396 for the previous year, after capitalizing expenditures of $36,830 deemed to be research, patent and development costs.

PLAYDATE LAW FLARES BACK AT OHIO THEATRE

Exhibitors Feel Repercussion from Bill They Sponsored; Other Legislatures Active

Repercussions from the Ohio exhibitor-sponsored Waldvogel bill, which prohibits the designation of playdates in exhibition contracts and which, on April 6, became a state law, were beginning to be felt by Cleveland exhibitors this week. The Cleveland Cinema Club, organized in 1916 to study the art of the motion picture and its educational and moral effect, officially announced that exhibitors no longer will have any excuse for not playing such "big" pictures, suitable for the entire family, as "David Copperfield," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "Sequoia," "Laddie" and others, on Friday and Saturday.

Patrons Designate Pictures

Ohio independent exhibitors sponsored the Waldvogel bill with the definite purpose of eliminating preferred playing time; they now are apparently placed in the position of having their patrons designate what pictures shall be shown and when, instead of the distributors. For many years the excuse of the exhibitors with respect to lack of availability of product for weekend shows has been that they do not play the socalled big pictures on Friday and Saturday because of block booking and the preferred playing time policy of the distributors.

After the Ohio legislature had passed the measure, Governor Davey sought an opinion on its legality from the state's attorney general, who ruled the bill unconstitutional, interfering with rights and property of copyright owners under federal laws and an unwarranted interference with the rights of private contract of the owners of film.

The bill, however, became law without the governor's signature. Major distributors are reported planning to test the new law through a move to obtain an injunction to prevent its operation.

California Tax Bill Passed

The motion picture industry suffered its first major defeat at the hands of the California legislature last week when the Assembly passed the income tax bill—which calls for a levy of one-third the federal rate and, with surtaxes combined, would make the tax on a $1,000,000 income about 76 per cent—by a vote of 70-5. Although the bill will meet opposition in the Senate, and despite indications the Senate may lower the rate to 25 per cent of the federal rate, it is expected Governor Merriam's pressure will force passage.

One ray of hope in the California legislative scene was the defeat last week of the film tax of one-half cent a foot intended to raise $20,000,000 biennially. The Assembly also killed, by 48 to 27, the "soak the rich" amendment to the state administration's income tax, which would have made the rate from 2 to 25 per cent, far more severe than the federal tax.

Other legislative developments during the week, aside from Washington, which continued quiet with respect to film matters, were as follows:

Colorado: Adjournment of the legislature automatically killed a bill calling for a two per cent ticket tax. The two per cent sales tax now in effect exempts admissions.

Illinois Sales Tax Killed

Connecticut: Motion picture interests opposed, in a hearing before the legislature's finance committee, the proposed five per cent amusement tax, terming it the "death knell" of the industry in the state. A large delegation of the state MPTO appeared before the judiciary committee to oppose a bill requiring two operators in every booth.

Florida: Imposition of a 10 per cent amusement tax held certain. Legislators over the weekend explained the tax is not a straight 10 per cent levy on all admissions, but that tickets would have an added tax of 10 cents on each. Thus a 20-cent ticket would become 30 cents.

Illinois: The House has killed the proposed three per cent sales tax bills, one of which proposed inclusion of public utilities, theatre admissions and other items. A state censorship bill is pending.

Maine: Moves to legalize Sunday shows throughout the state died in committee. A substitute bill was refused consideration, 78-58 in the House, and 24-6 in the Senate.

Minnesota: A 10 per cent admission tax bill was passed by the House. The Senate is expected to adopt the measure.

Missouri Delays Action

Missouri: Final action on the two per cent sales tax bill again was delayed by the Senate ways and means committee because, it is reported, some of the committee members are convinced the delay will bring out a strong expression of public opinion against the increase from one-half of one per cent, and they say the problem can probably be solved by broadening the base of the tax. A bill to tax vending and other coin machines has passed the House.

Nebraska: The legislature killed the proposed two per cent sales tax bill, which included a levy on all admissions, 58-25. Two other bills, one for a tax on circuits and the other calling for two men in a booth, are still before the session, but neither is expected to pass.

New York: Adjournment of the legislature this month is expected without any adverse film legislation, although much has been proposed.

Oklahoma: Distributors would be required to file their booking schedules, including all information concerning rentals, under a bill just proposed. It is reported sponsored by the Momand theatre interests.

Pennsylvania: Among bills killed last week in committee were the labor measure requiring employment of a special switchboard attendant at theatres, a bill regulating sign board advertising and one imposing a tax on sales and distribution.

Tennessee: Tennessee's 12-year-old Sunday blue laws came to an end last week by action of the legislature and cities and towns throughout the state will exercise local option on Sunday showings.

Electrical Strike Darkens Mexican Cities

Nine of Mexico's largest cities were completely dark last week as a result of a strike of electrical workers, who walked out in sympathy with electricians of Tampico, who had gone out. The government was attempting to settle the strike.

14 MORE COMPANIES MAKE 1935-36 PLANS

Several Start Next Season Production; Zanuck Announces 12 Coming from 20th Century

New product, sales and convention plans effected by 14 companies, and the annual warning to theatre owners from exhibitor organizations to proceed with caution in making 1935-36 product commitments during the pre-season sales drive now being conducted by some distributors, were principal developments this week in the move to get the new season off to an unusually early start.

First of the usual exhibitor organization warnings to members against any unnecessary early buying came from the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana and the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio.

Following are new product developments:

Bavaria Films

Bavaria Films will distribute next season a feature with Max Schmeling and Anny Ondra, made in Europe, and entitled "A Young Girl—A Young Man."

Danubia Films

Danubia Pictures, Inc., obtained several Hungarian features for 1935-36, commencing with "Hussar Romance," starring Irene Agai and Paul Javor.

Fox

With three more features to complete his 1934-35 schedule of 17 features, Sol Wurtzel, Fox Film executive producer, already is launching his program of 21 or 24 productions for next season. In various stages of script preparation or completion are: "Steamboat 'Round the Bend," for Will Rogers; "Hawk of the Desert," Warner Baxter; "Ramona," John Boles and Gilbert Roland; "Ginger," Jackie Searle and Jane Withers; "Farewell to Fifth Avenue," Cornelius Vanderbilt's novel, which may be a special; "Thunder in the Night" and "Private Beach," for Alice Faye and Jack Haley.

Fox and Educational will jointly hold a short subject booking drive, to be called the "Twentieth Birthday Party," May 3 to June 6. It will mark Educational's 20th anniversary in the short subject field.

Gaumont British

Arthur Caesar and Rian James will sail for London early in June to write feature stories for 1935-36 release by Gaumont.

Hoffberg

J. H. Hoffberg, Inc., purchased distribution rights for this country to the Hungarian feature, "March Tale," made by Ibusz in Budapest.

Latin Artists

Frank Clemente, of Latin Artists Pictures, will distribute several Mexican features in this country next season, having signed with Manuel Sereigo, who was in New York representing several producers in that country.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Action pictures are coming back next season, said Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's New York office, which cited nine features of this type in story preparation, including: "China Seas," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Typee," already in production; "Public Hero Number 1," "Forty Days of Musa Dagh," "Tell No Tales," "Joaquin Murietta," "Murder in the Fleet" and "Marines Have Landed."

Hal Roach arrived at the New York home office to confer on his short subject program for 1935-36. He probably will have 32 shorts, and several features, including two based on amateur shows, with the winners of a contest tieup with WHN and Loew theatres.

Ronald Colman will be starred in Charles Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities."

Two more 1935-36 feature properties were acquired; James Grant's Liberty Magazine story, "The Whipsaw," and the "Ma Pettengill" series, Harry Leon Wilson adapting.

Paramount

With 80 stars and featured players under contract, and 72 writers and 20 directors, Paramount in Hollywood is about to undertake a production program embracing 29 features, much of it for next season. The pictures: "Men Without Names," with Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans and Lynne Overman; "Big Broadcast of 1935," Sylvia Sidney and Herbert Marshall; "Accent on Youth"; W. C. Fields' next comedy, untitled; "Last Outpost"; "Two for Tonight," Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett and Mary Boland; "Peter Ibbetson," Gary Cooper; "Rose of the Rancho," Gladys Swarthout and John Boles; "So Red the Rose," Margaret Sullavan and Pauline Lord; "Annapolis Farewell," Sir Guy Standing; an untitled comedy with George Burns and Gracie Allen.

Ernst Lubitsch's production staff now includes: Harold Hurley, Lewis Gensler, Benjamin Glazer, Arthur Hornblow, William Lackey, William Le Baron, Albert Lewis, Louis D. Lighton, Douglas MacLean, Charles R. Rogers and E. Lloyd Sheldon.

After 12 years as an independent producer, Harold Lloyd has signed with Paramount to star in "The Milky Way," which Leo McCarey will direct.

Paramount was said to be planning a series of six "Popular Science" shorts, done in Cinecolor, for 1935-36.

Walter Wanger will produce "Every Night at Eight," with direction by Raoul Walsh, and featuring George Raft and Frances Langford.

Pioneer

John Hay Whitney cabled Melville Baker in London to acquire stories for Pioneer's 1935-36 Technicolor feature program.

Popular Pictures

Alexander Dumas' "Mark of Zorro," made as a silent by Douglas Fairbanks years ago, will be the first of 18 features to be produced and distributed next season by Popular Pictures. Lou Berman is president and associated with him is Bryan Foy. The budget will be $2,000,000. A distribution system for the United States and Great Britain has been arranged. After "Mark of Zorro" will come "Lavender and Old Lace," "Big Blonde," "Love Is No Sin," "Ladies on the Loose," "Lovers No More," besides two musicals.

Screen Gems

Sam Mintz, president of Screen Gems, Inc., purchased "Barney Google," newspaper cartoon strip, from King Features, for an animated cartoon series. The deal, for an unnamed number of shorts, was arranged by the William Morris interests.

United Artists

Darryl Zanuck, production head of 20th Century, and Harry Brand, his publicist, arrived in New York Tuesday from Hollywood on the second anniversary of the company.

Also arriving was William Goetz, vice-president of 20th Century, who sails Saturday for London to complete arrangements for interchanging talent with London Films, another United Artists affiliate, during 1935-36.

Mr. Zanuck announced 20th Century's enlarged schedule of 12 productions, as compared with six this season, all to be released through United Artists.

Ten are already in the hands of a writing staff, two more being plotted for adaptation. They go before the cameras beginning in July.

Stars already under contract to 20th Century include Ronald Colman, Fredric March, George Arliss, Wallace Beery, Lawrence Tibbett, Loretta Young. Among the directors Mr. Zanuck has signed are Gregory La Cava, Roy Del Ruth, John Ford and Rowland V. Lee. The adapting writers are Nunnally Johnson, Bess Meredyth, Garrett Fort, George Marion, Jr., Phillip McDonald, Harold Long, Howard Smith and W. P. Lipscomb.

The executive staff, headed by William Goetz, vice-president and associate producer, will be: William Dover, business manager, and Aiden Roark, scenario editor. Associate producers are Raymond Griffith and Henry Duffy.

The following films are in preparation:

"Ivanhoe," by Sir Walter Scott; "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo," Ronald Colman, directed by John Ford from the scenario by Nunnally Johnson; "Sing, Governor, Sing!" with Paul Whiteman's band, Phil Baker and "his stooges," and Rubinoff, with songs and musical score by Gus Kahn and Arthur Johnson; "The Diamond Horseshoe," Lawrence Tibbett, with screen play by Bess Meredyth and George Marion, Jr.; "Shark Island," starring Fredric March and based on the life of Dr. Samuel Alexander Mudd from the book by his daughter; "Professional Soldier," Wallace Beery, with scenario by Harold Long.

Four films for which no stars have been selected are "Nile Patrol," by Phillip McDonald; "Gentlemen, the King!" by Howard Smith; "Earthbound," by W. P. Lipscomb, and "It Had to Happen," by Howard Smith.

Universal

While N. L. Manheim, foreign executive, was arriving in California from New York to talk about 1935-36 production with Carl Laemmle, James R. Grainger was returning East after spending several weeks aiding in selection of the new program, for which 20 features already have been lined up. Mr. Grainger returned to New York to prepare for the annual sales convention in Chicago May 27.

Mr. Grainger also set the release dates for six new productions: "Magnificent Obsession," in August; "Showboat" and "Sutter's Gold," October 1; Margaret Sullavan's next, October 15, with "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Hangover Murders" following. "Under Two Flags" will be another 1935-36 release.

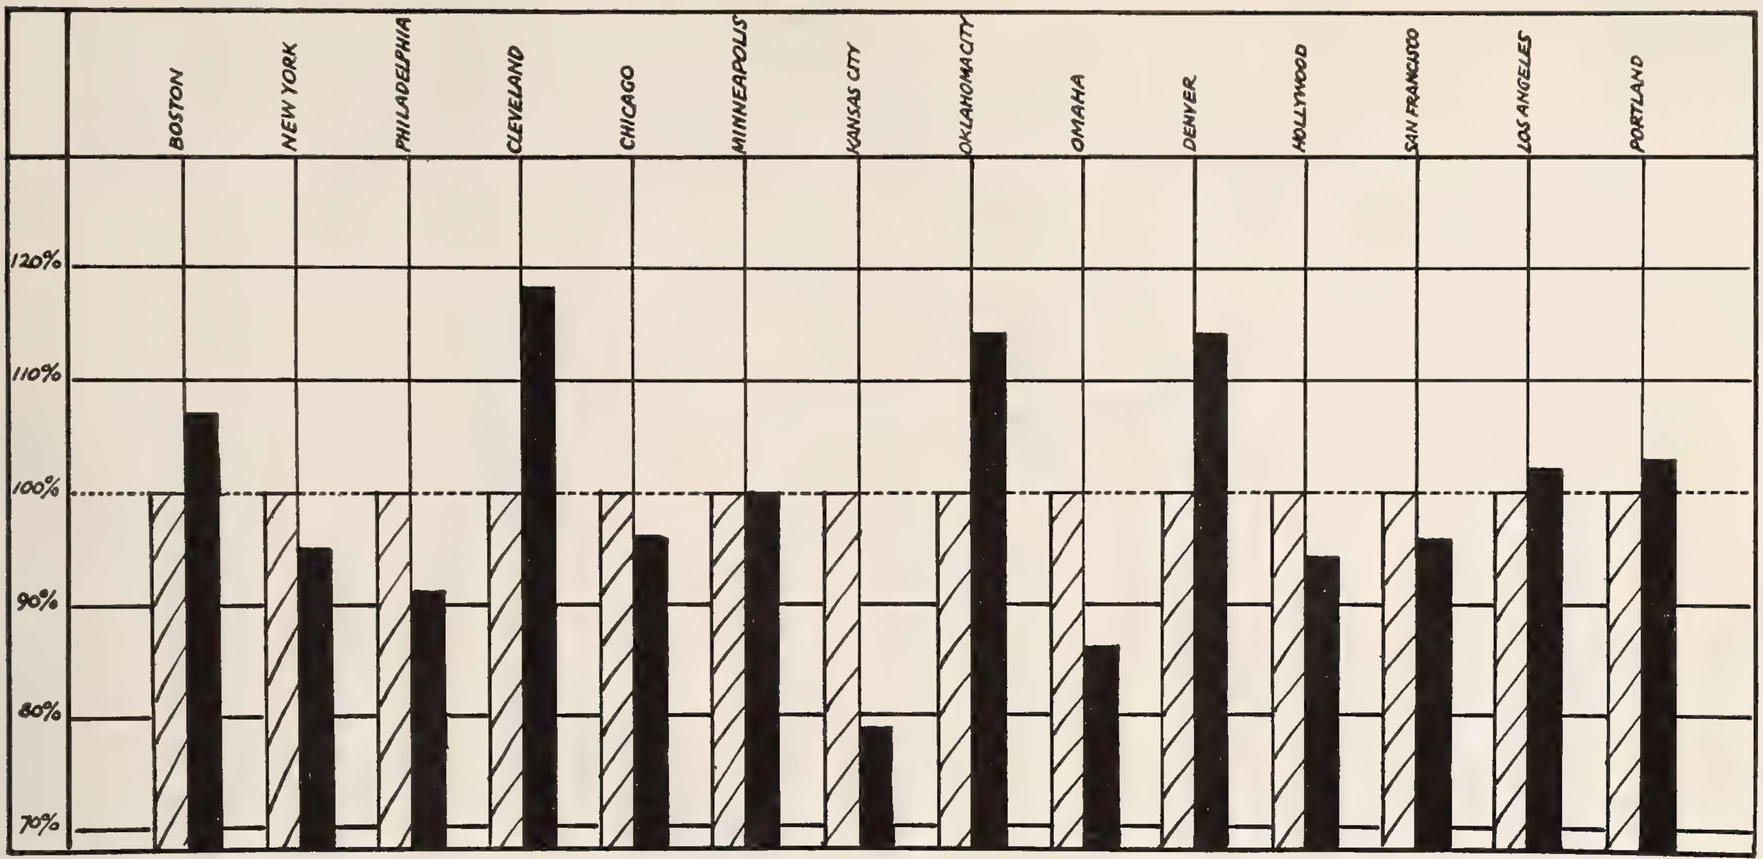
Warner

Major Albert Warner, Gradwell Sears and A. W. Smith, home office executives, were in Hollywood conferring with Jack Warner, production head. They will also set plans for the sales convention, to be in Los Angeles in June.

Still to be released this season are "In Caliente," with Dolores Del Rio; "Oil for the Lamps of China," second Cosmopolitan production; "Goose and the Gander" and "Stranded," both films starring Kay Francis and George Brent, and the first Marion Davies-Cosmopolitan production, "Page Miss Glory." There are 14 others to complete the 1934-35 schedule.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of fourteen key cities in the three weeks period from March 23 to April 6, 1935, with the receipts from the same cities during the previous three weeks, from March 2 to March 16. For each city the gross for the earlier period is taken as 100 per cent.

Radin Gets Retraction From Paper on Soviet Story

Matty Radin, head of Levrad Amusement Corporation, this week obtained a printed retraction of the statement in the Washington Herald to the effect that the Belasco theatre in Washington was showing films designed to spread Soviet propaganda.

The Washington Herald, a Hearst paper, in its retraction ran stories on its front page and in the amusement section stating that the pictures at the Belasco were booked solely on the basis of artistic merit and without any intention of Communistic propaganda. The situation arose as a result of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S survey of Soviet pictures and theatres showing them throughout the United States, which the Hearst papers re-wrote to coincide with the Hearst anti-Soviet policy.

Breen to Get Vacation For Two Months Abroad

Joseph I. Breen, Production Code Administrator, will leave for a two-month vacation in Europe around the first of July, it was announced this week at the New York office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

This will be the first holiday Mr. Breen has had since he became a member of the MPPDA's executive staff five years ago. During his vacation his office in Hollywood will handle his work with the cooperation of the New York office.

Universal Drops Post Advertising

After 29 years of intermittent advertising and 10 years of continuous weekly space in the Saturday Evening Post, Universal Pictures this week discontinued the policy. The Post advertising was the first ever inserted in any publication by Carl Laemmle, Universal president, and during the 29 years which followed the expenditure in this publication alone ran into many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The space taken by Universal in the Post was invariably a one-column display inviting the opinions of readers concerning the company's product. The company recently offered a $50 prize for the best letter written on any single Universal picture or the company's product as a whole. Universal maintained a staff of eight persons in its home office to answer letters from readers exclusively.

U. A., Warner Are Named In Two Plagiarism Suits

Two suits charging plagiarism, and asking damages in excess of $1,500,000 were filed against United Artists and Warner in federal court, New York, Tuesday. The action brought against United Artists, by Mort Eisman, Clare Bellar and Robert Shayon, asks an injunction and accounting and damages of $1,000,000 on "Roman Scandals," which is alleged to be a plagiarism of "Oh, Shah," written in 1929 and said to have been submitted to Eddie Cantor in 1934. The action names both Mr. Cantor and Samuel Goldwyn.

The second action, naming Warner, First National and Witmark, music publishing subsidiary of Warner, is brought by Irving Gielow of Chicago, who alleges song and story plagiarism in "Flirtation Walk," of his drama, "Give Me This Night." The plaintiff asks injunctive relief, an accounting and $500,000 damages.

Dillon Elected To Fox Board

John R. Dillon of Hayden, Stone and Company, was elected to the board of directors of Fox Film Corporation this week to fill the vacancy left by the death of Richard F. Hoyt.

Mr. Dillon's appointment was made at the annual meeting of stockholders in New York Tuesday, at which the other members of the board were re-elected. The directors re-elected all the officers of the company.

Doubting Thomas

(Fox-DeSylva)

Comedy

In this novelly different Rogers picture, the whole show, rather than formula concentration on one central theme or character, is the outstanding entertainment and potential exploitation value. Nothing that patrons have come to expect of Will Rogers is missing, but there is something surprisingly unique to both entertain and talk about. Standardized production technique is cleverly violated as, all things being considered and undoubtedly smartly, Rogers is for the most part "played down." Yet as practically all others in turn have the spotlight focused on them, the stage is so set that his one big moment is a riot of glee. It comes in the anticlimax, when, via reproduced screen test, Rogers contributes a ridiculous burlesque of a crooner singing "Blue of the Night." Hilarious as is the scene, the element of surprise that accompanies it so swept the preview audience off its feet that the accompanying sound effects were completely drowned out by the merriment. Sound is hardly necessary, as Rogers' dainty makeup and "mike-eating" antics convey all necessary meaning.

The show is all comedy. It has a simple and understandable, amusing premise. Mrs. Pampanelli, torchbearer of the amateur Little Theatre movement, has no difficulty in convincing Paula Brown, Tom's wife, that she is destined to be a great dramatic actress. Hubby's objections are met with scornful resentment and the accusation that he's selfishly stifling his wife's career. The show is presented, a farcical amateur thing.

Then Tom starts to play cards. In collusion with LaMaze, Hollywood talent scout, he has had the show photographed. Bringing in Von Blitzen, the hotel washroom attendant, and palming him off as a great Hollywood director, the histrionics of Paula and several others are projected, only to have Von Blitzen sneer derisively at them. Then comes Tom in his crooner satire to be acclaimed.

Essentially the attraction is an exploitation show. Naturally the Will Rogers name is the dominating interest-creating factor, but no one should lose sight of all that is additionally commercially valuable. Patrons may be assured that "Doubting Thomas" is ridiculous amusement with a laugh in almost every line of dialogue and bit of action and a burst of hilarity for the windup.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Bride of Frankenstein

(Universal)

Drama

Horror is the showmanship and commercial value of this picture. The manner in which, about three and a half years ago, the theatregoing public received the original "Frankenstein," as well as the success accruing to similar intervening pictures, amply demonstrated the field for this type of picture under proper showmanship guidance.

A good deal of the picture is in the nature of a sequel. Phoenix-like, the beastly monster, product of looted graveyards, rises unharmed from the destroyed windmill. As it wreaks havoc upon all with whom it comes in contact, in the most fiendish ways imaginable, Henry Frankenstein, again played by Colin Clive, is forced by the ghoulish Doctor Pretorious to collaborate in the fabrication of a mate for the monster. Running a course that should without difficulty precipitate the maximum number of screams, gasps, chills and thrills, the story builds to a point where amidst a sensational collection of ultra-scientific apparatus, Pretorious and Frankenstein expose the mummy-like female figure to the fury and flame of a crashing thunder storm. Life comes to the fantastic creature. The monster is brought to her. Each shuns the other with an unearthly hate. The monster which has come to know the tenderness of human beings, even though that emotion has been the result of fear, wants nothing to do with anything artificial. Pulling a lever, he blows himself, the mate, Pretorious and all the others to destruction.

Even though much time has elapsed since presentation of "Frankenstein," it is hardly to be doubted that the impression it created will serve to give this picture the benefit of a running head start in public curiosity. As there was no way of concealing the horrifying highlights of that picture, there is no way, either, of toning down or softening the fantastic illusionary reality. In its own way, "The Bride of Frankenstein" is equally daring, yet at the same time so widely different in its scare-power that it demands showmanship consideration and respect in its own peculiar way, putting audiences in the proper mythical mood to look upon the picture as novel entertainment, without becoming too serious minded about what they see and feel.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Produced by Carl Laemmle, Jr. Directed by James Whale. An original screen play by John L. Balderston and William Hurlbut. Photographed by John Mescall. Music by Franz Waxman. Assistant directors, Harry Menke and Joseph McDonough. Art director, Charles D. Hall. Film editor, Ted Kent. Editorial supervision, Maurice Pivar. Stone of Silver Creek

(Universal)

Western

A western film with a difference and a popular star, this production has the ingredients for audiences who like their action films, and especially when played in the weekend position. Although there is somewhat less of hard riding, shooting and general jousting than is usual in westerns, this picture rather makes up for that deficiency in that it has more story backbone.

Charles Buck Jones is the star, which in itself should be a strong point in the selling of a western. He is supported, in addition to his horse, Silver, by Noel Francis, Niles Welch and Marion Shilling in particular. The story reflects the successful effort of a preacher in a rough western town of years ago to reconcile the hardboiled owner of the town's main saloon to the idea of a church in the town. With the addition of romance, which is three-cornered, involving six persons, a menace in the form of two disgruntled crooks, and a bit of comedy and song, it is, on the whole, an entertaining story, giving a rather different flair to the western.

Jones is the hardboiled Mr. Stone, who operates the saloon in his own two-fisted manner, but entirely on the square. Miss Francis is his chief entertainer, and in love with Grady Sutton, owner of the local hardware store. Stone saves an old miner from the crooked work of two gamblers, and insists on becoming the old man's partner. The latter's daughter, Miss Shilling, is more than a little interested in Welch, the minister, who is in love with her. Welch turns down Stone's sincerely offered contribution for church repairs, because he cannot square his teachings with the operation of a saloon, though he likes Stone personally. Stone, it is understood, has left a sweetheart showgirl in the east after a quarrel several years before.

The two crooks try to get even, but Stone beats them to the draw. Welch overhears them plotting revenge, and urges Stone not to use force but to permit him to reason with them. His reasoning is unsuccessful, and Welch is shot. Stone goes after the two, when they escape, and engages them after a fast chase in the mountains. As one comes up behind him, help arrives, and Welch saves Stone's life with a well directed shot. Returning, Welch finds Miss Shilling waiting for him, Miss Francis and Sutton decide to marry, and Stone finds the girl he left in the east at the saloon, to which she came in answer to his request for new talent.—Aaronson, New York.

(Columbia)

Comedy Drama

The entertainment which "Party Wire" provides is of the character which average audiences appreciate. In addition to that quality, it affords a showmanship and exploitation medium which, the title tone graphically indicating, can be adapted economically in many ways. Basically the theme is romantic love interest, amplified by unusual topical comedy and as it turns dramatic and near tragic in the anticlimax a vein of tense suspense is introduced.

The locale is a typical American small town where the residents' chief diversion and means of picking up the latest news gossip is by listening in on the party line telephones. The townsfolk, particularly mothers of marriageable daughters, are anxiously awaiting the homecoming of Matthew Putnam. Object of much fuss, he seems to be looking only for his old pal Bill Oliver and his daughter Marge, the only ones in town who apparently haven't paid much attention to his arrival.

Romance grows apace for Matt and Marge, until Bill discovers discrepancies in church accounts which Marge and Roy have been working on. An innocent remark made by Roy in phone conversation with Bill and overheard by listeners-in is misinterpreted and the finger of scandal is pointed at Marge. Eventually learning of the gossip, Matt makes plans to marry Marge immediately. A business matter preventing his arrival at the church on time, Bill, thinking he is responsible for the lovers' troubles, attempts suicide.

An indignation meeting, called to protest Matt's action in discharging all local employees of his dairy plant is attended by his Aunt Nettie, who in a scathing tirade denounces the community for all that has been said and done. Having been an inveterate listener herself, she has all the dope about everybody's private life. Fearing her revelations, they promise to refrain from party line gossip, which they of course don't.

When Bill recovers, Matt and Marge start on a Niagara Falls honeymoon, while the town returns to its business of picking up the receiver.

Exploitation, particularly in the smaller towns and more compact neighborhoods, that takes advantage of the suggested idea of using the telephone to let patrons know about the worth of this show, should be decidedly beneficial in substantiating other forms of advertising.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Cameraman, Al Seigler. Sound engineer, Glenn Rominger. Film editor, Viola Lawrence. Associate, producer, Robert North. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 65 minutes. Release date, April 27, 1935. Red Morning

(RKO Radio)

Melodrama

Melodramatic and averagely entertaining material, this picture tells a tale of the Southern Seas, the romance of an insurance agent and a Portuguese girl, the sabotage of a freighter for the insurance money by the villains of the piece, and the assistance rendered by friendly island natives after the girl saved the life of one of them.

The production appears to have enough action to warrant a billing toward the end of the week, though not as much as the title might indicate. There is comparatively little of story strength to constitute a selling factor; nor does the cast indicate any names which, by themselves, will serve on the marquee to draw patronage. Thus the film will have to be sold on the basis of the action and melodrama in it.

Steffi Duna and Regis Toomey share the leads, names familiar if not outstanding. In chief support are Raymond Hatton and Mitchell Lewis.

Miss Duna is second mate on the freighter owned by her father, Lewis. She and Toomey, insurance agent in the islands, are engaged. She promises to give up the sea and marry him after this one difficult voyage, taking a short cut through the islands to their destination. En route Miss Duna is locked in her cabin, Hatton, the first mate, slugs Lewis, and the crew is permitted to drown, with the exception of Hatton and two seamen working with him. He thinks the ship has gone down, but it has fastened securely on a reef. Miss Duna and her father, in an open boat, reach a small island and are in time to save the life of the chief's son with their medical kit. Lewis dies on the island, and his daughter leaves.

Hatton meanwhile has reported the loss of the ship and all hands, working in league with two men on shore. Toomey refuses to believe the story and charters a small boat to search the islands. He and Miss Duna meet and she is instrumental in rescuing him from cannibals. They learn that Hatton and his confederates, discovering the ship did not go down, have set out to sink it with dynamite. Miss Duna calls on the native she saved, and the war canoes rally to protect the ship. They are just too late, the ship is blown up, and Hatton with it, but his confederates are caught, and the romance of Miss Duna and Toomey is completed.—Aaronson, New York.

Song of Happiness

(Amkino)

Drama

An interesting and rather well executed production is this latest importation from the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, which nevertheless has its wide thread of propaganda as, it would seem, every picture coming out of Russia must have. In this case is told how the great Soviet state makes every effort to seek out and develop the potential latent talents of its people, even though they may live in a far province of the wide-flung Russian state.

There is rather less of propaganda, directly put, in this picture than in many a feature from Russia in recent months, and it is comparatively a reasonably effective drama.

This feature is said to recount the story of the life of one of the Soviet's greatest artists, who after years of hardship and struggle has achieved recognition by the Musical Conservatory of Moscow. The execution of this picture indicates that the Russian producers are coming more clearly to recognize the value of dramatic plot development in the weaving of a motion picture, with a portion of comedy, and romance, and conflict, instead of just conflict alone.

The story is set in the Mari Province on the Volga River, and in Moscow, and tells of a young lumberman, Kavirlia, and his sweetheart, Anuk. Despite the supposed socialist operation, a cruel boss still lords it over the men, and when he breaks Kavirlia's home-made flute, the boy fights, thinks he has killed the man, and escapes to the woods. There he is found by a petty thief, who forces him to work with him at the markets, the boy playing, he singing. But one day he steals, escapes and Kavirlia is captured, landing in a Moscow reform school.

There he learns to read that he may write to Anuk, and the superintendent of the school takes an interest in his playing. He succeeds in having the boy enrolled in the Conservatory of Music, under the special attention of an old German music teacher. Meanwhile, in Mari, the girl determines to learn to read and write that she may understand the boy's letters. Under an assumed name, Kavirlia, after five years, becomes an artist with the flute, and at a reform school concert he is recognized by his former companion. Anuk, when she reads of his success, goes to see him, but he pretends he does not recognize her, fearful that he is a murderer. The superintendent learns the truth, the boy is told he is free, and he returns in triumph to his province, to teach others. There, too, he and Anuk are reconciled.

It is a well told story of a boy's musical and mental struggle against the force of circumstances, and his romantic difficulties. There are numerous subtitles in English.—Aaronson, New York.

Sanders of the River

(London Films - United Artists)

Spectacle Drama

In its very different way, this picture breaks new ground almost as decisively as did "The Private Life of Henry VIII."

The producers' achievement is that they have successfully combined definite story values of a popular type with pictorial and "documentary" merits superior to those of the average travelogue. Outstanding spectacular qualities are reinforced by an impressive use of sound; here again realism and popular appeal go hand in hand, the reproduction of authentic African melodies being accompanied by a series of specially written and "catchy" song numbers.

Essentially the film is a panorama of native life and customs in Africa, with a marked emphasis on the pageantry of tribal life as expressed in ritual dances, war chants and actual warfare. Additional is a story dramatizing white rule, based on the personal prestige of a single British officer, which maintains peace among tribes to whom mutual hatred is a thousand years old tradition. Still further is a love story with a native chief as leading actor, and that chief is Paul Robeson, in his best vein.

Robeson has a whole series of swinging numbers, of which "The Song of the Spear" is the most effective, but for many patrons there will be even greater appeal in the dramatic rendering of the authentic "Lion Song."

The story, from a series by the late Edgar Wallace, centers on the personality of Sanders, British Commissioner in a district of Africa peopled by antagonistic tribes and exploited by slave traders and crooked importers. Fear and love of Sanders alone keep the tribes from each other's throats, but he has a valuable native ally in Bosambo, an ex-convict who so successfully defeats slave raiders that Sanders confirms him in a chieftainship he has usurped.

Selling values are numerous. The beauty of the settings and the big scale of the spectacle are assets in themselves and they frame incidents of striking originality. Typical is the "palaver" of Sanders with Mofoluba. The king, surrounded by his warriors, advancing menacingly on the solitary white man, is mastered by his personality. Equally dramatic are the scenes of native battle; the warriors, magnificent types, live their parts, and there is an atmosphere of barbaric splendor about the action. The authenticity of the picture, vouched for by the co-operation of the British authorities, is an enormous asset, but it is more important that, in this case, authenticity has resulted in much better entertainment than could have been achieved by studio convention.

"Sanders of the River," emphatically an out-of-the-rut picture, can best be sold by emphasis on that fact. A view of the film is certainly desirable, if only to convince the exhibitor of the exceptional pictorial values he can offer on top of the personality value of Paul Robeson. Excellent as he is, the real stars are the thousands of natives who so amazingly re-live their primitive but vigorous and picturesque tribal histories.—ALLAN, London.

Escape Me Never

(British & Dominions-U.A.)

Romance

There is a big play title to publicize here, and with it the name of the actress who has made it a London and New York success. Behind the play is the book, or rather books, by Margaret Kennedy in which the eccentric-genius family of Sanger made its appearances. The film itself is brilliant in its own right and the star, Elisabeth Bergner, as on the stage, acts magnificently in a highly original and altogether fascinating role. Miss Bergner's personality is undoubtedly exceptional, fitted to the role; the part of Gemma Jones, waif, unmarried mother and victim of a super-egoist musician, offers the star the full range of farce, comedy, irony, tragedy. The theme of a woman who, knowing the worst of a man, chooses to remain with him, has its own possibilities for exploitation. The complete sincerity and realism of the picture make anything like stunt methods out of place.

There is a tempestuous and effective introduction of Gemma in the very first scenes. A schoolgirl breaks away from a party being escorted over the Venetian palace tenanted by Sir Ivor and Lady McClean and their daughter Fenella, and invades the private apartments. Questioned, she confesses that she has attached herself to the schoolgirls in order to share their meal. Actually she is homeless. Casually, she tells the horrified English that she has a baby and that she is living with a musician, son of the famous composer Sanger. The description fits Caryl Sanger, who is informally engaged to Fenella. The McCleans hastily leave Venice for the Dolomites, leaving no address for Caryl.

Actually, Gemma's companion is Sebastian, brother of Caryl. Gemma realizes what has happened when, for the first time, she meets Caryl. The three, penniless, tramp the mountains to find Fenella. Sebastian meets her first, and she is fascinated by him, but Gemma interrupts them and tells Fenella of the misunderstanding. The lovers are reconciled.

Sebastian, Gemma and the baby go to London, where Sebastian hopes to get his new ballet produced. To support him, Gemma takes a job as maidservant. Sebastian continues to see Fenella, and Gemma, now married to Sebastian, warns Fenella of his completely selfish character. Gemma's baby dies. Fenella is willing to run away with Sebastian but Caryl half strangles his brother. Sebastian, temporarily penitent, takes Gemma in his arms.

Backgrounds are varied and excellent. Both Venetian and Dolomite scenes were done on location. In London, the theatre set in which the ballet is played is effective and so is the ballet itself. Supporting members of the cast are all good, the English society recruit Penelope Dudley Ward picturing Fenella excellently and the two Sangers being well played by Hugh Sinclair and Griffith Jones. The celebrated Irene Vanbrugh adds a delightful comedy touch as Lady McClean.

It is a picture to see, if only as an example of what England can do. If its appeal is limited in certain quarters it will be a limitation due to high artistic merit.—ALLAN, London

Bolero

(Metropolis-Tapernoux)

Interesting

An interesting subject, this is a pictorial accompaniment to Ravel's famous musical composition, "Bolero," and is of high quality, both in the symphonic rendition of the music and the performances of the players. Entirely without dialogue, the story is told in many episodes of the gypsy girl who dances for her gypsy lover, then leaves him to dance for wealthier men. He passes the years in sorrow in search of her, finally finding her, still young and beautiful, in a cabaret. He seizes her, and the mask she has long worn falls from her face. Class audiences should be especially appreciative.—Running time, 14 minutes.

Song and Dance

The singing Tic-Toc girl trio tie together the vaudeville picture to a degree, with their plugs as switchboard operators. The three Dodge Brothers do some lively clogging, Henry Scott in mittens plays the piano, Olga Baclanova sings while the Mentonette girls present a Russian dance, and there's Murray Lane with his Harmoniacs. The Tic-Toc girls sing a Priscilla song in costume. The clogging and harmonica acts carry the production.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Medbury in Hollywood

(Columbia)

Fair

John P. Medbury, in this number of his "Laughing with Medbury" series, takes his screen audience to Hollywood, there to see that which makes up the town itself, rather than the motion picture aspects of the city. Mr. Medbury's continuous attempts at humor rather too often slip into the classification of the pun, and rather too often are not especially funny—as is the way with punning. There are a few laughs, however. In general, only a fair subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Flying Oil

Amusing

When the peddler comes around with a magic flying oil which permits the one touched by it to fly at will, the result is a rather amusing cartoon effort, of the Terry-Toons series. The animated animals take to the air, and the angry farmer refuses to buy until the cat pours oil on him. He goes up like a rocket, explodes and comes down with his clothes, via parachute. A fairly amusing number.—Running time, six minutes.

Tuneful

A tuneful number in the Song Hit series, which features vocal renditions of various singing groups, this is set in a Union army camp during the Civil War. Southern prisoners are brought in and they and the Union soldiers vie with each other in offering popular songs of the North and South of that day, including "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground." It is an entertaining subject.—Running time, nine minutes.

In the Spotlight

(Vitaphone)

Good

The dancing of the nimble-footed Hal LeRoy, elongated stepper, and that of Dorothy Lee, small and attractive, are the bright spots in this subject. Miss Lee, daughter of a shoe manufacturer, returns from abroad, sees LeRoy, shy deckhand, dancing, and invites him to the advertising show. There she makes him overcome his shyness, and appear with her in the floor show of her father's company. The two dance in expert fashion, against an ensemble background, the subject being for the most part tuneful and entertaining.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Hold That Shark

(Columbia)

Action

There is real action, and plenty of it in this number of the World of Sport series. Pictured are the hardy fishermen of the eastern coast, who indulge in a little "quiet" shark fishing during their off moments. They pursue the big killers of the ocean in a small boat, are swamped twice, but finally land their catch—and a big one—after a lively battle. There is plenty of punch in the subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

We Aim to Please

(Paramount)

Good

This rates about standard with the others in the popular Popeye the Sailor series of cartoons. This time Popeye and Olive Oyl open a restaurant, and their first "customers" are two neighboring chiselers, including Popeye's perennial enemy. When he begins to get rough after refusing to pay his check, Popeye takes his spinach and the rest is easy. It is an entertaining cartoon.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Gumshoes

(Columbia)

Fair

This can be considered only fair comedy, as Monte Collins and Tom Kennedy, as a pair of weak-kneed and frightened hotel detectives, are berated by the manager and set out through the corridors in search of the perpetrator of a number of jewel robberies. The thief turns out to be a trained gorilla, which pursues the detectives through rooms, into closets and out on a flagpole overhanging the street, in true, and fairly amusing comedy style.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Guess Stars

(Vitaphone)

Good

The three Radio Ramblers, expert imitators of personalities prominent on the air, are at their entertaining best in this amusing subject. Three radio repair men, they are called to a gangster's home to fix the radio, and he insists (with a gun) on hearing Chevalier, Powell, Vallee, Rubinoff, Cantor and others. The boys oblige, in excellent simulation, and finally frighten their host by a siren call and police broadcast.—Running time, 10 minutes.

NEWSREELS ACT TO STRENGTHEN UNITS

Sir Malcolm Campbell Heads British Movietone; "Peace" Sought; Butterfield at Pathe

The motion picture newsreel both here and abroad, was the subject this week of considerable news prominence, as follows:

1. Prevailing newsreel competition in England became more acute with the strengthening of British Movietone under the new leadership of Sir Malcolm Campbell, and the sailing to London of A. J. Richard, Paramount newsreel chief in the United States, to "tighten up" that company's British newsreel division.

2. A newsreel "peace conference" was proposed in London.

3. Allyn Butterfield resigned as an editorial member of Hearst Metrotone to join Pathe News in an executive capacity.

4. Union newsreel cameramen continued deadlocked with newsreel managements in negotiations to interpret working hour provisions of the code.

Sir Malcolm Campbell, English sportsman and holder of the world's automobile speed record, this week accepted the editorship of British Movietone News, English affiliate of Fox Movietone News' international newsreel organization. He will also be chief news commentator.

Expansion of the British organization, reflecting the prevailing acute newsreel competition in England, was effected at the same time, when the management in London departmentalized the reel with special commentators for all subjects, which is identical with the construction of the American reel, produced in New York by Truman Talley. Added to the British staff in the expansion were Tom Webster, London Daily Mail cartoonist; G. Ward Price, war correspondent and political commentator; Captain R. C. Lyle, British Broadcasting Company racing authority; Guy Nickall, noted oarsman and sports observer, and Beryl de Queron, who will narrate on women's subjects.

Gerald Sanger, who has been editing the British newsreel for five years, becomes producer. Sir Malcolm's new post is analogous to that occupied in the United States by Laurence Stallings as editor and Lowell Thomas as chief commentator, while Mr. Sanger's position as producer compares with that of Mr. Talley. Mr. Sanger was in New York two months ago studying Mr. Talley's setup.

Appointment of Sir Malcolm, Mr. Talley pointed out, is in line with the policy adopted one year ago by Fox Movietone News of departmentalizing the subject, which resulted at the time in the obtaining of Mr. Stallings and Mr. Thomas by Movietone here.

Sir Malcolm will be released temporarily to attempt new speed records on the automobile track. Mr. Stallings has a like contract with Movietone, having recently been released to write in Hollywood. The first release in London under the new setup will be on April 25th.

British Movietone News, first sound newsreel outside the United States, was established in 1929 by Mr. Talley, on behalf of the Fox interests, in association with the wealthy Harmsworth-Northcliffe newspaper and political interests in England.

Fox Film's interest in British Movietone, which it controls, is held through Fox Film, Ltd., London, a Fox Film subsidiary. The minority control and actual management is in the hands of Hon. Esmond Harmsworth, Member of Parliament, who is a son of Lord Rothermere, owner of the powerful Northcliffe Press and London's Daily Mail.

Paramount News Plans To Strengthen London Unit

That Paramount News has in mind a strengthening of its newsreel organization in England was learned over the weekend when A. J. Richard, editor, sailed from New York to "tighten up" the structure abroad.

"Peace" Conference Proposed As Grand National Sequel

Motion picture newsreel managements in London last week admitted the necessity of holding a "peace" conference to eliminate the notoriety and difficulties which have been attached to the acute competition. The move came after a run-in at the Grand National Steeplechase, three weeks ago at Aintree, between forces of Gaumont-British News and British Movietone, which held exclusive filming rights to the race, and the British newsreel affiliates of Pathe, Paramount and Universal, which "poached" the event. It is customary in England to award newsreel rights to the highest bidder.

"The whole trade is fed up with the newsreel dispute and 'competition'," said an editorial week in London's Daily Film Renter. He reported that Jeffrey Bernerd, Gaumont British executive, on behalf of his company and British Movietone, had proposed a conference "so that peace can be proclaimed."

At a meeting of newsreel chiefs at London six months ago, Gaumont-British and British Movietone were understood to have declared their willingness to join with the other three reels in a pooling of rights, if a schedule of charges proportioned among the companies were agreed upon. While Paramount is said to have agreed, Pathe and Universal were declared to have refused.

Newsreel competition "is a very good thing." observed the Daily Film Renter, "but when it reaches the point that free (fist) fights take place and thuggery enters—well, somebody is going to get hurt."

It has been reported variously that some of the "poaching" newsreel cameramen at the Grand National were injured in a melee that followed their attempts to steal race pictures.

The trade in London, newsreels included, holds the opinion that the payment of prices out of all proportion for exclusive rights to film public events, and which can, and always are, pirated by the others, "can lead nowhere."

Butterfield Joins Pathe In Executive Capacity

Allyn Butterfield resigned abruptly this week from Hearst Metrotone's editorial board and from the post of director of sound control in recording, to join Courtland Smith at Pathe News, where he will serve in an executive capacity. His immediate job will be the handling of the new Pathe News radio program sponsored by the Bromo-Seltzer headache powder interests.

Mr. Butterfield, who is accredited with creating the Giant TravelType Crane for filming, started in production in 1915, as a Vitagraph actor, and for the next eight years was identified with one or another of the large companies, editing features and serials. Turning to newsreels in 1923, Mr. Butterfield joined International Newsreel's editing staff, and when Carl Laemmle started Universal Newsreel again in 1929, he became associate editor, subsequently taking complete charge, resigning last year to join Hearst Metrotone in New York.

While with Universal Newsreel, he conceived and produced several short subject series, including "Stranger Than Fiction," "Going Places with Lowell Thomas," and "World's Greatest Newsreel Thrills." In 1933 he prepared material for Universal's feature, "The Fighting President."

Unions and Newsreels Deadlocked On Working Conditions Issue

The meeting between representatives of the newsreel cameramen's union and newsreel company heads over working conditions for the cameramen and the failure of the Code to provide an increase in employment, continued during the week, apparently to little avail. Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth met with the heads of the companies late last week to effect a settlement and report had it that he told them that unless they came to a conclusion immediately, the NRA will settle the matter.

Under provisions of the film code, newsreel cameramen are not permitted to work more than 320 hours in eight weeks, or 40 hours weekly, but the code stipulates that these hours are to be computed from the time such employees leave their base of operation with their equipment until the time of their return, or are required to remain in a designated place.

The clause states further that "contacting and planning shall not be computed as working hours," which, according to O. V. Johnson, business manager of Local 644, New York, of the International Photographers of the Motion Picture Industry and the IATSE, means in effect that a cameraman may sit in the newsreel office for four hours awaiting an assignment which lasts only two hours and then be credited with but two hours' work.

The committee which has been meeting on the situation consists, in addition to Mr. Johnson, of William H. Strafford, business manager of Local 666, Chicago; Lou Krouse of the IATSE; A. J. Richard, Paramount News; Jack Connolly, Pathe News, and William P. Montague, Paramount. Last week Charles E. Ford of Universal and M. D. Clofine of Hearst Metrotone, also participated.

Berlin Opens Film Congress April 25

Arrangements have been completed for the International Film Congress, which will be held in Berlin from April 25 to May 1. It is the first such congress since the meeting in Paris in 1926.

Believing any international congress futile, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America will not participate. As far as is known, no American companies have accepted invitations.

Numerous committees, which will touch upon virtually all phases of motion picture activity, will deliberate at intervals throughout the session. These committees will be appointed on the second day of the congress, their final meetings to be held on April 30.

On April 29 will be held the International Exhibitors' Congress simultaneously with the annual general meeting of the German Exhibitors' Association. Sessions end May 1.

IT'S HOME, SWEET HOME TO STUDIO WORKERS
HOLLYWOOD LOOKS TO PRODUCING ABROAD
DE MILLE MAKES SPECTACLE OF A SPECTACLE
EIGHT FILMS FINISHED; EIGHT GO INTO WORK

HOLLYWOOD'S studio workers, rank and file, have stopped making mental reservations, for Flordia, Carolina, Jersey, Delaware, Arizona or New Mexico.

They have even stopped making train reservations. Time tables have been put away, and their lots at "Escrow Gables" and "Mortgage Manor" have been hoisted in price.

Hollywood again is proceeding on the even tenor of its way. Even the basses and coloraturas are proceeding that way.

According to statistics, studio workers own about $320,000,000 worth of real estate in California, exclusive of personal property, which ownership somehow roots the colony in the California clay.

On the basis of accurate computation, an expert on facts and figures stated, there could not be enough corner lots and choice plots to go around, wherever and whenever the colony moved. If also the old "land rush" method were decided upon to allocate lots, the engineers of the moving project, less fleet of foot than the Hollywood cowboys and cowgirls, might be crushed in the rush.

So as against Florida, Carolina, Jersey or Nome, Hollywood, dear Hollywood, is still Home, Sweet Home.

Another De Mille Gesture

Cecil B. De Mille, dean producer of screen spectacle, pulled another one out of his bottomless bag this week at the Paramount Studios, for the benefit of the press crowd as well as for the financial benefit of one thousand Hollywood extras and studio workers.

Always the master showman, Mr. De Mille managed to make the filming of a gigantic battle scene in his current epic, "The Crusades," reflect more glamour than the biggest Hollywood premiere.

From a high perch surveying his large set made up of castle and moat, a 35-ton siege tower and catapult, medieval implements of war, De Mille quietly but efficiently gave his instructions over a public address system. Ten or twelve assistants darted through the crowd of warriors below, carrying out instructions, and they seemed more excited than De Mille.

Completing an impressive scene, in the background there played a wax recording of an army of voices singing a war march, augmenting the action.

Hollywood in London

Hollywood is wondering if the larger studios will take more seriously the matter of producing abroad. Until this year, American pictures made in foreign lands, particularly those of England, were considered largely as something to satisfy quota requirements there.

Overnight came developments which tend to show that domestic release of films produced in England by U. S. companies may be close at hand.

The first straw to show the trend was the statement by Irving Asher of Warner Brothers, before leaving for London, that the company would build a new sound stage at its Teddington plant, and make big features, one of the first probably to star Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler. Close on the Asher announcement came a statement from Louis B. Mayer that MGM was contemplating increased production in Britain, and that details are now being worked out by Arthur Loew, chief executive of the foreign department. Immediately after this, Carl Laemmle said that N. L. Manheim, head of his foreign organization, had been summoned to the studio for the first time in three years, indicating that Universal, too, probably has something up its sleeve.

Before leaving Hollywood, Mr. Balcon appointed Larry Darmour to act as talent scout and production contact with writers, directors and technical men, on behalf of Gaumont British. The arrangement in no way will interfere with Mr. Darmour's own production plans.

British International announced appointment of William Mooring to act as production contact for BIP in Hollywood.

News Flashes

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences dismissed the Nils Asther-Universal Studio contract argument, the conciliation committee bowing out in favor of a one-picture deal settlement between the combatants. . . . Paramount Properties, Inc., owners of Paramount theatre and studio properties, authorized submission of a reorganization plan to bondholders and creditors at a hearing before Federal Judge Charles G. Briggle. . . . Nicholas Schenck and Myron Selznik joined the host of Hollywood executives trekking east last week. Both went out on the same train, but on different business. . . . . After days spent in selecting a dress list from among Hollywood extras, Central Casting has thrown it out and hereafter extra talent will be judged on merit alone. The decision followed a show of jealousy and ill feeling among the registered folk.

Eight Productions Start

Eight new productions succeeded the eight that were completed during the week. Fox, with two, was the only company starting more than one picture; Universal with three, was the only studio to complete more than one.

At the Western Avenue plant, "Ginger," a romantic drama which Louis Seiler is directing, was put in work. Walter King and Katherine Alexander are starred; the support features O. P. Heggie, Jackie Searl, Jane Withers. At the Westwood studio, "Charlie Chan in Egypt," in the Oriental detective series, got under way. Warner Oland is again in the title role. Pat Patterson, Charles Locher, Jameson Thomas, Rita Cansino, Stepin Fetchit and Arthur Stone are among those who will be seen in support. Louis King is directing.

Columbia started "Unknown Woman," a drama directed by Al Rogel. The cast includes Richard Cromwell, Marion Marsh, George McKay, Nana Bryant, Henry Armetta, Ben Taggert and Nellie V. Walker.

Paramount started shooting "Federal Dick." The personnel includes Fred MacMurray, Lynne Overman, David Holt, Arthur Aylesworth, Frank Sherman, under Ralph Murphy's direction.

"Top Hat," a colorful musical, started at Radio. Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers again are co-starred. Support includes Edward Everett Horton, Helene Broderick, Erik Rhodes, Eric Blore. Mark Sandrich is director.

While two months of atmospheric and background shooting has been done on "Mutiny on the Bounty" in the South Seas, active stage shooting began at MGM. Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery head the large cast, among them William Stelling, Dudley Digges, Granville Bates. Frank Lloyd is directing.

Work began on "Night Cargo" at Peerless, with Lloyd Hughes, Jacqueline Wells, Walter Miller, Carlotta Monte, Lloyd Whitlock, George Rogers.

Mascot started "Headline Woman," a topical modern drama. Roger Pryor and Heather Angel are the lead players, directed by William Nigh. Support lists Jack LaRue, Franklyn Pangborn, Wheeler Oakman.

Universal finished active shooting on "The Raven." Suggested by the famous Edgar Allen Poe poem, the cast will present Karloff, Bela Lugosi, Irene Ware, Lester Matthews, Colin Clive, Elsa Lancaster, O. P. Heggie, Inez Courtney, Spencer Charters, Maidel Turner, Arthur Hoyt, Ian Wolfe. Lewis Freidlander directed. Also completed was "Border Brigands," a Buck Jones western, which features Lona Andre and Fred Kohler. Nick Grinde directed. The third finished picture, "Chinatown Squad," formerly "Frisco Lady," features Lyle Talbot and Valerie Hobson, with Hugh McConnell, Henry Armetta, Clay Clement, Ruthelma Stevens, Arthur Hoyt, Andy Devine, Bradley Page and Fred Warren in support. Murray Roth directed.

Another "G Man" Film

Reliance completed "Let 'Em Have It," a Department of Justice picture. The Edward Small production was directed by Sam Wood. The lengthy cast includes Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce, Alice Brady, Bruce Cabot.

Fox transferred "Man Proposes" to the cutting rooms. James Dunn, Mae Clarke, Neil Hamilton, Sidney Toler, Warren Hymer, Stanley Fields, Raymond Hatton, Jack LaRue, Madge Bellamy, Frank Melton, Arthur Treacher, Robert Gleckler, Dorothy Christy and DeWitt Jennings will be seen. William Seiter directed.

At Radio, "Hooray for Love," comedy romance with music and dancing, was finished. It presents Ann Sothern, Gene Raymond, Pert Kelton, Maria Gambarelli, Thurston Hall, Bill Robinson, Jeni LeGon and Lionel Stander. Walter Lang directed.

Representing the independents, Criterion Pictures finished "Rustlers' Paradise." Harry Carey is starred. Theodore Lorsch, Roger Williams, Ed Cobb, Charles Wittaker, Gertrude Messinger, Carmen Bailey and Chuck Morrison are in the cast. Harry Fraser directed. Excelsior completed "Hell Breaks Loose," in which Guinn Williams, Sally Blaine, Robert Homans, James Bush and Raymond Walker will be seen.

"Did someone drop a pin?"

An exhibitor said to us:

"My audience was spellbound. Their attention was galvanized by the drama of that 2-reel subject. You could hear a pin drop during the screening of 'Buried Loot.' I'm looking forward to the entire 'Crime Doesn't Pay Series' next season."

WE'RE GETTING COMPLIMENTS FOR "BURIED LOOT"!

A new dramatic idea in short subjects that has captivated andiences. Play "Buried Loot" now and we'll guarantee your patrons will ask for more! Leave the rest to M-G-M! Next season's tallest shorts!

WE HEAR YOU CALL-ING US!

In Gay Paree we stopped the show,
Wowed 'em in London, doncha know,
But we heard you call and we're on our way
Back to the merry old U. S. A.,
For it's very plain from all reports
That you want some more of our

DISTRIBUTORS OPPOSE 20% CANCELLATIONS

Kuykendall Answers That Widened Viewpoint Will Come Out of Revision of Code

Expressions on the weekend from New York distributing headquarters indicating that the large companies are decidedly set against increasing the prevalent 10 per cent cancellation privilege accorded exhibitors, was followed on Monday by a challenge from Ed Kuykendall as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to a fight for 20 per cent cancellation, "with no entanglements or strings" attached to the contractual right.

"The MPTOA are definitely on record as standing for certain reforms and will continue to fight for them," Mr. Kuykendall said, "and we believe that one of the essentials towards a better understanding and friendly relation between the theatre owner and the distributor, and one that would do more than any other thing to counteract outside meddling with our industry, would be a sane and reasonable cancellation clause in contracts of about 20 per cent, with no entanglements or strings.

"The exhibitors would continue to play the same number of pictures each year that they are now playing; therefore, the same number of pictures would have to be bought, and it is my belief that any distributor who opposes this cancellation is merely dimming his own right."

Fear Cost Up to $3,000,000

Regardless, investigation at distributors' home offices along Broadway disclosed that no increase in cancellation above the present 10 per cent will be granted by distributors, who are resolved that nothing but legislation or court orders would change their stand. Too, they indicated that any attempt by the exhibitors to obtain higher cancellation privileges through a redrafted code would be as vigorously opposed.

Holding that any such increase would cost them $1,000,000 to $3,000,000 a year, distributors feel that exhibitors would take advantage of the increase in cancelling out pictures of low gross potentialities, and would not apply it to the elimination of pictures on moral or other grounds. They do not agree with exhibitor opinion that higher cancellation percentages would prove an incentive to producers to better production, pointing out that no producer deliberately sets out to make an inferior product.

Furthermore, distributors in New York feel that exhibitors would not pay any more for pictures under a 15 or 20 per cent cancellation clause and therefore the distributors would not be compensated in any way for the unplayed product. Nor would playing time be increased on good pictures, this because such product now receives as much playing time as it rates.

Distributors also believe that not all companies would voluntarily adopt the increase, so that those which do not grant an extended cancellation would have an advantage by placing the others in a position to force more playing time for their product at the expense of the companies whose product is cancelled.

Predicts Code Revision

Reporting on its campaign to obtain benefits for exhibitors by means of code revisions, the MPTOA said:

"Our organization at its recent national convention in New Orleans worked out plans for a special committee to meet with the Administrator Sol Rosenblatt, and with the Code Authority to discuss with them and recommend to them certain changes and revisions in the code. This committee will not be radical, but will be composed of gentlemen who understand the mechanics of this business based upon many years experience as exhibitors. No one can truthfully say, however, that the code has not been beneficial to the little independent exhibitor, even in its present form."

"We are making considerable progress in our efforts to so amend the United States copyright laws that they will be fair and equitable to all concerned and no one organization can arbitrarily price-fix and dominate us in the orderly process of our business," Mr. Kuykendall added. "The theatres will be advised in the near future as to just what they will be expected to do along this line for their common good."

Meanwhile the Government was proceeding with preparations for its case against American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to obtain relief through the breaking down of the society's licensing structure for music reproduction privileges.

BRITAIN REMITS TAX ON LOW-PRICE SEATS

Chancellor of the Exchequer Chamberlain remitted the entertainment tax on theatres charging up to sixpence, in his budget speech Monday. Small exhibitors were jubilant at the news. Their hopes, dashed for some time despite active efforts to relieve their situation, had been revived by reports that the budget message would show the country's finances in an improved condition.

Photophone Sells Recorder And 23 New Reproducers

Jack Flanagan, president of Tri-State Motion Picture Company, industrial producing organization of Cleveland, has completed a license arrangement with RCA Victor whereby his company will record with Photophone High Fidelity. The Tri-State Company has taken over a larger building which now is being soundproofed and equipped with sound stages.

New High Fidelity reproducing equipment is to replace old apparatus in 23 deluxe RKO theatres throughout the country, according to Edwin M. Hartley, manager of the Photophone department.

Named Paramount Producer

Lewis E. Gensler has been named an associate producer at Paramount.

BRITISH RENTERS HOLD TO BOOKING DEAL BAN

Ruling Against Gaumont-Union-Hyams Plan Warns Exhibitors Group Against Similar Move

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

The Kinematograph Renters Society scored a very big victory in forcing abandonment of the booking arrangement between Gaumont-British and the Union and Hyams theatre groups. In conflict with the most powerful circuit in the country, it has established a precedent which is scarcely likely to be challenged effectively by smaller interests. Notably it has issued an indirect but very plain warning to the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association that any attempt to establish a cooperative booking organization will put distributors on a war footing.

It was difficult to see how, in a straight fight, the KRS, with its control of film supplies, could fail to win, but there was just a possibility that the other side might succeed by a flank move. Unquestionably, the first steps in an action for conspiracy were taken by one of the theatre groups and certain of the threatened renting concerns were a little nervous about their position, however confident the KRS as such was about the legal position. That the action went no further suggests that the KRS had some legal advice, too.

Getting on with Color

Evidence of the seriousness of the British effort in the color field is to be found in the news that Ilford, Ltd., big manufacturers of raw film, have bought majority control of Spicer-Dufay (British), Ltd., which in its turn controls the Dufaycolor process, used in ABP's "Radio Parade."

Ilford's issued capital is more than £6,000,000, which means that Dufaycolor will be developed on any scale made necessary by its success with producers. Large factory extensions already are planned, and Mr. T. Thorne Baker, the technical adviser of the company is to visit New York in the near future to discuss cooperation at the laboratory end with Dufaycolor, Inc., of America.

Oscar Deutsch has declared he has no intention of permitting the Odeon circuit to "go out of British hands." The declaration is regarded as relating to reports that Odeon theatres were to form the nucleus of a British circuit with which United Artists would be closely associated. The circuit now numbers 50 theatres and is expected to total 100 by the end of the year.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Concordia, Kan.

Dear Herald:

Tomorrow is Sunday and we have been writing this colyum on Sunday for nigh onto ten years, but tomorrow we will have one foot on the gas pedal and both hands on the steering wheel and it looks like it would be out of the question for us to pound this typewriter, so we are going to try and do it tonight. We have driven all day in rain and, while we don't like to do it, yet Kansas needs to be wet up and she has got a good soaking today.

Yesterday we came through Alvarado, Texas, and we stopped to see our old friend Charley Cooper, who operates the Alvarado theatre, and when we called he was just starting for Arlington Downs, if you know what that is. Arlington Downs is located at Arlington, Texas, about halfway between Ft. Worth and Dallas, and it is where the boys go to bet their change on the wrong horse and depend upon their uncle to take them home. Arlington Downs sounds better than Derby and that's why they say Downs; that is, we presume it is. Charlie wanted us to go with him but we couldn't. The fact is (but we didn't tell him so) that if we had our choice between seeing a plug hoss race and listening to a love song crooner, we'd choose the seven-year itch. We realize that we are just one out of fifty million who are built that way, and we realize that "Fifty Million Frenchmen Can't Be Wrong," or words to that effect, therefore we consider our self the black sheep of the flock.

But what we'd like to do would be to take Charlie of Alvarado and Zimmermann of San Marcos, Bob Smith of Mission, Shine Mason of McAllen, King of Harlengen, and Brady of San Benito, and go down to Smith's cabin on red fish bay for a couple of weeks to pull out tarpon and red fish. Wouldn't that be sumtin', Gertie?

A few days ago an Oklahoma daily carried a picture of the first tree planted in that "shelterbelt" that they are going to plant in Oklahoma to bring rain. The tree was a scrub pine about two feet tall and surrounding it were the governor and other state dignitaries, and several government employees with shovels, ready to do battle for humanity at so much per. The tree must have brought rain all right, for last night we saw lightning and heavy rain clouds over western Oklahoma, and, since it has rained all day here in Kansas, it is quite likely that the boys have started planting trees up here, but we hope we get home before they start planting in Nebraska, for we left our rubber boots and raincoat up home.

Yesterday we saw a man pay thirty cents a pound for pork chops. Gosh, we'd like to see the hog they got those chops off of; he must have been a whizzer, and we'd like to see the farmer who raised him. We'll betcha that farmer was glad that they killed five million pigs "to raise the price of pork" when he sold that hog for three dollars a hundred. We learned that the cotton farmer down South is not nearly as enthusiastic over plowing up his cotton "to raise the price of cotton," as the boys are in Washington.

The News Gets Out

We stopped in Marlow to see Miller, who runs the Marlow theatre, but he had gone to Oklahoma City. We stopped at Rush Springs to see the boy there but he went to Wichita to see his boy, who is in the hospital. We called at several places along the route but found the boys had left town; they must have heard that we were coming. It beats all how the news does leak out that way.

Last night they turned on the radio and we heard a fellow singing a cowboy song, the words of which were written by a high school girl in Ypsilanti, Mich., who never saw a cowboy, and the music was a sound reproduction of a man filing a cross-cut saw. Then a jazz orchestra started playing "Monlight After Sundown" and a crooner broke out with "Love's Young Dream," and the mules broke out of the corral and we had to go out and help chase 'em back. Doggone the luck, anyhow.

But speaking about good wheat. If you want to see good wheat-fields you should go to northwest Oklahoma and southern Kansas. We have seen a lot of wheat in our time but nothing that looked any better than in these sections. Our guess is that business will soon start picking up at the theatres down there. We hope so.

On the Road Home

It rained all day yesterday and about all night last night and the wind came from the north and is howling this morning like a scared wolf, and it is cold, too, but we have to get on the road home, so we will have to cut this short and trust to Providence (and the sheriff) to deal kindly with all of us. But speaking of the sheriff we hope you have got that guy trained as well as we have.

When the sheriff comes to your place
To satisfy some judge's whim,
You should look him right square in the face
And kick the stuffin' out of him.

We tried that once but it didn't work so well.

Second Slate Offered Ampa By Second Nominating Group

A second nominating group of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers unexpectedly announced Wednesday another set of candidates to succeed the William R. Ferguson administration, as follows: For president, Bruce Gallup, advertising director of Columbia; vice-president, Gordon S. White, advertising director of Educational; treasurer, Herbert S. Berg, publicist of United Artists; secretary, Edward McNamee, of National Screen Service.

For the board of directors: William R. Ferguson, exploitation head of MGM; Paul B. Benjamin, retiring treasurer, of National Screen; Al Gottlieb, Marvin Kirsch, and Mel Hymann.

John C. Flinn, secretary of the Code Authority, was nominated for a three-year trusteeship; Hal Horne, advertising director of United Artists, was named to continue as counselor to the National Chamber of Commerce, and the following were selected as auditors: Paul Gulick, Universal; Edward Finney, Republic Pictures, and Vincent Trotta, Paramount.

The second nominating group consists of Irving Goodfield, Ralph Lund, James P. Cunningham, Irwin Zellner, Herbert Berg and Bert McKenzie.

Elections will be held on Thursday, April 25, at a special meeting at the Motion Picture Club in the Bond Building, New York.

Indian Screen Magazine Issues Annual for 1935

The Moving Picture Monthly, leading motion picture publication of India, published at Bombay, recently issued its 1935 Annual edition, the third, under the direction of R. K. Rele, editor of the publication. The Annual, containing considerable effective illustration of the stars of the Indian motion picture, opens with a brief but comprehensive review of motion picture activity in India since February, 1931, when the first domestic talking films appeared in the country.

There are included in the Annual articles by Irene Nicholson, London critic; Max Factor, Hollywood makeup man; others on various phases of screen work in India by leading personalities; on visual education, by Dr. H. L. Kooser of Iowa State College; on television, with technical consideration, a showman's page, and listings and information on current and future releases.

Ray Lewis Hits Coast Tax Legislation in Address

Ray Lewis, editor and publisher of The Canadian Motion Picture Digest, struck at the proposed California state tax legislation directed against the motion picture industry in an address recently before 1,000 men and women at the El Portal theatre in North Hollywood, during a recent visit. She urged that the "ax" be taken out of taxes.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 262 (one of special group of questions on sound that began with Question No. 261).—(A) What routine is followed before opening of the show each day by the conscientious projectionist who handles sound equipment? (B) May sound failures result from blown power fuses? Name one good safety precaution which can be taken in the projection room of every theatre to insure a minimum loss of time in locating and correcting the cause of failure of this kind. (C) Many motion picture projectors are equipped with induction drive motors controlled by centrifugal starting switches. In case such a motor hums, but fails to start, what emergency action may usually be taken to get it started?

Answer to Question No. 256

Question No. 256 was this: (A) Just what is the effect on light demand of an increase in size of the picture? (B) Name the various ways in which abnormal increase in picture size decreases the beauty of the screen image. (C) Name other effects of abnormal picture size. (D) Compare a small and a very large screen image.

R. and K. Wells answer Section A thus: "If the illumination is to remain unchanged (at the same reflective candle-power), then the light must be increased exactly in the same proportion as the surface to be illuminated is increased. For example, if one square foot is being illuminated at 10 candle-power of reflected light, and the surface be increased to two square feet, then naturally if the reflected C.P. is to remain the same, the light reaching or illuminating the two-foot screen must be exactly double that reaching the one foot one.

"Light demand therefore is exactly in proportion to the increase or decrease in surface to be illuminated. For example, if 120 square feet of screen surface be enlarged to, say, 180 square feet, then the light demand (reflecting power of the two surfaces being equal) would be as 120 is to 180, which would call for 50 per cent additional light."

(B) Dale Danielson answers thus: "The magnification of all film defects becomes more pronounced, and therefore more visible as screen image dimensions are increased. Movement of the film, either vertical or lateral, is exaggerated. Visibility of graininess is increased. Very often the huge screen image appears grainy, whereas the smaller one projected from the same films does not. There also is the possibility of the large picture being out of harmony with its surroundings. Definition in securing focal sharpness is increased."

I believe this last is not very well put. What Brother Danielson means, I think, is that the large picture will not seem as sharp in definition as would a smaller one, especially to those down front, but that is something over which the projectionist has no control. However, I am not certain about this.

"Assuming projection distance to be the same for small and large picture, the shorter focal length lens necessary for the larger picture makes it more difficult, and in extreme cases impossible, to secure maximum sharpness in focus all over a large screen. This is because the curvature of field is increased, which means that the difference in distance between lens and screen center and sides is increased. The huge, massive-appearing screen usually will not have as pleasing an appearance and harmony with surroundings as will the smaller one, which same, with exceptions, applies equally to various objects in the picture itself."

That last remark is true, though not, I believe for the reasons Danielson has in mind. They will not have the same beauty because of increased general coarseness in appearance, which involves too great magnification of the photographic emulsion, which produces tendency to more or less graininess, as well as probable decrease in illumination and other things.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION
A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.
Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

(C) T. Van Vaulkenburg wins on this one, though Danielson is a very close second. He says, "Increased eye-strain for those in the front portion of the auditorium, as well as for those in extreme side seats. increased distortion from side front seats because of increased side view of part of picture fartherest from them; increase in cost of screen; increased cost of cleaning screen or replacing it when its time of usefulness has passed; increased cost for electric current; increased carbon consumption cost; increased damage to film because of greater heat at spot (I suppose lighting of large picture is to be equal, so far as possible, to that of the smaller one); increase in projection angle distortion."

(D) Dale Danielson says, "Viewed from the standpoint of honest comparison, there is hardly anything that favors the huge screen image. First, to maintain proper viewing conditions the distance from front seats to screen must be increased at least one foot, three inches for each added foot of screen width. Second, screen widening increases side-view angles. Third, light demand increases rapidly. Fourth, increased screen cost, and cost of everything pertaining to it. Fifth, increased difficulty (Impossibility.—F. H. R.) in getting an apparently sharp focus in the large picture. Sixth, increase in distortion in large picture. Seventh, all photographic or film defects more visible in large picture. Eight, increased necessity for depth of focus in lens. Ninth, large screen image better for rear seats when viewing distance is abnormally long. Tenth, modern architecture with its large, unbroken areas, harmonizes well with large screen (But this cannot hold in any except large theatres.—F. H. R.) Eleventh, there is a modern tendency toward larger screen images. Twelfth, available space is often the deciding factor. Thirteenth, with long viewing distance the small screen image must be illuminated so brightly for the rear seats that it is too bright for those nearer to it."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Chesterfield

CURTAIN FALLS, THE: Henrietta Crosman—Ran it once, then put it in the can. Enough said.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WORLD ACCUSES, THE: Russell Hopton, Dickie Moore, Cora Sue Collins—Cora Sue Collins got the laughs. A fair family picture. Played March 26.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Columbia

AMONG THE MISSING: Richard Cromwell—Average program picture that drew above average business on "Bargain Night." Running time, 67 minutes. Played April 2.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

BEST MAN WINS, THE: Jack Holt, Edmund Lowe—Not so hot story of two divers. Underwater shots absorb most of the story, and weak ending. O. K. for a weekend.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BLIND DATE: Ann Sothern—Nice little program picture that pleased the "Bargain Night" crowd. Business average. Running time, 72 minutes. Played March 12.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

CARNIVAL: Jimmy Durante, Lee Tracy, Sally Eilers—An honest effort was made here. Cast and production okay. Everything working right up to expectations. We tried hard to put it over with special advertising but failed to lift it above average business at box-office. Would say it is good but they got to be better than good.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

CARNIVAL: Jimmy Durante, Lee Tracy, Sally Eilers—Just average and nothing to get excited about. Durante's humor keeps picture alive. Durante much better because he gets away from the "noise" which he made in previous pictures. Lee Tracy doing a fadeout here. Played Friday and Saturday.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—An above-the-average program picture and pleased those who came. Business below average. No draw. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 20-21.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE: Tim McCoy—Very good action picture that pleased the Saturday crowd. Business about average. Running time, 60 minutes. Played March 23.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

HELL CAT, THE: Ann Sothern, Robert Armstrong—Just a program picture that pleased the Bargain Night crowd. Business about average. Running time, 69 minutes. Played March 5.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Roger Pryor, Walter Connolly—May Robson always pleases here 100 per cent and with Walter Connolly in the cast it is a knockout. Plenty good for any day. Played March 26.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore—We had been besieged with requests for this picture from patrons for months. Reports in this department from all the small towns were bad but with all these requests for it we took a chance. I am glad to say that it did above average business and pleased 90 per cent of the people who came to see it. Gave it extra advertising of the proper kind. I'm glad we played it. Running time, 82 minutes. Played March 31-April 1.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

First National

BABBITT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Very good comedy but not as good as "Big Hearted Herbert." Business off. Played March 20.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Patricia Ellis—Good Sunday business on this very entertaining comedy drama.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir—This is a good picture. Should please anywhere. Characters all fit into their roles perfectly. The story is clever. Far above average program picture. Played March 21-22.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—One of the best thrills we have run. Pleased our Saturday patrons and business above average. Played March 23.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

BABOONA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—Just a picture that Fox made me play. I can't see why they have to pan that stuff off on an honest exhibitor. I have about made up my mind it is impossible to be honest and in the show business both. Played March 12.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Fox product certainly pleases here. I would feel as though I were cheating my friends if I didn't have this wonderful girl to show them. Many comments that it was good entertainment. Played April 6-7.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—Shirley Temple draws better than any other star. This picture brought out the best crowd of the year. A perfect picture for any theatre. Played March 30.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Everybody has written this as good, and I say it is extra fine. But "Baby Take a Bow" was her best. And James Dunn was made for her to make her pictures perfect. I do hope to live to see this little star in pictures till her head grows gray. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER: George O'Brien—If it hadn't been that two inches of snow fell just before show time this would have been a wonderful draw. Did well the second night. Played March 27-28.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans, Ralph Bellamy—Will please Saturday nite or western crowd. Good programmer. Running time, 74 minutes. G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers, Rochelle Hudson, Tom Brown, Anita Louise—Nice Saturday business; a perfect picture from the viewpoint of my people.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: "Pat" Paterson, Lew Ayres—This is one good picture and will please all you can get to see it. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts, Rochelle Hudson, Charles Starrett—Good Saturday business on this old picture, but the Rogers fans complained that the story and role were very weak for their favorite star.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—Well, most everybody seemed to know what this picture would be like, and sure enough, it turned out to be what they expected, a hospital-nurse picture. But it is mighty, mighty good. Play it and like it for it is O. K. Running time, 9 reels. Played March 25-26.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

GB Pictures

CHU CHIN CHOW: Anna May Wong, John Garrick—This is one fine picture that I couldn't get them in to see. Some that came didn't like it and others did, but a flop at the box office. Sound not up to the standard of other productions. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 22-23.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

IRON DUKE, THE: George Arliss, Gladys Cooper—Another period picture that took a grand nosedive at the box office. The only two British pictures I have had have been impossible to sell, though they are all good. I believe that they will be box office when they are better known. Running time, 93 minutes. Played March 29-30.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

Mascot

LITTLE MEN: Ralph Morgan, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Junior Durkin, Cora Sue Collins, Frankie Darro, Dickie Moore—This is a good production of this old childhood classic, with a fine cast, but it is not the big drawing attraction that you may expect.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MARINES ARE COMING, THE: William Haines—A dandy little picture with plenty of pep and spice. It has no selling angles but there are now so many like that. It will please. Played March 26-27.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theater, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Constance Bennett, Clark Gable—Very good. Customers all enjoyed this and the box office statement was slightly better than average. Played March 23.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—O. K. Should get the women. Good story and plenty of humor.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Reporting this picture is rather hard. Personally I liked the picture but there were a lot of people who did not. It failed to draw. Did the poorest Sunday-Monday business in months. This too in face of the fact that it was sold through the schools. Running time, 79 minutes. Played March 17-18.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro—A very nice picture that pleased and drew slightly above the average. Excellent music. Running time, 82 minutes. Played March 29.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—An excellent picture. We played it very late, but it did average business and pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 86 minutes. Played March 15.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—Just a program offering but at that it is a decided improvement over some of the preceding Garbos. Did better than average business. Played April 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—One of those pictures that a few people call great and the rest of the public dislikes. Did average business but didn't please more than 25 per cent of those who saw it. Personally I thought it was too slowly paced. At times the action moved along and held the interest, only to start lagging again. Running time, 86 minutes. Played March 6-7.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

TOMORROW'S YOUTH: John Miljan, Martha Sleeper, Dickie Moore—Nice little programmer that pleased most of the "Bargain Night" crowd. Running time, 63 minutes. Played March 19.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

Monogram

FLIRTING WITH DANGER: Robert Armstrong, Marion Burns—Got the laughs. Good entertainment. —Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Louise Dresser, Ralph Morgan, Marian Marsh—Played this one late but to extra heavy weekend business. Comment was spotted, but majority liked it, and it clicked at the B. O. So why say more. Running time, 86 minutes. Played March 22.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MAN FROM UTAH, THE: John Wayne—A western that goes right to bat in the start and never lets up until finished. John Wayne is one of the best liked western stars and I see no good reason why he will not keep right on drawing them in. Showed it last two days of the week to capacity business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

'NEATH ARIZONA SKIES: John Wayne—An above-the-average western picture that pleased. Drew about average business for Saturday. Running time, 55 minutes. Played April 6.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

REDHEAD: Bruce Cabot, Grace Bradley—Average program picture that satisfied those who came to see it. However, it has no particular drawing power. The title doesn't mean a thing and there are no names to speak of in the cast. Played to poorest midweek business for some months. Played March 27.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALL OF ME: Fredric March—Just an average program picture. Not up to March's standard. Played March 23.—Henry Sparks, Grand Thetare, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Gene Raymond, Sylvia Sidney—What a nice little picture and what a team Gene and Sylvia make. Sylvia sure portrays the Indian girl to perfection and Gene was better than usual. Our audience liked it 100 per cent and business was satisfactory. If we could only say this of more of the pictures. Played March 31-April 1.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan—Tied up with the Boy Scouts and broke house records. I don't go much for a lot of the press sheet stuff but you can make no mistake by working with the local Ford dealer on this one. If you have a house in Michigan, by all means get the bills put out by the Exhibitors Printing Service, Cass Ave., Detroit, on this action picture of Michigan State Police. Played March 30-April 1.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Briar —The rest of the world likes Joe Penner better than I do, it must be, as this did a nice Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross—Don't think there has been an adverse criticism on this in the columns of "What the Picture Did For Me." It's just another of those pictures that happen along all too seldom that will draw them in and please them after they get in. Played March 24-25. —Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ENTER MADAME: Elissa Landi, Cary Grant—Played to average business but didn't please the majority. Not the type for small towns. Running time, 83 minutes. Played March 22.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General and small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—A little better than average picture. Most patrons pleased. My nomination for the Academy award for box-office titles would be "The Gilded Lily" and "The Good Fairy."—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields—I have so many patrons that don't like Fields. Had hard sledding trying to sell this picture but those that I did get out admitted that they got their money's worth. Personally, I consider it a very clever comedy. Played April 2-3. —Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker —Here is a honey for those houses that require mystery and action pictures for weekend. Used it last part of week, three days, to better than average business. This is possibly the best picture of its kind ever made.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker —Originally had this booked for a Sunday-Monday but changed to Saturday and made no mistake in doing this as it is only average entertainment. Seems to me they could have looked Hollywood over and not found a star that seemed more out of place than sweet and demure little Jean Parker in the role of tough gal and pickpocket. Jean, don't take any more of this kind of roles as your admirers don't like you in them. Played March 30.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Sir Guy Standing —Very good. Mostly a man's picture. Just one woman and she has a minor role. Did better than average business here. Played March 30.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—What a picture! Pleased 100 per cent and got above average business. One of those pictures that makes you proud to greet the patrons when they come out of the theatre. Worth the best spot in anybody's theatre. Running time, 89 minutes. Played March 10-11.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

MENACE: Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh, Henrietta Crosman, John Lodge—This is a fairly entertaining murder mystery melodrama that pleased a fair crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple, Gary Cooper—A very fine picture. Some exhibitors have complained that this picture would hurt Shirley. I don't see it that way.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomoton, Ala. Small town patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Ida Lupino, Richard Arlen—An overdrawn satire on the small town's supposed yen for scandal-mongering. The title has no connection with the story.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—A picture brim full of entertainment. It brought in the paying customers and they were pleased so what more could I ask? Played March 23-24.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—A lot of gab, and a big lot of Rumba. Some parts of this big world may love it, but for me, I got enough. Running time, 9 reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick —Good western. Good Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant —Don't know what there is to an air picture, but my patrons eat 'em up. Changed policy recently and running weekend three days. "Wings" was the first and heaviest gross since I purchased house six months ago. Can recommend "Wings in the Dark" for almost any spot, but preferably for the Saturday regulars. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 28-30.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—Nice picture that should have done more business than it did. Pleased most all who saw it. Business below average. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 24-25.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—A nice picture that failed to gross film rental. No fault of the picture, as no picture of the period or costume type will gross film rental, and for me it is just a pain in the neck. Running time, 80 minutes. Played February 22-23.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—An excellent picture that will get business if properly sold. Tied up with local PTA and enjoyed above average business and got a lot of favorable comments on it. Pleased the classes and the masses. Running time, 78 minutes. Played March 13-14.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HURRICANE: James Barton, Helen Westley, Helen Mack—I opened with this on Friday night to a small crowd, and on Saturday night I stayed open 1 hour without one adult patron coming to the box office. I had two kids in the theatre, and gave them their money and closed up for the night. Figure that out. Better see this one at your neighbor's. Played March 15-16.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler & Woolsey—My folks like Wheeler and Woolsey and this is the wildest one they ever made. I would say if you have not already shown it, hurry right into the exchange and get your copy of this uproarious farce and give it to your patrons full force. Good box office attraction for me and wonderful entertainment for the paying customers.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

DOG OF FLANDERS, A: Frankie Thomas, O. P. Heggie—One of the finest I have ever had in my house, but not worth one tinker's dam at the box office. Classics are going to force me out of business if they don't quit making them. I don't think that there can be any possibility of a doubt that everyone that sees this splendid production will like it, but it is next to impossible to sell it. They look over the advertising and go off hunting something else to do. If things don't change, I think I will hire a preacher to run my business and get in something else. Running time, 68 minutes. Played April 5-6.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

ENCHANTED APRIL: Ann Harding—The worst picture we have played this season. If you play this one it might be well to hide in the office after the first reel has been run as they'll tell you what they think of it in no uncertain terms. Some told me they would never come again. Running time, 78 minutes. Played March 9.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton—A good musical comedy; business not so hot. It is worthy of note that Ginger Rogers wears full length gowns throughout this picture, and is infinitely more charming and alluringly feminine than she would have been in the various stages of semi-nudity that are usually considered essential for this type of show.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton—A wonderful picture; one of the best, if not the very best, we have shown during the year. Drew people who had never before been in the theatre. Playd April 6.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

GIGOLETTE: Adrienne Ames, Ralph Bellamy—Nice little program picture that pleased. Nothing to talk about, but acceptable. Running time, 70 minutes. Played February 19.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

HAT, COAT AND GLOVE: Ricardo Cortez, Barbara Robbins, John Beal—Last two reels were good and made this a passable picture. I would have classed it as a poor entertainment, and only the last two reels made it fair entertainment. Played March 16.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Ann Harding, John Boles—A wonderful picture of its type. Very fine work by cast.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomoton, Ala. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—Here is a picture that is splendidly producted and wonderfully acted. We ran into two nights of bad competition from local home talent affairs that hurt us but yet did average business. Pleased 80 per cent. Running time, 110 minutes. Played March 27-28.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver. James Gleason, Lola Lane—This one pleased the fans though it is just a program picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 8-9.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason, Bruce Cabot, Gertrude Michael—Murder mystery drama, with enough comedy to make it entertaining.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Ginger Rogers, Francis Lederer—A grand little program picture that pleased 100 per cent. Drew average business and left a good taste in the mouths of the patrons. Played April 5.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—Ginger Rogers good as she is in all her pictures. Lederer excellent in his role but my folks don't like him. One picture that I would have done more business with had I not run the trailer. Patrons just didn't like Lederer's general appearance. Played March 17-18.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Karen Morley, Edward Arnold—Well made program picture that did average "Bargain Night" business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played March 26.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Joan Marsh, Gloria Shea, Reginald Denny, Buster Crabbe—This seemed to please the customers.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BLOOD MONEY: George Bancroft, Frances Dee, Judith Anderson, Blossom Seeley—Small business on a tough midweek date with this one. It is a powerful and well made melodrama.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young, Warner Oland, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel—Murder mystery with plenty of comedy, good Saturday bill. It did fair business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—I couldn't get them out to see this, but I still think it's a very good picture. Some of the Dumas readers, however, complained that the producers had taken a lot of liberties with the original story.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor, Ann Sothern, Ethel Merman, Block and Sully—Saved by the magnificent color sequence. My personal opinion: just give any star enough radio rope and he will hang himself with the motion picture fans. Played to above average Sunday business but the poorest Monday night in months. Running time, 91 minutes. Played March 31.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

ROMAN SCANDALS: Eddie Cantor, Ruth Etting, Gloria Stuart, David Manners—This pleased the Saturday crowd 100 per cent, but did not draw as well as I expected.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Fredric March, Anna Sten—Excellent picture that drew average business. Pleased all and created goodwill in addition. Running time, 83 minutes. Played April 3-4.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

Universal

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Ruth Etting, Phil Baker, Alexander Woollcott, Ethel Waters, Helen Vinson, Paul Lukas, Binnie Barnes—Wise-cracking comedy that amused a small audience.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Ned Sparks, Louise Beavers, Rochelle Hudson—Sorry I couldn't get them in on this picture; I consider it the year's top for entertainment. Louise Beavers, the colored player, has what is really the principal role, and makes it stand out by a fine, natural and restrained performance. That isn't taking any credit away from Colbert, who is perfect in the most pleasing and sympathetic role she has ever been seen in on my screen. All the other players are very good also, especially the girl who plays Louise Beavers' daughter.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Ned Sparks, Louise Beavers—A splendid picture that drew only favorable comments. Played to average Sunday business. Running time, 111 minutes. Played March 24-25.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Louise Beavers—A wonderful production. Wish I could get another like it. An excellent picture. Louise Beavers very good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomoton, Ala. Small town patronage.

I'VE BEEN AROUND: Chester Morris, Rochelle Hudson—Just so-so; business accordingly.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD, THE: Claude Rains, Joan Bennett, Lionel Atwill—This didn't do much business, but aroused considerable comment as being a powerful and unsual picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD, THE: Claude Rains, Joan Bennett—A good picture but failed to satisfy my Friday-Saturday crowd.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomoton, Ala. Small town patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard, Ruth Hall, William Desmond—Best western we have had for many a day. It had everything any one could ask for in a picture of this kind. It had a great deal of applause. Played March 23.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones, Peggy Campbell—Average western, fair Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—Well made and finely acted picture. Rather heavy drama. Not enough romance and too much church didn't help it any, although it is a good picture.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne—Here is one I'll admit I hardly know how to report. Would say it pleased about 50 per cent and that 50 per cent was the middle aged and older. On down the other way, they didn't care for it. Business far below average. Played March 28-29.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Willis Kent

BRAND OF HATE: Bob Steele—A good western that pleased the Saturday night crowd. Running time, 57 minutes. Played March 16.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General and small town patronage.

FIGHTING THRU: Reb Russell—Average Western that pleased the Saturday crowd. Did above average business. Running time, 55 minutes. Played March 30.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town and general patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BABES AT SEA: Color Rhapsodies Series—Another very fine colored cartoon. Pleased all and entitled to your good playing time.—C. M. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BACK TO THE SOIL: Broadway Comedies—One of the best two-reel comedies we've run in some time. It had the house laughing from start to finish. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General and small town patronage.

Educational

HOLLAND DAYS: Terry-Toons—Very good. Liked by everybody. Fair print. Recording good. Running time, seven minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

MOON OVER MANHATTAN: Young Romance—Very drab two-reeler. Sylvia Froos manages to sing one and one-half songs. I didn't hear a single laugh or "murmur of approbation." Oh, well, next year's a new year.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

ONE-RUN ELMER: Star Personality Comedies—Above average Educational comedy. Mostly baseball, so play accordingly.—John A. Milligan, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TIME ON THEIR HANDS: Song Hit Stories Series—A fine one-reel musical. Good any day and these are scarce.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

ATTENTION, SUCKERS!: Oddities—Created more comment around here than any short we've run in some time. In fact, all of these MGM Oddities are good. Running time, one reel.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park Fla. General and small town patronage.

BALLAD OF PADUCAH JAIL: Irvin S. Cobb—Cobb is as good an actor as some Hollywood stars are writers. Nuf' said.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CHASES OF PIMPLE STREET: Charley Chase—A good slapstick Saturday comedy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DISCONTENTED CANARY, THE: Happy Harmonies—Excellent color cartoon. One of the best I have had the pleasure of running. Running time, one reel.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General and small own patronage.

FIXER-UPPERS: Laurel and Hardy—Okay Laurel and Hardy. Better than "Tit for Tat."—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y.

FIXER-UPPERS: Laurel and Hardy—A fine Laurel and Hardy comedy.—C. L: Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES: No. 10—At last a real good Goofy Movie. Don't pass this one.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HOLLAND IN TULIP TIME: FitzPatrick Travel Talks Series—Excellent.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOLLAND IN TULIP TIME: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Excellent travelogue reel in color. Running time, one reel.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General and small town patronage.

IRVIN S. COBB COMEDIES: Very popular here. Hope that there will be more soon. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General and small town patronage.

LOST CHICK, THE: Happy Harmonies Series—One of the best colored cartoons of the year. Give it preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Nile Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SHIMPS FOR A DAY: Our Gang—A very good Gang comedy. Had may compliments on this.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SING, SISTER, SING!: Todd-Kelly—Rather weak Todd-Kelly, but they did the best they would with what they had.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TIN MAN, THE: Todd-Kelly—Above average Todd-Kelly. Plenty of laughs.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TIT FOR TAT: Laurel and Hardy—Laurel and Hardy comedy. Just fair but got by.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TREASURE BLUES: Todd-Kelly—These Todd-Kelly comedies are in a class by themselves. Our people like them.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

YOU BRING THE DUCKS: Irvin S. Cobb—Everybody enjoyed this Cobb comedy. Should be played six GRASSHOPPER AND THE ANT, THE: Silly Symphony Series—A very entertaining cartoon.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S SERVICE STATION: Mickey Mouse—O. K. as usual. Not outstanding, but average.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

FATHER KNOWS BEST: Sterling Holloway—The customers seemed to find this funny.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PLEASING GRANDPA: Sterling Holloway—Gosh, this is terrible!—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

HARRY VON TILZER: Pepper Pot—Very clever one-reeler. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HEAR YE! HEAR YE!: Vera Van and the Yacht Club Boys—Entertaining musical short.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MYSTERIOUS KISS, THE: Jeanne Aubert—Just a musical; will get by.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SEE, SEE, SENORITA: Broadway Brevities—Weak two-reeler with another impossible story even for a comedy.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SONGS THAT LIVE: Pepper Pot—A good short. Everybody enjoyed the old time songs. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Miscellaneous

TRAVEL PROGRAM: Cunard White Star Line—We planned a program of all travel picture in sound. It sure went over with a well received patronage. We obtained the films from a steamship company and they were free of charge. Films on Norway, Sweden, Russia, India, England, Iceland, Australia, Cuba, Mexico, etc. We also had some pictures of the large ocean liners and showing how they ran and how one had to be loaded for a trip. We tied up with the local travel office, the Michigan Trust Travel Office of this city, and they gave us material to hand out at the door. Believe me it was a success. You see everybody who was interested in traveling came, as it is spring and nearly every one is interested in doing something this summer. The entire picture only cost us the price of one cartoon comedy. It was all profit. They pay the postage one way. Express was only $1.38 on all shipments. We fixed up our theatre to look like the inside of a ship and the travel office loaned us pictures of huge steamers and trains, airplanes, etc. Posters and everything pertaining to travel. I never saw such a crowd in a long time. They just kept coming. We also tied up with the local Junior college, and the Economic, Geography and History classes came. Someone better try this program; you can't lose. I have posters and exhibits which I will gladly lend if anyone will pay postage on them for a travel picture. Record crowd. Running time, 120 minutes. Played Apr. 4-6.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

DOORMAN INTO MANAGER

The blame cannot be placed squarely upon the shoulders of either, but the fact remains that too many exhibitors regard the manager as much less than a vital force in operation.

Not so long ago the theatre manager, as a class, tallied more or less with Webster's definition: "one who manages, one who has control of a business." But not today.

That the theatreman is held in low estate is no revelation and the causes are not difficult to find. We give you one selected from the trade items on our desk.

A doorman in a western theatre has just been jumped to the position of manager and this observation is given with no reflection upon the abilities of the many tophole showmen who have worked themselves up from the ranks.

But these men spent long years of patient toil in learning their trade. Step by step they inched up the ladder, fighting to the top by sheer guts and ability, often aided by a sympathetic hand from far seeing superiors. In no instance were they projected from the doorman's job to what was then regarded as the all-important post of manager.

Once upon a time the business of theatre managing was considered an honored profession, a tightly held guild to which a comparative few would dare aspire. Doortending was an important step to membership, but only one of a score on the path to the goal. Unfortunately such arduous apprenticeship is evidently no longer held necessary, which may be a tipoff on what's wrong with the theatre.

To too many untutored minds in showbusiness the words doorman and manager are synonymous.

THE MOVIE MOVES UP

The progress of what educators hopefully term "visual education" is undoubtedly receiving impetus from the cooperation between schools and theatres made possible by the quality of product now forthcoming from the studios. As an instance, Manager Fred Souttar, of the Lincoln Theatre, Belleville, Ill., writes as follows on his "Copperfield" tieup:

"Students were advised they could see the picture and write an essay instead of reading the book, which is required."

After 15 years of operation, the Regent Theatre in Kansas City faced for the first time by opposition has begun to use newspaper advertising. Well, if any more competition crops up, wouldn't be at all surprised to learn the Dubinsky boys have started reading the Round Table.

MOHAMMED DID IT

Is ballyhoo out of place in the small town? Is flash advertising ineffective in these spots? Yes, says Hal Lee, of Bath, N. Y. (pop. 4,015). But not so positive is Frank Goldquist, of Savanna, Ill. (pop. 5,000). Both boys explain themselves in detail on a following page.

According to Lee, the farm trade being quite flat does not come into town as often and thus there are not sufficient crowds on the streets to make bally and flash worthwhile. Goldquist admits to high speed exploitation, but only on features strong enough to stand longer runs.

The problem of what to bally and when in a small town operation with three or more changes a week is not easy to solve. But we are not so sure that the flash and bally may safely be stuck away in storage until wheat picks up.

Basically, both Lee and Goldquist proceed along sound lines in going after the non-visiting ruralites with conventional but nonetheless effective newspaper, program and poster advertising, plus variations now and then on the bigger attractions.

But these questions naturally arise—would the grosses be tilted were pyrotechnics and drum-beating also employed from time to time? Does not the ruralite go for the circus parade as eagerly, if not more so, than his sophisticated city neighbor? Would not an interest-arousing stunt or contest react as profitably before a crowd of corn-growers as a group of bond salesmen?

The fact that farmers do not come to town as frequently does not detract from the essential value of bally. Conditions may have changed but even these can be coped with by the agile-minded showman with a gag that carries the sock.

After all, Mohammed went to the mountain.

WHAT, INDEED?

Let New York newspapers rant, excited city officials sneer, indignant letter writers protest. Let alarmed citizens raise voice agin' it. What do they know?

It's nothing new to showbusiness. Ingenious theatremen have been doing it for years—putting together presentable fronts, set pieces and what have you, with nothing but their fingernails, a hammer, used compoboard and left over paint.

What's wrong with "boon-doggling"?

Promotes Colonelcy on "Little Colonel"

Probably the most significant thing in Manager Bill Reilly's "Little Colonel" campaign that won the Quigley March Silver was that for the first time locally, an advertiser hit the front pages with a stunt. And the stunt was an authentic Kentucky Colonelcy that Bill promoted from the Governor, given to the winner of a Shirley Temple contest held on the stage of the theatre.

Once this was put across, Reilly advertised for "Temples" between the ages of four and seven. Over 75 were brought to the theatre and Bill states that twice that number phoned from spots as far as 40 miles away. Finally 15 were selected and rehearsed in two scenes from the picture—one showing Shirley receiving her commission as colonel of the regiment and the other the chess scene with Barrymore. Winner was decided by audience applause.

Merchants Donate Prizes

Other prizes were promoted such as spring outfit to the winner and runners-up, bank accounts, free photos, term passes to the theatre, etc. And not only the two local papers, but those in nearby towns gave the contest columns on columns of buildup, including plenty of page one. Bill also promoted transportation to the state capital for the winning child and her mother to receive the Colonelcy in person from the Governor.

There were other angles to the campaign, of course. Such as a children's style show on the stage sponsored by local store selling Temple dresses, and heavily advertised. Bill also put out a juvenile street bally with eight of the children in costume wearing signs calling attention to show and contest.

American Legion post paraded to theatre opening night and stage ceremonies that included an Honorary Colonelcy from the post to Shirley. Co-op pages, colored dancer bally on the street doing Bill Robinson taps, active tieins with local and nearby school superintendents, rubber stamping on bags in leading markets also clicked. And for a topper on the campaign the schoolmates of the contest winner threw a party for the youngster and Bill was invited to attend.

He sure rated an invite.

Puts Over "Dickens Day" on Copperfield

In 1842, Charles Dickens visited Belleville, Ill. He spent the night at a local hotel located on the exact spot where now stands the Lincoln Theatre, and thus it came about that Manager Fred C. Souttar won the March Quigley Bronze on "David Copperfield."

Fred's idea was that in conjunction with the opening of the picture the city should sponsor a "Dickens Day." The suggestion brought immediate enthusiasm, the Mayor proclaiming the celebration. Letters to the papers and personal messages further favored the event, all topped with an especially written editorial by Nick Perrin, famed historian, running nearly two columns in leading sheet.

Day ahead, an elaborate pageant was staged reenacting the arrival of Dickens. Old time bus was promoted and characters as shown in accompanying photo took the parts of the author, his wife and bus driver. Following was an auto with loud speaker plugging picture, next in line, a modern bus carrying copy comparing transportation between Belleville and St. Louis in the time of Dickens and today. Police escort led the parade. Bus was used during the day for bally with Dickens characters appearing round town.

Other exploitations were applied also, such as two different serials, private screenings for school heads who cooperated with class announcements and encouragement of student bodies in essay contests. How well this last went over is proved by Fred's statement that pupils were allowed to write an essay on the picture for credits instead of the book which was required reading.

Kite flying contests, "Copperfield" hair styles in annual hair dressers' show, various selected windows, lobby trunk-key stunt with local store, four-column cut of Madge Evans reading local paper and plugging special sales day were among Souttar's additional highlights that rounded out his cleverly executed campaign.

In Which Bill and Mac Do a Little Promotin'

Billings Booth, now operating the Palace, Jamestown, N. Y., with his co-partner, Walter M. McDowell, for Ralph Crabill, figured that a bit of promotion was due what with the Spring coming on and all that. So Bill and Mac promoted themselves a couple of those Kentucky Colonel commissions for Crabill and the local Mayor.

Then they promoted the Rotary Club to hold their weekly lunch on the theatre mezzanine, and for a change promoted the hotel to supply the feed at the usual rates. The Masonic Temple was next promoted for tables and the RKO exchange for a print of "Roberta," after which the commissions were sprung on Ralph and Hizzoner.

Just to be different then, the boys promoted the photographer for a shot of the doins', had the picture taken up against a "Roberta" set piece, and promoted the dailies to run a three-column cut of same.

Crabill is a Rotarian, Booth a Kiwanian, Mac a Lion—put them all together and they're a gang of promotin' curly wolves.

"I TALKED WITH DEERING"

Type of Exploitation in Any Town Determined by Tempo of Ads Used By Merchants, L. H. Keene Is Told

by FRANCIS R. DEERING

Manager, Loew's State, Memphis, Tenn.

Anyone in the employ of a major theatre circuit, which depends largely on the ingenuity and aggressiveness of its individual manpower for successful operation, has an opportunity to harvest a wealth of knowledge for profitable theatre operation—first through the reflected knowledge of his superiors, department heads skilled through years of training in their particular field and second through actual experience in varied assignments which most circuit managers are privileged to fill.

To me, one of the most important and possibly the most interesting lesson I have learned in the few young and inexperienced years I have been with Loew's, is the fact that an operation in one locality may be a success while a similar manner of operation in another city may be a total failure. This applies to nearly every phase and department of the theatre—exploitation, advertising, booking, personnel and operation.

Application of Principles Vary

Of course there are certain basic principles that should be adhered to in all instances. A manager should try to make himself and his theatre a vital part of the community, his house staff should be well trained, courteous and efficient, and his theatre should be well maintained and kept spic and span, no matter where the theatre is located. It is the application of these basic principles wherein the variations ensue.

In certain sections, particularly the metropolitan cities of the North, a distinguished front on the part of the house staff (executives in tuxedo, ushers at strict attention with clicking of heels and formal salutations) seems to be most impressive.

On the other hand, in some of our southern cities where good-fellowship plays a big part in every day business, the cold, rigid, formal atmosphere of the northern metropolis has no place. Instead, patrons expect a cheery sort of greeting, a handshake from the manager and human beings instead of drilled automatons for ushers.

It is in exploitation and advertising, however, that we see the greatest necessity for making our manner of operation suit the locality in which the theatre is situated. In one town it is possible to walk into a prospective "tie-up customer's" office with a burst of enthusiasm, exclaiming "boy, oh boy, have I got a great idea, or have I got a great idea?"—high pressure the man to death and walk out with a stunt in the bag. In another town the same line of chatter might be the very thing that would spoil a merchant's or newspaper man's respect for the theatre man who used it.

Some towns are inherently enthusiastic, both in merchandising and in public spirit, while others are conservative and slow-moving and each must be handled accordingly. On one assignment, it was very discouraging to go out and try to "sell" an idea only to be met with an answer something like this: "Well, we've been in business for a long time. My father never did things like that and neither did my grandfather—and while you've got a good idea and it might help me, I don't think we'd better try it"—and so on, until by being neighborly and patient for a length of time it was possible finally to secure a "co-op ad" or something similar purely through friendship. Then when that merchant or newspaper saw that the theatre tie-up was beneficial it was smooth sailing from then on.

In one particular instance it took two years of constant but friendly "nagging" with the hardboiled advertising manager of a large department store to secure his cooperation. When the first tie-up proved to be highly successful we became first-class buddies and hardly a week went by that we weren't plotting something new to stimulate business.

I have discovered, too, that the spirit of a town is reflected in the advertising copy used by department stores, grocery stores, drug firms and the like. Whenever you see a newspaper chock full of large ad spreads carrying sensational copy—whether it refers to baked beans or fur coats or high chairs for the baby—you can bet your last year's straw hat that that particular town will respond to high pressure salesmanship and ballyhoo. If, on the other hand, you find ad layouts that are dignified and conservative, you'll probably discover that this town is no place to try to bust a blood vessel in exploitation.

So much for regional differences. Now then, I should like, with your permission, although I'm somewhat of a novice at this managerial game and hardly capable of writing a book on "How to Become a Theatre Manager in Ten Easy Lessons," to point out some other interesting observations I have made.

Working Knowledge Necessary

Every theatre manager should have a working knowledge of every department from box-office to booth. Many of us have had the good fortune of starting right at the bottom and learning first hand the basic fundamentals of service, but not all of us have operated picture machines and cooling plants or served as stage hands or maintenance men. We can read and ask questions in order that we may talk intelligently on matters concerning any department.

A cashier expects us to know how a ticket machine works, an usher has more respect for us if we can direct patrons with as much snap and intelligence as he can, a stage hand should never guess that we don't know that you can't hang an apron on a stage or press a pair of pants with a gridiron.

How embarrassing it must have been for the manager who, when his divisional boss inquired about the piano in front of the box-office, replied, "Well, the booking and cue sheet said the act worked with piano in street." Cashier, usher, cleaner, operator, poster artists, engineer or stage—they all look to us as "boss" and as such we ought to be acquainted with every individual job.

School Boys Constructing Planes

What the Boys Are Doing On "Devil Dogs of the Air"

Julius Lamm, Uptown Theatre, in Cleveland, effected a smart tieup with high schools for "Devil Dogs" with boys in manual training classes constructing planes (see photo) which were entered in contest for promoted prizes and displayed in lobby.

Special kid matinee was held at which judging took place and two birdmen gave children talk on aviation. Special heralds were distributed in school rooms by merchant whose paid back ad took care of printing cost and lobby was decorated with motor head, including propeller promoted from local airport.

In Horicon, Wis.

I. J. Craite at the Pastime Theatre offered prizes to children coming closest to guessing correct number of pounds of Oats displayed in store window. Sets of glider planes were given out at special matinee and airplane cutouts were distributed to schools.

Down Fulton, Ky.

Burgess Waltmon at the Orpheum secured cooperation of superintendent of schools, who made announcements at combined assemblage of all schools recommending picture. One sheet display was placed at entrance of all schools and in gyms during basketball games. Bannered plane flew over city, several outstanding windows were secured and tack cards placed on telephone poles in city and surrounding towns.

Finishing in Boston

With Phil De Petro at the Modern extending invitation to captains and commanders of the Junior Birdmen to attend in body, newspaper tied in with questions and answers column on aviation, each day carrying theatre and picture plug. Blow up of Brisbane's editorial on the picture was used as part of lobby display and for street bally large sugar barrel painted red was planted on busy intersection with copy "do not feed." When the curious looked in the barrel further copy directed them to the theatre.

CRITICAL SLANT AT ENGLAND

English Publicists Do Good Job, Says New York Film Critic; Sets Down Some Overseas Impressions

by AL SHERMAN

It would be unfair to comment on differences in publicity methods between England and America and comment in a derogatory sense. Frankly, I think that most of the lads who purvey publicity on behalf of their English bosses do a darned good job of it. True, they find it difficult to understand American methods or ideas; they cannot appreciate our brash exploitation. But they have different media to work with—and, most important of all, a mental reaction on the part of the British public that is, at times, the direct antithesis of our Great American Moviegoer's allegedly child-like mind.

But in England your newspapers are all-powerful as publicity media. Your fan magazines are negligible, as compared to our powerful fan publications here. And your general magazines, with but few minor (or major) exceptions are of little value. So film producers and exhibitors find it necessary to stress newspaper publicity in a country where the cinema, up until a comparatively short time ago, rated as an entertainment force on a par with the lowest of low sports and beneath the dignity of editorial recognizance.

However, matters have changed now. England is cinema conscious and the result is that more and more motion picture news finds it way into the columns of British newspapers. And such earnest press-agents as Robb Lawson of United Artists; Frank Tilley of RKO-Radio; Hugh Findley of Gaumont-British and Jimmy Hutchinson of British International have been responsible, in great measure, for this change of heart.

These men more than get their measure of space. But if they don't go for ideas that are of the typically-brash American type, it's because they know that such ideas are contrary to policy. It's not because they don't recognize the value of new ideas. But Englishmen have a habit of thinking things over—and many a good idea becomes sophomoric when looked at in the clear light of day.

Britons Ace Space-Grabbers

But if it comes to space, I'd like to find any press-agent rivaling the lineage secured by Lawson on behalf of Eddie Cantor when that pop-eyed individual stirred England following his week in London. And Hutchinson, campaigning for "Forgotten Men," pulled some clever publicity angles that reaped plenty of space before that flicker opened for a London run.

I just want to emphasize one thing: The average good English press-agent is good at his job—no matter how he and his methods might strike us over here. But English producers should realize that even if British publicity methods achieve their purpose in England, that doesn't prove their worth in this country.

British studio publicity, as a rule, is valueless here. Ask any press-agent who has been compelled to turn some of that tripe into understandable copy. And ask any editor. I know whereof I speak. Because I have handled such picture publicity.

If British producers are giving serious thought to the American market, then they should study that market from a publicity angle, as well as from its distribution possibilities. I have discussed this time and again with such men as Michael Balcon, of Gaumont-British; with Arthur Dent of British International; with Herbert Wilcox of British-and-Dominion. They all agree with me—and yet little has been done about it. Perhaps because, like many other producers, the publicity department always is given last consideration or, perhaps, because they have been immersed in other and, for the time being, more important matters. But the fact remains, though, that publicity and advertising are as vital to the ultimate financial success of a picture as the picture itself or the sales force that is selling it. Because publicity is the one direct contact, other than the exhibitor, between producer and public.

Publicity Requires Study

In time, you'll find British production hitting a high level. Alexander Korda helped pave the way—and the other companies aren't far behind. But to accomplish really important results, the film companies in England will have to make use of the talents of American publicists who, however, are not only advertising men or stunt press-agents, but public relations counsellors in every sense of the word. And I mean by that gentlemen who are prepared to go to England, study the situation there, sit in on production as well as publicity methods and then plan campaigns that will make it easier for the publicist here—and the editor at any American desk.

In other words, press-agents who turn out publicity copy that will not be patterned after the English copy but will find quick acceptance here. Also, they will have to be advertising experts who can sit down and, in addition to publicity copy, rough out a few ideas that will make it easier for the American publicist.

'BALLYHOO IS OUT IN SMALL TOWN'

SAYS TIEUPS NO HELP IN THE LESSER SPOTS

DEAR MIKE:

Although I have not been so active as a Club Member for some time, I have not missed reading the Club pages each week. There was a time when many of the boys, including myself, sent in their campaigns, but they have been missing for the past year or two, not because we are "regusted" with the Club or that the Club has slipped, but because it has got to a point in the smaller towns where we have got to get them in with something besides tieups and ballyhoos. Possibly I am wrong about the other boys, but in my situation I am right.

In the larger towns with a large transient trade it is necessary to ballyhoo and flash the attractions, but in the small town this is out, more so today than in the past, due to the fact that people from the rural territory do not come in as often. What we must do now is to get out into the nearby towns and rural districts every week.

Covers Town and Country

To get our attractions before these people I consider the billboard, window cards, program and newspaper the best mediums. I have a large outside territory covering ten small towns which we bill each week with 3 sheets and cards. Also have a direct mailing list covering every R F D route and call boxes in these towns. This demands around 3,000 programs. Some of these towns are near other theatres who also bill in the territory but not as extensively as we do. In the summer we have a nearby lake that draws a large tourist trade. This we also go after with the mailing list, and for the past two seasons have enjoyed good returns from the lake region.

Now you might ask what about the people in your town. This is not neglected. We also cover the town with programs and cards placed in the important stores and shops. Along with the marquee, lobby, trailers and three weekly newspapers I am sure people in Bath and vicinity are well informed each week on what we are playing.

I don't mean to say that I pass up promoting as good a window display that can be arranged on certain pictures, but what I'm getting at is, tieups of the type we small fellows arrange would be of no value to the larger theatres. However, there are many things in theatre operation that are of value to use outside of exploitation appearing in the Club pages and I believe there could be plenty more of it. Come on, some of you small town managers, join the Club and let's hear what you have to say about the small town theatre operation.—HAROLD C. LEE, MANAGER BABCOCK THEATRE, BATH, N. Y.

BRONZE FRONT. Norvell Yantis, artist, Newman Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., created this attractive "Sweet Music" front, made of bronze corrugated paper.

WANTS MORE DISCUSSION ON THEATRE OPERATION

There also are other things of value outside of exploitation that appear in the pages, says Hal Lee, who believes "there could be plenty more of it", and invites other small town managers to join up and enter in these discussions. Gents, take the floor.

—A-MIKE

FEELS LENGTH OF RUN DETERMINES THE BALLY

DEAR MIKE:

". . . I used to be a firm believer in exploitation and I still am as far as the longer runs are concerned. But where we play three shows a week, none of them running more than three days, it is not such a good plan to exploit many of them above the others. For a town the size of Savanna, five thousand, we are playing better than the average programs. Every Sunday sees a big picture starting a three-day run and we play them just as soon as possible.

We have a campaign back of every one, confining ourselves mostly to poster advertising. We have four one sheets, a three sheet, a six sheet and a 24 sheet on all of these in Savanna. The six and 24 sheets are lighted, working night as well as day. In addition to the lobby display at the Web we use the lobby of the other theatre we control for Web displays. This house has not been open for some time. We have poster panels in four towns within a radius of 20 miles and these are posted every week with three one sheets on our shows. In two other towns we have insert cards. In the spring we will probably put up two more poster panels in towns that have just been opened to us by a new bridge.

I observe some towns larger than Savanna do not use newspaper advertising every night. We considered this policy some time ago, but decided it is better to be consistent about this and have an ad in every night. We also have an ad in the county seat weekly paper, ten miles away. This not only takes care of that locality, but covers the country population very well. My ads are not large, but in preparing them I always try to place myself in the place of those I want to reach with the idea of how I would react if I were the reader.

We have a small but live mailing list, everyone on it being someone who has actually requested cards be sent them. These are to those outside of Savanna who do not see a newspaper. We simply have the week's program printed up on a postcard and get them in the mails so everyone will have theirs by Saturday morning.

Occasionally we get out tack cards and heralds or rotos. I find the best method of circulating the latter are through the Sunday papers. The distributors do this everywhere, but if this can be done it means the stuff will get right into the homes.

We believe we accomplish more in doing this way than in an occasional spasmodic campaign. Our accessory bills are high, especially that we find buying of poster exchanges is poor economy. We tried that for a while, but it did not work out, as they were seldom able to supply our needs.

While we try to keep our front neat and well supplied with frames and attractive material we realize in a small town there is little transient patronage and much spent on the front is wasted. We keep our lamps trimmed and burning, making frequent inspections. Just as soon as a light burns out a fresh one replaces it. When too many begin to go we replace them all with new lights.

Is "Uncle Webbie" on Radio?

On our screen we use Advance trailer, keeping a week ahead on all coming attractions. We did use scene trailers for a while but found them too long and tiresome where three are on all the time. We do not use slides of any description. For special announcements "Uncle Webbie," as the kids call me, goes on the air with our public address system.

This "note" has become longer than intended at the outset. Different localities react differently, of course, and it seems that this is a very good reason for managers being left in a town and not shifted around too much.—FRANK C. GOLDQUIST, MANAGER, WEB THEATRE, SAVANNA, ILL.

ADVERTISING FILM

INVASION of the amusement screen by advertising films, and advertising in films, is arousing the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to the stage where official announcement of "much concern" is made.

There have been advertising films variously and sporadically shown on the theatre screen since that screen began in 1896. There have been invasions of the amusement pictures by advertising plants, occasionally, sporadically, ever since the first one-reelers were made. Once upon a time the cameramen for an honored newsreel carried signs for Mecca cigarettes in their camera case and got a dollar from the producers of the reel every time they were able to tack a sign into the background of a news event. What the producers got is not in the record. That was along ago. Nothing very important to the destiny of the screen as a whole ever resulted. Subsequently highly organized plans for screen advertising, the now faded Publix project, were tried, and nothing happened.

The current pressures in the same direction take their inspiration from the fact of extensively sponsored radio programs, from the enterprise of advertising agents, courageous gentry who would be happy to put a twenty-four sheet on the Washington Monument if they could get at it.

The motion picture exhibitors have unanimously resented movements calculated to sell their screen time out from under them, in the guise of amusement production. The exhibitors differ considerably on the policy of selling time on their screens themselves. Information gleaned by The Herald indicates that a surprising number of screens are now and have been for a considerable time available for the delivery of advertising messages.

The decision, and ultimately a decision will have to be made, will not come from the motion picture industry but from its customers, the box office public.

Current radio programs, as good or as poor as they are, may be taken as an index of the level of quality and appeal that may be expected of an amusement medium to which the sponsor and his copywriters dictate.

The motion picture has grown great by being the best show in the world. Will sponsored interludes help the show?

HERRING

A NUMBER of persons whose profession is hell raising on the margins of the motion picture industry are, as vociferously as possible with their access to printers' ink, seeking to drag herring across the trail of self-seeking promotional programs of certain figures who want to jimmy their way into the amusement business by legislation rather than by enterprise. Embarrassed most obviously, the hell-raisers ignore documentary facts and seek to charge the editor of the Herald with being the catspaw of special interests.

In this instance there is but one question: Is there or is there not a definite, declared program on the part of a clique and clan to use the Pettengill bill, to use influence with the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, to use any and all expedients, to set up a nationwide motion picture activity in competition with the existing exhibition branch of the industry?

The answer is: Yes.

The evidence, the proof, is available in the pages of Motion Picture Herald of March 30 and April 13.

The merits of the Pettengill bill, as a document on its own, or the preponderance of opinion and purpose in the membership of the Congress of Parents and Teachers, and the opinions which marginal agitators profess to hold about the editor of this page and publication, are entirely irrelevant.

The facts stand—and that is what the shouting is about.

THE TELEVISION SPECTER

PUBLICITY pother and bungling in Great Britain, misleading the public there about the practical immediate tomorrow of television, substantially promising delivery at once, within a few weeks, has knocked the radio set business over there into a seventy per cent decline, meanwhile sending some tremors through the motion picture as well. In haste now efforts are being made to promulgate the facts and repair the damage.

It seems that presently the British Broadcasting Corporation will have one television station serving a twenty-five mile circle in the London area—and that will be all until the end of 1936, and maybe longer. Adequate sets to receive the programs will cost about $300. The product will be television pictures as we have seen them, no better.

Meanwhile periodically, founded on hopes, waves of television excitement are set in motion in the United States. We are about due for a new one. These waves emanate from persons who attained position and fortune by a prior scientific miracle and who would now like to have a new one, who very much need a new one. Their necessity has been trying, desperately, to mother an invention now for some years. It is not yet.

From time to time these pages record what is going on in television. There is no revolution for the amusement world in sight.

THIS WEEK---

FILMS AT LAST

Back in 1920 campaigning began to permit the erection of a film theatre in Winchester, Mass., a wealthy community. Only last week was the object accomplished, when the citizenry voted 2,475 to 1,717. It finally required a parade of youngsters with banners and a house-to-house plea to put the idea across. . . .

PROMOTION!

Judson Stevens, for 16 years a bookkeeper in the accounting department of Walter Wanger's production unit on the Coast, which produces for Paramount release, quit his job last week, assumed the assistant director's post on "Shanghai."

OSWALD'S BIRTHDAY

Easter Sunday, Oswald celebrated his ninth birthday. Oswald, who is Universal's cartoon character, and a rabbit, comes of distinguished parentage, for his father is none other than Walt Disney, whose other child, Mickey Mouse, has done well for himself. Walter Lantz, with a staff of 51 on the Coast, presides over the destiny of Universal's "Lucky Rabbit." . . .

MANAGERS LAUDED

Theatre managers of Birmingham, Ala., were praised at a recent meeting of the local Better Films Council for their successful efforts in bringing improved motion pictures to the city. At the meeting, when the laudatory resolution was passed, the Reverend J. R. Hobbs, chief speaker, urged more vigorous censorship for motion pictures. . . .

FRED ERIC

In the theatre since youth, noted for his Shakespearian roles, Fred Eric died last week at his New York home, at the age of 61. He supported Julia Marlowe in his first appearance, made his last in 1932, as Booth in the play, "If Booth Had Missed." He played with most of the leading performers of an earlier day, operated his own repertory company, and played in Shakespeare innumerable times. . . .

"BLACK FURY" PASSED

First National's "Black Fury," starring Paul Muni, and picturing strike conditions in the Pennsylvania coal fields, last week was passed by the Chicago censor, which previously had banned it in entirety. Mayor Edward Kelly swung the decision. The Maryland censor also passed the film recently, after having delayed exhibition. . . .

VAUDEVILLE

For the first time in years vaudeville played simultaneously at two Memphis first run theatres, when Paul Ash headed the bill at the Orpheum and Larry Rich topped the program at Loew's State. . . .

B & K PROFIT

Balaban & Katz, Chicago circuit, has reported net profit of $425,447 for the year ended December 29, the best report since 1931. The circuit is a Paramount Publix affiliate. Profit for 1933 was $95,191. The balance sheet as of December 29 last showed current assets of $815,779 and current liabilities of $1,310,164. Elmer C. Upton, secretary-treasurer, was elected a director, succeeding E. Paul Phillips, others being reelected. . . .

CAST OF BIRDS

Already having penetrated 15 states, traveled 3,000 miles and planning to cover the country before the year is out, is the Cornell Ornithological Expedition of the Museum of Natural History, headed by Professor Arthur A. Allen of Cornell. With color film cameras and latest sound recording apparatus, the expedition is compiling virtually an audible cyclopedia of American bird life in 1935. . . .

AMAZING PRICE

The play in search of a studio purchaser at the moment in England, according to the Associated Press, is "St. Joan," for the film rights of which its author, the bearded and biting George Bernard Shaw, asks a mere $250,000. He actually believes he will get it, says the AP. . . .

CIRCUIT DIVIDEND

Famous Players Canadian, Dominion circuit with headquarters in Montreal, has declared a dividend of 50 cents per share, payable April 27 to stockholders of record April 24. The last previous dividend, also of 50 cents, was paid in June, 1932. . . .

"MUZZIE"—AGED 70

Players, writers, directors, executives, to the number of 200, gathered on the MGM lot last week to honor May Robson, celebrating her 70th birthday and her 52nd year as an actress. At her home, "Muzzie," as she is known in Hollywood, completely belied her years by holding open house for hosts of friends. . . .

PUBLICITY STILL RADIOED

From the studio of Hal Roach, MGM short subject producer in Hollywood, was transmitted by telephoto a publicity still of the reunion of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, comedians. It was sent to Roach representatives in London and Paris for newspapers in European cities. . . .

WORLDLINESS

The transformation of Buenos Aires, Argentina, from a provincial city to a world capital was evident this year on Good Friday. The usual custom of an air of mourning, and the showing only of Passion Play films at the theatres, gave way to a wide variety of pictures, only one house showing a religious film, and wide open cafes and tearooms, where bands blared. . . .

PETTENGILL SUPPORT

The Louisiana Parent-Teacher Association, meeting in convention at Alexandria last week, urged control of the booking of motion pictures, selectivity as an exhibitor privilege and censorship at the point of production, which in part is the current Pettengill bill before Congress. Mrs. Robbins Gilman of Minneapolis conducted a conference on films. . . .

SOVIET FILMS

For showing in their Clay International theatre, San Francisco, Herbert Roesner and Charles Pincus have bought 12 Russian-produced films, the largest group of Soviet product ever taken at one time in the city. Consecutive weekly showings will begin May 4, the films booked from Amkino, American distributing arm of the state controlled Soviet film industry. . . .

VARIETY CLUB

Omaha's Variety Club is actually under way, with final organization plans presented last week by a committee including Evert R. Cummings, John J. Gillin, Jr., Harry Shumow, Roy Miller. James Rogers has been named temporary treasurer. . . .

MUSIC TAX NEAR MILLION PAID BY THEATRES IN YEAR

Composers' Society Members Share Largest Royalties in Its History, on Lowest Overhead, 25 Per Cent of Gross

Exhibitors Contribute Almost One - third of $3,375,000 Receipts from License Fees, Under New Seat Tax Scale

The motion picture theatres of the United States in 1934 contributed close to $1,000,000 to the coffers of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in the form of royalty license fees for public performance of the Society's copyrighted music. This represents almost one-third of the Society's total income from license payments for the year, the organization's gross license fees in 1934 having been "in excess of" $3,375,000 from domestic sources.

On the conservative basis of 12,500 theatres actually operating at the end of 1934—these houses having an estimated total seating capacity of 8,348,901—the amount paid to the Society would have been $834,890 at the former flat rate of 10 cents a seat, but the total unquestionably was considerably higher because on Oct. 1, 1934, the scale went into effect and all full-time theatres of more than 800 seats whose agreements with the Society had then expired were required to pay from 50 to 100 per cent more.

In addition to its collections from the exhibition branch of the film industry, the Society realized an appreciable amount in gross license fees from the radio broadcasting industry—an amount probably comparable with and possibly greater than that contributed by the theatres. The radio broadcasters, too, are paying appreciably higher fees to ASCAP than they did two and one-half years ago, now making payments on a percentage against net receipts from the sale of broadcast time, in addition to payment of a flat sustaining fee for broadcasting of copyrighted musical works.

The remainder of the collections came from night clubs, hotels, music and dance halls, and other sources in which music is performed publicly for profit.

Only 25 Per Cent Overhead

The $3,375,000 gross collection of the American Society for 1934 was the largest in the organization's history and was accomplished on a 25 per cent overhead, the lowest ever recorded. In previous recent years the Society's overhead has run as high as 50 and 60 per cent. These facts were made known at the annual meeting of the organization at the Ritz-Carlton hotel in New York early this month—a meeting marked by accusations against the film industry and a wholesale dispute over a proposal that the Society's board of directors be elected by the membership at large instead of being self-perpetuated.

HOTEL RESERVED FOR CANADIAN INQUIRY

Detailed statements of royalties collected and disposed of, the right to levy such tolls, and substantiation of title to more than 2,000,000 musical compositions, are being ordered by the Canadian Government in its investigation into the activities of the Canadian Performing Rights Society, collection agency in the Dominion for royalties on copyrighted music, for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The inquiry opened Wednesday. With every branch of the entertainment industries affected and legal counsel arrayed by every classification and branch, it was decided to set apart a section of a Toronto hotel for the hearing, as it was believed no courtroom in the city would be large enough to accommodate representatives of the film, theatre and radio industries, as well as those appearing for hotels, restaurants, dance halls and night clubs, all of whom are filing complaints against the Society.

This week E. Claude Mills, general manager of the Society, refused to divulge the breakdown of collection sources for 1934, nor would he estimate what proportion of the organization's income had been derived from motion picture theatres, radio and other sources.

"It might be beneficial to us to publicize the way this money is split up," Mr. Mills said, "but as yet there has been no policy adopted by the board which would permit me to reveal it. Understand, this is strictly a non-profit organization and I can see no reason why the publication of the way this sum was derived would serve any particular purpose. However, we certainly have nothing to hide."

Largest Royalty Distributed

Mr. Mills did say that the Society's members last week divided among themselves their largest purse. Royalties distributed for the first quarter of 1935 approximated $760,000, representing an increase of nearly 10 per cent over the first three months of 1934.

"So far as I know, collections are made in exactly the same manner as in any other business," he said. "Statements are rendered and bills are paid by mail. We most certainly do not have an army of bill collectors pounding the sidewalk."

The American Society has been in the line of fire ever since sound pictures came into existence and exhibitors rebelled against paying a "seat tax" for reproduction privileges. This feeling was aggravated by realization that, in film rentals, they also were paying "score charges" of producer-distributors, who also were being assessed by the Music Publishers' Protective Association for the recording rights to copyrighted music. The Protective Association is an affiliate of ASCAP.

Originally the Society imposed a straight tax of 10 cents a seat annually from all theatres for the reproduction privilege, but last year the industry's exhibition branch brought matters to a head when it threatened to sue on antitrust charges, following announcement of heavy increases in license fees scaled according to the size of theatres. In addition, exhibitors threatened cancellation of all existing agreements.

Government Suit Pending

Mr. Mills at that time said that exhibitors legally could not cancel their contracts, and that if they did and subsequently infringed upon any of the organization's 6,000,000 copyrighted musical numbers, the Society would sue—"and collect."

Mr. Mills belittled the possibility of exhibitors getting Congressional action to have the copyright laws revised to regulate or dissolve the Society, and pointed out that the copyright law under which the 45,000 members of ASCAP are protected has been upheld in practically every nation.

However, less than three weeks thereafter, the Government filed a suit charging monopoly of popular music and sought dissolution of all existing license fee agreements for royalty payments made to the Society by users of music—broadcasters, film theatres, producers and others.

In addition, the Government asked restraining orders to prevent the organization and its affiliated enterprises from entering into new agreements or renewing old ones for the public performance of music on a royalty basis unless such contracts and royalties were determined by genuine competition among copyright owners.

Says Fees Would Be Higher

Mr. Mills' unofficial answer to the Government's action was that if dissolution were ordered, the commercial users of music would have to pay more, should they be required to deal individually with hundreds of music copyright owners.

The Government in its action also named as defendants the Music Publishers' Protective Association (said to control 75 per cent of the nation's copyrighted music), and Music Dealers' Service, Inc., (reputedly in control of most of the popular sheet music). In addition, some 130 publishers and publishing companies belonging to the Society were named.

The three organizations, the Government

FILMS, RADIO PAY MOST MUSIC TAX

charged, by interlocking directorates and by agreements, have been allied since 1932 in a conspiracy to monopolize the music business in violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

Further, by means of this combination, the Government charged, "competition between copyright owners in the sale of licenses to public performers of copyrighted musical composition has been eliminated and there has been created a pool or consolidation of individual copyright monopolies in the Society by virtue of which the Society has the power to dictate the manner" in which radio broadcasting stations, motion picture theatres and other commercial copyrighted music users may operate in this connection.

Exhibitors Formed Committee

Following the Government's action, exhibitors organized the Exhibitors' National Emergency Committee, representing 8,000 theatres, to carry on the fight against the proposed increase in seat taxes, which ran as high as 1,000 per cent over the then existing tax of 10 cents a seat annually. The committee indicated that unless the Government brought its action to trial without delay it would file a similar suit at once. The 8,000 theatres represented by the committee pledged a minimum of "a-penny-a-seat" for a trial fund.

Early in October, however, the legal sub-committee of the Exhibitors' National Emergency Committee decided, upon assurances from Washington that the Government would amend its antitrust suit to cover all exhibitor complaints against the Society and that the suit would be brought to trial before Nov. 1, 1934, to refrain from initiating any official independent action, at least until the Government's suit had been tried.

Shortly after the increased rates had become effective on October 1 the Society got together with the exhibitor committee to readjust the new scale.

The scale which was to have gone into effect on October 1, on a graduated basis, would have levied on a first-run 2,000-seat theatre an annual license charge of $1,275, as against the previous royalty of $200 paid on the flat rate of 10 cents a seat.

New Agreement Reached

Finally, after weeks of argument, the groups came to an agreement on a modified schedule, which was made retroactive to Oct. 1, 1934. That scale, currently in effect, is as follows:

	Per Seat
Theatres seating less than 800 and operating less than three days a week	5c.
Theatres seating 800 or less and operating more than three days weekly	10c.
Theatres seating between 801 and 1,599 .... (Or $120.15 for the smallest and $239.85 for the largest theatre in this group, representing a 50 per cent increase over the old rate.)	15c.
Theatres seating 1,600 and more ..... (Equivalent to $320 for the smallest and $1,100 for the 5,500-seat theatre.)	20c.

The middle of November the Society filed its answer to the Government's antitrust suit, denying it had created a monopoly in the music field or ever had so attempted. The brief cited the music tax compromise agreed upon between itself and the Exhibitors' National Emergency Committee as an example of the "amicable system of collective bargaining through which the organization's music tax schedules are established." The answer also said the exhibitor committee was "entirely pleased" with the compromise. However, both the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors are still opposing the seat tax schedules and several local exhibitor units in the field have threatened action to enjoin collection of the music tax until the Government's anti-trust suit has been decided.

CULBERTSON TELLS ADVERTISERS HOW

Ely Culbertson, bridge expert, who at one time made a series of film shorts on bridge, offered some constructive criticism on advertising during an address before the Advertising Club in New York last week. Denying that his recent man-and-wife 150-rubber bridge match with Mr. and Mrs. P. Hal Sims was a publicity stunt, Mr. Culbertson said he had never used a publicity "stunt," which he called "the best way of earning the contempt of the mass mind."

"The basic technique in influencing the mass mind," said Mr. Culbertson, "is sincerity. The crowd mind is suspicious, and while it admits exaggerations, there must be a kernel of truth. The ignorance of the true principles and technique of the crowd mind is costing advertisers hundreds of millions of dollars yearly."

May Delay Government Trial

Trial of the Government's suit still is pending, and may be put over until next autumn on the grounds that the Society's answer was improper and irrelevant. Federal Judge Knox in New York this month indicated such delay and announced he had directed a substantial part of the Society's answer stricken out.

At the Society's annual meeting in New York, Walter Fisher, music publisher, proposed that the board be elected by the membership at large instead of being self-perpetuating. Billy Rose, producer of musical shows, charged that Mr. Fisher's suggestion was a move backed by motion picture interests owning music houses to seek control not only of the directorate but of the Society itself. Mr. Rose said that certain motion picture-owned publishing companies were in favor of the move and that 62 writers in Hollywood representing the Song Writers' Protective Association had voted in favor of elections by the membership. All of these writers, Mr. Rose pointed out, were working and writing for motion picture studios.

Mr. Fisher's motion was defeated by 375 to 8, but Mr. Rose's attack had repercussions last week from Hollywood when Jerome Kern, composer, wired his resignation from the board. He later explained his resignation was prompted by his inability to attend director meetings more than half the time.

Radio's royalty contribution to the Society prior to 1933 had amounted to about $960,000 annually on a flat sustaining basis. Near the close of 1932, the Society served notice on the broadcasters that, unless they substantially increased royalty payments, all copyrighted material belonging to ASCAP would be withdrawn from radio channels. The Society had decided that performing rights via broadcasting were the "only real value left" to popular copyrighted numbers. Such royalties as on sales of sheet music and records had shown sharp depreciation.

Negotiations were launched accordingly between the Society and the broadcasters, the Society demanding 5 per cent of the $60,000,000 to $75,000,000 grossed annually from the sponsors of commercial programs.

Fee Plus Percentage of Time Net

The controversy ended when the National Association of Broadcasters approved an agreement which provided for continued payment of the combined sustaining fee of $960,000, plus 3 per cent of the net income from the sale of broadcasting time for the first year; to be raised to 4 per cent for the second year, and to 5 per cent for the third year. At the time it was reported that the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System had signed the agreement which automatically would have increased royalty payments from the broadcasters alone to $3,000,000 for 1933; $4,000,000 for 1934, and $5,000,000 for 1935.

This week, however, Mr. Mills told the HERALD that those rates were agreed upon "in formula only," and that the Society had not dealt collectively with the broadcasting industry but had signed agreements with individual stations.

"Our agreements were based upon that formula," Mr. Mills said Tuesday, "but it provided for substantially reduced sustaining fees applied differently to individual stations. I should say the amount of this reduction, spread over the whole field, would be about $200,000. Then, in addition, the stations agreed to pay a percentage of 3 per cent for the first year, 4 per cent for the second and 5 per cent for the third, against the net receipts from the sale of broadcast time."

NBC chalked up gross income of $28,062,885 from sales of broadcast time in 1934, Columbia $14,825,845.

Six Tri-Ergon Suits End

Six additional American Tri-Ergon patent infringement suits were withdrawn in New York Tuesday under leave granted by Federal Judge William Bondy as the result of the supreme court ruling holding Tri-Ergon patents invalid. The actions withdrawn were those against Columbia, MGM, Universal, 20th Century, Reliance and Du-Art Film Laboratory.

PERSPECTIVE SOUND RECORDING GOES INTO ACTION AT STUDIOS

Method Blending Two Sound Tracks Aims to Vary Tonal Quality of Close-ups; Also Medium and Long Shots

"Perspective sound," the latest development in the refining process of recording, is about to make its appearance in Hollywood's studios. The method is being utilized for the first time in Columbia's forthcoming Grace Moore picture, "Love Me Forever."

"Perspective sound" has been developed by J. P. Maxfield, staff engineer of Electrical Research Products, Inc., and purports to bring a new dimensional quality to sound pictures, which, in the end, also promises to help solve many of the motion picture exhibitor's projection problems.

Operation of the new method of recording involves two microphones and two tracks to be used on every foot of film. In a scene where two actors are speaking, one in the foreground, the other farther off, the two tracks will be blended so that audiences will hear the foreground actor talk louder than the one in the rear, this by virtue of distance perspective, now to be translated into "perspective sound."

The device, it is said, will admit of a material difference in tonal quality as among closeups, mediums and long shots.

On Film Itself

Rise and fall of sound, together with the new perspective quality, hereafter will be on the film itself, leaving the projectionist free to dispense with his fader.

Columbia was the first studio to experiment with Erpi's "hill and dale" sound recording principle by which "One Night of Love" was produced, and it is again the experimental laboratory for the electric company's newest recording development.

"Perspective sound" first was discussed before the industry late in February by Mr. Maxfield through a paper read before the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood. At the time Mr. Maxfield based his explanation of the new method upon specific control of the acoustics of pickup.

It has been known for a long time, he explained to the Academy's technical branch, that in different studio sets or in different rooms the microphone distance varied even though the resulting effect desired remained the same from room to room.

It was believed, therefore, that the correlation between the acoustic properties of the space and the proper placement of the microphone could be determined. This was achieved and a formula finally was arrived at connecting the "liveness" of the recording or pickup with the microphone distance and the acoustic properties of the room in which the sound was being picked up.

During the past two years, Mr. Maxfield said, intensive experimental recordings have been made, by Erpi engineers, of various types of sound, including speech, solo singing, solo violin, small orchestras and large symphony orchestras, but the first reliable data came from experiments carried out with the cooperation of Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Symphony. Records were made under varying conditions of "liveness," and these records then were played to various juries consisting of engineers, musical groups and persons having no technical knowledge of sound.

Mr. Maxfield explained "liveness" by the following formula:

1000—is a constant.
T—stands for the time of reverberation of the room.
V—represents the number of cubic feet of air there is in the room, or space under consideration, and
D—stands for the distance between the source of sound and the ear, or the microphone.

From the results of the votes obtained, three conclusions were drawn:

1. That engineers in general prefer a lower range of "liveness" than do the musicians and the lay public.

2. That the range of "liveliness" acceptable to any one person is quite large.

3. That the average range accepted by the musicians and lay public overlaps the range accepted by the engineers.

This is shown schematically in Figure 1, where the group marked "E" represents the range acceptable to engineers and the curve marked "P" and "M" represents the range acceptable to the public and musicians. In this connection, it was pointed out that these curves are typical only and that to a certain extent the "liveness" which is acceptable depends upon the correlation of the sound with the picture.

"This all leads to a consideration of a factor connected with 'liveness'," Mr. Maxfield told the Academy. "That is, the greater the 'liveness' the further the apparent source of sound is from the listener. For instance, if a voice was recorded with a liveness lying in the region near 'A,' Figure 1, it would be judged on reproduction as a good closeup voice; if, on the other hand, the same voice had been recorded with a 'liveness' in the region of 'B,' Figure 1, it would be judged as coming from a point 15 or 20 feet back of the screen. In other words, by the proper control of 'liveness' in recording it is possible to introduce a definite fore and aft perspective into the sound to correlate with the existing perspective."

The range of "liveness" which the various juries in Mr. Maxfield's experiments chose for various types of sound sources are presented in the following table, the ranges given referring to the range of the overlap region of Figure 1. The lower figures in the table correspond to the approximately medium closeup where a picture accompanies the sound, while the higher figures correspond approximately to a medium long shot. When extreme closeups are desired, a "liveness" of approximately one-half the lower figure will be found suitable, while for the extreme long shot values twice as high as the larger figure will not be too great. The table follows:

Piano solo	4 — 8
Symphony orchestra	5 —10
Small orchestra	3 — 6
Violin, cello, etc.	1½— 3
Solo singing	.6 — 1.2
Speech	.2 — .4

The effect of recording too close, Mr. Maxfield explained, results in a tone quality which tends to sound "thin" and "edgy" and lacks what the musicians call the firmness and roundness so highly desired in good music. This disagreeable effect can, and frequently is, partly cured by modifying the frequency characteristic of the reproduced sound in such a manner as to decrease the intensity of the harmonics which are responsible for the timbre, or quality.

Mr. Maxfield pointed out that in the foregoing table it will be noticed that for the types of sound listed the extreme range is from 0.2 to 10; that is, about 50 to 1.

"Fortunately," he said, "this extreme range seldom occurs in any one scene and therefore does not introduce the difficulties which might be expected at first. For instance, a voice accompanied by a full symphony orchestra is not difficult to record on a good scoring stage. If, however, the voice in various parts of the song is to be first in a long shot, then closeup, then semi-closeup, and so on, it is either necessary to know how the picture will be shot before the scoring is done or to find some means of changing the liveness of the voice recording after the records have been made and the picture has been cut."

In actual picture production it frequently is customary to pre-score musical scenes and it is therefore necessary to make recordings in such a manner that the perspective can be adjusted in the dubbing process after the picture has been cut. Perspective sound accomplishes this result, the technique consisting simply of making two simultaneous records on separate channels.

"The first of these recordings should be made with a low enough 'liveness' factor to be suitable for an extreme closeup, while the second record should be recorded with such a 'liveness' factor that it is suitable for an extreme long shot," Mr. Maxfield explained. "With these two records available at the time the dub-bing takes place, it is possible to obtain any desired 'liveness' between the two values originally recorded by the simple expedient of mixing the two tracks in the proper proportions.

"The value of this technique cannot be too heavily stressed, since it allows to the director complete freedom in the taking and cutting of the picture without reference to the perspective which was originally recorded at the time the pre-scoring was done. The director's use of this freedom in no way detracts from the ultimate illusion produced in the theatre since the dubbing process enables the sound to be adjusted to the picture as the director or cutter has finally arranged it."

Mr. Maxfield then told his audience about the newest developments in volume or loudness range experimentation, explaining that while the volume range necessary for reproduction of a symphony orchestra is somewhere in the neighborhood of 70 to 80 decibels, existing commercial equipment, unfortunately, has a considerably smaller range and it is therefore necessary to compress the volume range in the recording process.

Lowered Emotional Effect

Musicians, he explained, consistently have complained that this compression of volume range greatly lowers the emotional value of music reproduction. A study was made to determine whether or not a method of volume compression could be found which would do a minimum of damage to the emotional reaction of the audience to the reproduction.

The older and more common method of compression where a crescendo was involved was to wait until the volume approached the overload and then, by use of the control dial, to hold it down within safe limits, Mr. Maxfield said. A reference to Figure 2 makes this clear. The dotted line in the Figure represents the lowest level which can be reproduced without serious disturbance from background noise. The full line labeled 'Overload Level" represents the loudest sound that can be reproduced without an overload of equipment. The full line labeled "Maximum Music Level" represents the level which would have to be reproduced if no change in the control dial were made during the playing of the crescendo illustrated in the Figure. The full line "A" represents the loudness plotted against time for the actual crescendo as played by the orchestra. The line "B," which for a considerable portion of its distance coincides with the line "A," shows the older method of volume control. The line "C," which also coincides for a small portion of its distance with the line "A," represents the recorded volume with the new method of control.

Procedure in Experiments

The procedure in the case of the experiments leading to this new method were as follows:

During a concert the volume was controlled in the manner shown by line "B" and a musical score of the selection was marked to show, first, the measure at which the change must be completed in order to avoid overload and, second, the amount of compression required to avoid overload. This marked score was taken to Mr. Stokowski and he indicated on the score the measure at which the compression should take place and the amount of compression that should take place during these measures. During a subsequent broadcast the mixer merely followed Mr. Stokowski's markings on the score.

After the Philadelphia Symphony's broadcasting season, a study was made of the volume control as finally used and among other results one of special importance was discovered. This was that practically none, or at most very little, of the decrease in volume during the crescendo was made while the orchestra itself was increasing in loudness. Reference again to Figure 2 indicates that the crescendo there depicted rises, then drops a bit, rises again, drops a second time and then takes its final burst to the top. This type of rise, Mr. Maxfield said, was present in more than half of the large crescendos which took place during the broadcasts.

Figure 2 also shows that the volume was decreased, for the most part, during the interval when the crescendo was temporarily decreasing in loudness and, further, that the amount had been completed prior to the last rise.

"This means that in spite of the fact that the range had been compressed, a compensating factor of increased contrast between the rise and fall during the crescendo had also been increased and tended to offset to a large extent the loss in volume range," Mr. Maxfield said.

He then explained that the method of lowering a diminuendo was exactly similar, only reversed in direction. Most of the volume control necessary to lift the softest passage out of the background noise was accomplished in the early part of the diminuendo and usually was accomplished during the time that the orchestra itself was increasing in loudness.

Better Than Band Played It

"During the early work which led to these later experiments one amusing, and also instructive, situation arose," he said. "In this case a musical short was being pre-scored. The orchestra in use was small and its volume range did not exceed the range of the equipment then available. It was therefore possible to make the recording without compressing at all. However, the orchestra leader permitted his orchestra to reach their maximum volume at the place in the crescendo which corresponds to the point 'M' in Figure 2 so that the orchestra had no reserve left for the final burst. Three takes were made under these conditions, the first two being made with no operation of the mixer dial. On the last take, as an experiment, the orchestra reduced the volume six decibels during the early part of the crescendo and increased it back again at the time the final burst should have occurred. When the orchestra leader heard this third take he remarked, 'That is funny. That is better than the band played it.'"

It appears from Mr. Maxfield's explanation of the function and method involved in "perspective sound," that the sound engineering of the future, as specifically applied to motion pictures, will be carried out along two main lines of attack. The first is the further improvement of equipment, both to make it more reliable and simpler and also to make it cover a wider volume and frequency range.

The second line, it appears, will consist of a new type of engineering, possibly a study of the best methods of using the available equipment in order to reproduce in the theatre the emotional result which the writers, actors and directors intend to effect there.

It was pointed out that two major beneficial results to sound pictures will result from such a technique: first, the time saved during production to make the necessary adjustment; second, average better quality of sound and better illusion obtained without any increased effort or expense.

RKO and M & S Dispute Ends; Decision Delayed

The long drawn out arbitration proceedings involving RKO's method of operating New York's Hollywood and Apollo theatres, leased from M. & S. Circuit, and which M. & S. challenged, came to an end last week, but no decision is expected from the board of three arbitrators for a month.

The proceedings were begun in February with Max D. Steuer as counsel for M. & S., and Bruce Bromley of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, representing RKO. Mr. Steuer relinquished any claim to money damages last week, but sought, thereafter, to require future compliance with the leases which he alleges were breached by RKO in reputedly failing to play all of the product day and date in the Hollywood and Apollo which is played in other RKO houses.

Mr. Steuer sought to prove that this was not done because of an agreement by which Loew's released certain of its product to RKO houses not in competition with Loew's houses. The Hollywood and Apollo compete with Loew's Avenue B and Delancey.

COURTS, LEGISLATURE, PRESS AND GOVERNMENT IN 'BANK NIGHT' FIGHT

Florida Senate and House Consider Bill Outlawing Plan; Homer Cummings at Washington Enters Los Angeles Dispute

The “Bank Night” cash prize award employed by hundreds of theatre owners is rapidly becoming the subject of nationwide heated controversy, with its exhibitor users arranged on one side, against enforcement agencies of the motion picture code, states' attorneys general, legislatures, newspapers, and even federal courts.

The most widely used copyrighted “Bank Night” plan is generally declared by Local Grievance Boards to be in violation of the code, Section 1, Part 3, Article V-E, which prohibits lotteries. The Code Authority, since November 1st, has upheld the Grievance Boards in appeals taken by exhibitor users in some 58 cases. Regardless, the practice continues and the fight for and against the right to its use grows daily.

The Florida senate this week was considering a bill to outlaw the system. The house has a similar proposal. The legislature would accomplish the purpose by a prohibitive tax, inasmuch as Attorney General Cary Landis, some weeks ago, declared that "Bank Nights" did not violate state lottery laws. Other state attorneys general have ruled otherwise.

The fight in Florida became more intense as the Tampa Tribune, a leading Florida newspaper, editorially attacked the practice, under the caption: “Stop This Racket,” and said:

“ ‘Bank Night,’ which has been running in theatres since September, has become a public nuisance, a community evil. It blocks streets, congests traffic, disturbs everybody with ‘sound wagon’ ballyhoo, keeps thousands of citizens in a continuous stew of expectancy and disappointment. Essentially, it is as much of a lottery as ‘bolita’ or ‘Cuba.’ The ‘lucky number’ is drawn from a box; no element of skill enters into the winning; simply ‘gambling chance,’ with an enormous percentage against the individual ‘player.’ The Postoffice Department has declared it a lottery, will bar from the mails any newspaper printing and advertising in reference to it. That should determine its legal standing.”

Exhibitors Report Benefits

Exhibitor users have reported benefits to their box office, although it has not been determined whether the actual monetary benefits overbalance the money paid to the copyright owners of the plan for its use.

In Jacksonville, Fla., a typical situation, “Bank Night” crowds have become so enormous that the overflow crowd of patron registrants have to be taken care of at four additional theatres.

Awards are said to have ranged up to $1,000 on a single drawing.

The code machinery, the federal courts and the Department of Justice are linked together in Los Angeles in a struggle over the legality of “Bank Nights.”

The Los Angeles Grievance Board, failing to halt the practice at the Oxnard theatres and at the San Gabriel, in that territory, brought the code violator to court. Federal Judge McCormick ruled that motion picture exhibition is intrastate commerce, and, therefore, is outside NRA jurisdiction. The Grievance Board has been given 20 days within which to file an answer.

The Department of Justice entered the fight at this point, Attorney General Homer Cummings at Washington, having wired instructions to Assistant Attorney General M. Pierson Hall at Los Angeles to file an answer on behalf of the Grievance Board.

Exhibitors in Missouri operating “Bank Night” and similar devices lay themselves wide open to criminal prosecution under the state lottery laws, according to state officials who base their assertion on an opinion by the state's attorney general.

In the opinion, given to State Senator J. G. McDowell, it was stated that a “Bank Night” constitutes “a lottery in violation of the criminal laws in this state.” Senator McDowell, outlining the plan to the attorney general, mentioned that it was permitted in two adjoining states, Iowa and Kansas, under state statutes (but not under the code), and asked, since the participant is not required to buy an admission to a theatre for an opportunity to win the cash prize, whether the “Bank Night” falls within the lottery law, “or is a legitimate advertising plan.”

The opinion from the attorney general's office recalled that the state law was passed in pursuance to a mandate against lotteries and gift enterprises contained in the Missouri constitution. Numerous court decisions were cited to show that it is immaterial that participants do not have to buy an admission ticket.

"An examination of the Missouri statute involved," stated the opinion, "will reveal that it is much broader than the penal codes of California, Colorado and Alabama, in that the Missouri statute makes it a criminal offense to establish a lottery or gift enterprise unfettered by any definitions or limitations as to essential elements of a lottery."

Referring to the particular copyrighted “Bank Night” plan involved in the nationwide dispute, the Missouri attorney general's opinion continued: “It is apparent that the holder of a prize-winning number must go to the theatre, at the proper time, and wait outside for the time of the drawing so as to be available in the event he holds the lucky number. If the ticket holder traveled 100 miles in order to be present in front of the theatre for the drawing, no one would question but that his long journey was sufficient consideration for the prize offered by the theatre.

“Under such conditions, the necessity of his going to the theatre is sufficient consideration. It is immaterial as to how much consideration he pays, whether it be one cent or $100, or whether he travels across the street or 100 miles in order to be present at the drawing; in the final analysis, he is giving consideration for the chance to win a prize.”

Along other fronts in the same territory the warfare broke out among exhibitors themselves.

A New "Carrie Nation"

In Kansas some years ago a crusader named Carrie Nation sprang from the prairie soil to lead a fiery assault on the saloon. Now there's a new crusader in Kansas City and she's being compared to hatchet-wielding Carrie, only her efforts are directed toward smashing “Bank Nights.”

The modern crusader is Mrs. Abe Baier, who owns and operates the Lindbergh theatre. She believes “Bank Nights” and premiums are a bad commercial influence and unfair competition. Unlike berserk Carrie's, her methods are entirely peaceful even if forceful.

Kansas City "Carrie Nation" Asks Warrants; Missouri Official Rules Plan Illegal; Code Boards Get Complaints

Last fall Mrs. Baier waged a campaign against “Bank Nights” and as the result the local Grievance Board, supported by the Code Authority, drove them from the city after a tussle with a couple of persistent exhibitors. With resumption of the practice at two theatres recently, Mrs. Baier sniffed the smoke of battle again and once more plunged into the fray, this time declaring a “war to the finish.”

Postponements Irk "Carrie"

Armed with an opinion from the office of the attorney general of Missouri to the effect that “Bank Nights,” “Cash Nights” and similar devices are lotteries, Mrs. Baier is seeking prosecution of “Bank Night” distributors and exhibitors. When she applied for warrants, Missouri's Jackson county prosecutor suggested it would be only fair if she agreed to a preliminary hearing for the alleged violators. When the scheduled hearing was postponed a week and then set over for another week Mrs. Baier voiced her suspicions that one of the exhibitors, Rube Finkelstein of the Belmont, “had a drag” with the politicians.

Prior to the second postponement, “Bank Night” proponents warned her, Mrs. Baier said, that she'd “better be careful what she tells the prosecutor,” whereupon she retorted: “I'm a lady and always careful.”

Her complaints against Mr. Finkelstein and F. L. Scovill of the Prospect were dismissed by the Grievance Board, which agreed with counsel for the “Bank Night” group that the distance between those theatres and Mrs. Baier's Lindbergh theatre and the price variations between respondent and complainant houses precluded any element of competition. But Mrs. Baier insists that when a theatre sends its ballyhoo truck into other neighborhoods to advertise “Bank Night” it is a plain case of unfair competition, and she is telling her story in an appeal to the Code Authority.

“Bank Nights” are spreading eastward at a rapid pace. They have invaded Connecticut and are gaining more ground elsewhere in New England.

Dozens of complaints have been made by competitors against theatre users, Local Boards in the field being swamped with cases, which eventually are brought to the Code Authority in New York on appeal.

However, the "Bank Night" complaints are being concentrated in only 14 of the 32 field boards. These territories include Kansas City, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Dallas, Chicago, Atlanta, San Francisco, Omaha, Des Moines, Oklahoma City, Denver, Seattle, Indianapolis and Minneapolis.

New York, like Chicago and Kansas City is fast becoming a center for premium giveaways. Independent owners this week were reported considering joint voluntary action to vote out the premium practice. Under the code premiums may be outlawed if 75 per cent of the owners sign an agreement to that effect.

ATTACKS FABIAN PLAN ON FOX METROPOLITAN

Counsel for Schenck Charges Bid Not Made in Good Faith; Kent Favors Schenck Plan

BULLETIN

The bidding for rights to reorganize Fox Metropolitan Playhouses took a sudden turn late Wednesday when Keith-Albee-Orpheum, under an agreement reached between Herbert Bayard Swope, board chairman, and Joseph M. Schenck, was injected as a participant in the Schenck-Weisman plan. The arrangement would eliminate Fox Metropolitan as a competitive bidder for product against KAO.

The plan of reorganization for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, submitted to the federal court in New York by Si Fabian, operator of the Fox Brooklyn, was attacked by Isidor Kresel, counsel for Joseph M. Schenck and Milton C. Weisman, who have submitted a joint reorganization bid, last week when Mr. Kresel asserted before Federal Judge Julian W. Mack the bid had not been made in good faith and that it was presented "for an ulterior motive." For this reason, Mr. Kresel said, the Fabian plan should not be considered by the court as a basis for comparison with the Schenck-Weisman plan.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Films, testifying Tuesday, expressed favor for the Schenck-Weisman plan and continuance of Skouras-Randforce as operators, against any plan of reorganization submitted by Loew's, RKO or Mr. Fabian.

Mr. Kresel said Mr. Fabian "was tied up with Max Horwitz," a member of the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee and a partner in Hallgarten & Company, and had developed trading in securities of Fox Metropolitan by members of the bondholders' committee during his service as advisor to the Fox Metropolitan receiver. William M. Greve, of the bondholders' committee, also traded in the securities.

In disclosing the securities trading among Mr. Fabian, Mr. Horwitz and Mr. Greve, Mr. Kresel placed critics of the Schenck-Fox Theatres plan on the defensive rather than, as had been anticipated, being himself placed in the position of defending that plan against proponents of the Fabian plan.

It was revealed that Mr. Horwitz had bought $44,000 face amount of Fox Metropolitan notes at prices ranging from $6.25 to $11.75, from March to October, 1932, and later had sold $31,000 face amount of notes at $13.25 and $10,000 face amount at $21.75, for a profit of $2,768. Mr. Horwitz retained $3,000 face amount of the notes. The trading was done through Hallgarten & Company in Mr. Horwitz's own name.

Joint Trading Account Revealed

Another Hallgarten account, known simply as "No 158," was identified by Frederick Pizor, a Hallgarten partner and former head of the company's statistical department, as a joint account maintained by Mr. Fabian, Mr. Greve and Hallgarten & Company for trading in Fox Metropolitan notes, this account buying a total of $358,000 face amount of the notes, with each of the three principals participating equally with $119,500 face amount of notes.

Mr. Horwitz, questioned by Mr. Kresel on the witness stand, said that when the joint account was opened Mr. Fabian was "the highest paid employee in the Fox Metropolitan receivership," drawing $1,000 a week, and that he had access to all of the company's books and records. Mr. Horwitz said he had traded in securities of Fox Metropolitan because he "believed in the future of Fox Metropolitan and, consequently, bought at prices ranging from $6 to $16" Fox Metropolitan notes that his company, Hallgarten, "had originally sold to the public at $100."

Judge Mack said that all records pertaining to trading in the Fox Metropolitan notes and to the activities of the bondholders' committee were "of very vital concern and would be open to the fullest investigation." Mr. Fabian was excused from taking the stand.

Rinzler Recalled to Testify

Sam Rinzler, one of the circuit's operators, was recalled to the stand to give additional testimony as to operating costs and charges.

George Skouras, another of the circuit's operators, testified that while grosses for the houses operated by him for Fox Metropolitan had declined from $8,086,000 in 1932 to $6,300,000 last year, they had been able to show an average profit of about $25,000 annually since assuming operation in 1931. Mr. Skouras said that Fox Metropolitan "could not survive without the Fox Film franchise," a view upheld by Mr. Rinzler. The Fabian proposal would do away with the franchise.

Under questioning by Mr. Kresel, Monday, Mr Greve said he had bought and sold about $280,000 of the 6½ per cent bonds. He said he had opened a trading account through Isaac Roshalsky, an investor, in which he bought $170,000 of the bonds. He added that he also bought $10,000 of the bonds for his brother, John W. Greve; $18,000 for a friend, Joseph W. Brown, and $50,000 through a corporation he controlled.

Mr. Skouras on Monday testified that Mr. Schenck had offered a block of stock in the new Fox Metropolitan company proposed under the plan to Skouras Brothers. Mr. Skouras said the proposal had been discussed by Mr. Schenck, his brother, Spyros Skouras, and the late Richard Hoyt of Hayden, Stone & Company, but had not been resumed since the recent death of Mr. Hoyt.

Mr. Kent testified that he considered the Fox Metropolitan film deal a poor one for Fox Film from a financial standpoint, that he regarded the Skouras and Randforce operation in a favorable light, and that Fox Film would endeavor to cancel the product franchise if Loew's, RKO or the Fabian interests became operators.

Mr. Kent's expression was the most favorable to date for the Schenck-Weisman bid for reorganization. He pointed out that Mr. Schenck had no conflicting theatre interests which might receive preferential treatment to the detriment of Fox Metropolitan. He said he considered RKO a good operator "as far as its own properties were concerned," but that he "would want to be out of Fox Metropolitan if RKO came in." Fabian he called "a good, average operator, but for these properties not as good as the present operators."

Mr. Kent testified that he had refused to agree to assign the Fox film franchise to any of the sponsors of the reorganization plans.

Sees Value in Schenck Association

He testified that Fox Film had told the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee, which drafted a reorganization plan of its own last fall, that Fox Film would not agree to an assignment of the franchise unless it was given the right to approve any proposed new operator of Fox Metropolitan.

Mr. Kent also testified that he believed Mr. Schenck's association with the new company to be "of tremendous value" to it. "Moreover, his position in the industry makes him a person who must be listened to and his acquaintances include every one in the industry who must be bargained with in the operation of Fox Metropolitan."

Mr. Kent was followed on the stand by William Greve, member of the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee, whose trading in the notes of the company was disclosed at earlier hearings. It was also disclosed that Mr. Greve's Prudence Company had financed Fabian's theatre acquisitions at Albany, Schenectady and Syracuse, and that Greve, as a trustee of Allied Owners Corporation, had voted in favor of the sale of the Brooklyn Paramount Building to Fabian recently. Mr. Greve denied, however, that he favored the Fabian reorganization proposal.

When Fox Metropolitan is removed from bankruptcy, or shortly thereafter, plans will be filed for reorganizing Fox Theatres' units in Detroit, San Francisco and St. Louis under Section 77-B of the bankruptcy laws, Mr. Weisman said last week. Such a plan now is being formulated and is expected to be filed in federal court, New York, in about a fortnight, Mr. Weisman said.

In Kansas City this week, sale of Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midland to National Theatres in bankruptcy court for total bids of $1,580,000, plus unpaid expenses of the bankruptcy administration, estimated at $70,000, was halted by an unexpected suit filed by General Theatres Equipment bondholders, who obtained an order from Federal Judge Albert L. Reeves enjoining proceedings.

Lee H. Hamlin, Jacob Smith and William Snowler, all of Kansas City, filed the petition setting forth they hold General Theatres debentures aggregating $89,000 and attacking the scheduled sale of the theatres as one of a series of manipulations by the Chase Bank to gain control of Wesco and its subsidiaries to the exclusion of General Theatres bondholders.

The court set a hearing Thursday on National Theatres' offer of $1,580,000.

H. M. Warner Sees Better Conditions

A very real improvement in general conditions is being reflected in increased attendance, H. M. Warner, president of Warner Bros., said Wednesday.

"On the strength of the greatly improved business conditions of the past few months we are reopening the Warner theatre in New York which has been closed for about two years and it is probable we shall reopen the Hollywood very shortly," Mr. Warner said.

The Warner, the theatre in which "The Jazz Singer" began the era of talking pictures, will reopen May 2 with "G Men."

Residents Rebel On Theatre Plans

Residents of East 79th Street in New York's East Side residential district this week appeared before Commissioner of Licenses Paul Moss to protest against the application of Henry Mandel to operate a motion picture theatre on the southeast corner of Madison Avenue and East 79th St.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

THE LIVING RECORD. Of the Byrd expedition to Antarctica. Shown examining some of the 130,000 feet of pictures brought to Hollywood are John L. Herrmann, Paramount cameraman, who took them; Ernst Lubitsch, who will edit them; and Carl O. Petersen, radio expert.

FESTIVE FUN. Strange interlude at Warners' party for Al Jolson in New York, celebrating impending premiere of his "Go Into Your Dance." Principals: Messrs. Jolson, E. Cantor and J. Durante. Ringside spectator: Mr. Sam Morris, Warner executive.

AT NEW YORK RECEPTION. In honor of Darryl Zanuck, vice president of 20th Century in charge of production, and also celebrating the second birthday anniversary of that company. From left to right: Joseph Schenck, president of 20th Century; Mr. Zanuck; W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of Radio City Music Hall; Nate Spingold, Columbia executive; and Jack Cohn, treasurer of Columbia. (Story on page 28.)

CHOSEN. From 10,000 entrants in New York area in screen talent hunt conducted by Loew's and MGM. She is Anita Kurtin, shown as she began her trip to Hollywood.

ACTRESS. Cinema kind. Amid the myriad gadgets of narration's modern technique. Portrayed in an extemporaneous camera study of Bette Davis, a leading Warner player.

REMINDER. Of May 12. Don't know? Hence this reminder of Mother's Day which Universal has pleasantly contrived with Margaret Mann, famous among screen mothers, as your favorite heroine and three Universal stock players—Mary Wallace, Phyllis Brooks and Clark Williams—as two daughters and a son come home, remembering.

LONG IN FILM FIELD. (Left) Ray Gallagher, member of Herald's advertising staff, who has completed 25 years in film business. He joined Vitagraph in 1910.

TO MAKE SERIES. (Below) Jerry Fairbanks, with two of his aids, Miss Gladys McVey Little and William B. Meier, at the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company plant in Rochester, N. Y., where he will film sequences for a new group of popular science pictures in co-operation with the laboratories of the Bausch & Lomb Company.

DIRECTOR. With appropriate symbolization of the crafts which have made his art, a new portrait of Frank Borzage, Warner director. "Stranded" is his current production. It co-stars Kay Francis and George Brent.

18,000 FILM CANCELLATIONS UNDER 10% CLAUSE CITED AS CODE BENEFIT

Rosenblatt and Johnson Answer Myers Before Senate Committee; Point to Aid Given Independents by the Boards

Agree That Code Needs Revision; Deny "Big Business" Wrote Code, Declare All Labor Units Signed Measure

by FRANCIS L. BURT

Washington Bureau of the HERALD

Charges made two weeks ago by representatives of independent exhibitors before the Senate finance committee at Washington that the motion picture code was operating adversely to the independent theatre has brought down upon the critics the wrath of the code's two staunchest defenders—Hugh S. Johnson, former Recovery Administrator, and Sol A. Rosenblatt, compliance director, who cited as one benefit 18,000 cancellation of pictures under the code's 10 per cent cancellation clause.

Answers Myers' Attack

Appearing before the Senate committee as it concluded its hearings on the NRA, General Johnson denominated the code a "real experiment in industrial self-government." Mr. Rosenblatt's defense was contained in a brief in which he answered individually the charges made at the hearing by Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, and Melvin Albert, of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York.

Both Mr. Johnson and Mr. Rosenblatt emphasized the fact that 9,116 exhibitors have signed the code and 340 others have taken its benefits without signing, out of their estimated total of 10,143 houses in operation, as evidence in support of their contention that there is little antagonism in the exhibition branch.

Need for revision of the code was admitted by General Johnson, who told the committee, however, of his understanding that changes would be considered as soon as the legislation extending the Recovery Act was adopted. Mr. Rosenblatt, along the same line, challenged Mr. Myers' statement that revision can be obtained only through the Code Authority. He submitted copies of NRA office orders to show that an individual interested in a code may suggest changes.

"When a Code Authority composed of such divergent elements as this one, with the interests of affiliated and independent, big and small producers, distributors and exhibitors, buyers and sellers, can cast approximately 94 per cent of its votes on a divergent subject unanimously, I should say that the code had worked pretty well," General Johnson asserted, reading from an 88-page statement.

1,019 Decisions Unanimous

Mr. Rosenblatt declared that of a total of 1,091 votes taken by the Authority since it was created in December, 1933, to the end of this February, 1,019 decisions were unanimous. "Of the total votes cast, 93.9 per cent were unanimous; that is, by the action of all the members of the Code Authority, including those designated by Mr. Myers as representative of the independent exhibitor's interest."

The motion picture code, General Johnson told the committee, was one of the most difficult to work out which the NRA encountered.

"There has never been a representative trade association embracing the three economic divisions of this industry," he said. "It would have been a comparatively easy thing for NRA to have secured a separate code for producers, a separate code for distributors and a separate code for exhibitors. But under three codes, NRA could never have given even the slightest bit of relief to the independent exhibitors."

Because the three branches were thus tied together under one agreement, he said, the exhibitors "have been given rights and privileges which they never could have achieved except by a change in our copyright laws or by a statute regulating the transportation of film in interstate commerce."

Neither the film code nor any other was written by "Big Business," General Johnson said.

As evidence of the aids granted small business men by the film code, he declared that approximately 18,000 cancellations have thus far been made under this provision. The clearance provisions, and the prohibition against overbuying films, he said, afforded the independent exhibitor relief "which he could not have secured in any court in the land or under any statutes written in any of the statute books."

Both pointed out that every labor organization in the industry signed the code, thus replying to charges by Mr. Albert that labor was antagonistic.

Mr. Johnson called the Darrow Board a "political wailing wall." Mr. Rosenblatt challenged statements by Lowell Mason, who had been the board's counsel, that the standard contract form is in violation of the Paramount decision of the supreme court, and asserted that the only criticism was that it is not strict enough in compelling the exclusive use of the standard form.

"The Darrow board," General Johnson charged, "recommended Communism."

"There was not one fair hearing before it," he complained. "They disregarded NIRA, packed the record with framed testimony, disregarded every judicial rule of fairness known to man, solicited and accepted unsupported statements, restricted or ignored testimony unfavorable to their purposes, hazed witnesses on that side, insulted NRA officials, and for this spent $50,000 of government money."

The former NRA head emphasized the voluntary character of the financing of the code.

Denies Burkan Drafted Code

Nathan Burkan had no more to do with the drafting of the final code "than did any of the pages of the Senate," Mr. Rosenblatt said. "Mr. Myers' statement that the code was signed in secret is not correct."

"The Myers statement that it is impossible for exhibitors to get relief before the code boards is not borne out by the facts," he declared. "Relief has been granted to exhibitors in 75 per cent of cases tried. Out of 1,020 cases tried by local grievance boards, 771 cases brought relief to exhibitors. In only 24 per cent of cases, or in 237 complaints, was relief denied. In 205 of the cases appeal was taken to the Code Authority and in 85 per cent of the appeals the local board was sustained; in 30 cases, or 15 per cent, the local board's decision was reversed.

"Until the code was achieved there was no such thing as relief for clearance and zoning problems generally. The clearance and zoning boards are in operation to pass wholly upon those questions. In the first 289 cases brought to these boards, relief has been granted to 172 exhibitors, 59 per cent of the complaints filed. Appeals were taken to the Code Authority in 78 of these cases. Eighteen per cent of the appeals heard were reversed and sent back to the zoning boards; judgment was affirmed in 82 per cent of the appeals."

"Mr. Albert stated that the code provides 'that no exhibitor may complain that a distributor has given advantage to a theatre operated by a distributor.' There is a fair sample of the worth of Mr. Albert's testimony," said Mr. Rosenblatt. "The code provides nothing of the kind and such is not the fact.

"The code does provide that a local grievance board shall not have jurisdiction to hear any complaint based upon the fact that a distributor has licensed the motion pictures distributed by it for exhibition at its own theatres."

Other Code Developments

The industry was unconcerned over the apparent jeopardizing of the NRA itself, when in Washington 12 of the 21 members of the Senate finance committee were said to be opposed to extension of the act, and Administration opponents appeared to have gained a position to block continuance.

On the other hand, possibilities that the film code might be stripped of provisions applicable to producers and exhibitors and left with clauses only involving distribution were seen by Washington observers as a result of the Denver decision holding exhibition to be intrastate commerce.

Mr. Rosenblatt now has a salary of about $8,000, it was shown in the official register of the Civil Service Commission at Washington. He is the tenth highest paid man in the Recovery Administration.

The motion picture Code Authority spent $24,252 in March, leaving a balance of $23,571. Receipts included $6,333 from exhibitors, $350 from producers and distributors, and $243 from other sources.

Code Involved in Two Suits

Judge Charles Dewey, in United States district court, Des Moines, denied a petition brought by Central States Theatres against the Des Moines Grievance Board, to restrain from enforcing a cease and desist order issued by the board asking exchanges to cut off his film supply for a code violation.

Decision in the case of the Liberty theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, attacking the film code's validity, was withheld by federal judge James Wilson, who instructed attorneys to file briefs within 10 days.

The legal committee of the Code Authority was studying the growing practice of exhibiting pictures in colleges, to determine whether it is unfair competition to regular theatres.

Ohio industrial codes, provided for under the Recovery Act, are unconstitutional and invalid, Judge Stanley Struble ruled in common pleas court in Cincinnati.

Reorganization of Pathe to Proceed On Original Plan

The financial reorganization and general program of Pathe Exchange, Inc., disturbed last week by the unexpected resignation of Stuart W. Webb as president and director of the organization, this week reached equilibrium.

Among other things of importance to Pathe's future, it was said by Frank F. Kolbe, the new Pathe president, that the reorganization as planned by Mr. Webb and the directorate would unquestionably go through as contemplated. There are, however, several matters which must be straightened out by the new executive and directors of the company, foremost of which is the matter of financing for First Division and other independent producers.

To date there has been no policy with respect to such financing adopted by Mr. Kolbe and his officers, and with special regard to the financing of First Division it is pointed out that until that company has decided among its own directors upon specific plans for the next season Pathe cannot act.

Deny Laboratory Sale Report

Reports this week that Consolidated Film Industries, Herbert J. Yates, president, was negotiating for the Pathe laboratory at Bound Brook, N. J., were flatly denied Wednesday by Arthur B. Poole, Pathe vice-president under the Webb regime and also under the new arrangement.

The new official setup of Pathe Exchange, Inc.—which will in all probability change its name to Pathe, Inc., dropping "Exchange"—is Frank J. Kolbe, a partner in Young & Kolbe, investment brokers, president; Robert W. Atkins, of Proctor and Paine, also investment brokers, executive vice-president, a new post; Arthur A. Poole, vice-president and treasurer; Ellen U. Keough, secretary.

In the background as an important financial figure is Robert Young, Mr. Kolbe's partner, who has had much to do with the financial policies of Pathe. Mr. Young was educated at Culver Military Academy and the University of Virginia. He was associated for a number of years with the E. I. DuPont de Nemours Co., later going to the Allied Chemicals Company in an executive capacity, then joining General Motors. In 1932, with Mr. Kolbe, he organized Young & Kolbe.

Frank F. Kolbe attended the University of Michigan. Following his graduation he became an instructor in accounting, economics and financing and at the outbreak of the War joined the War Credits Board. When the United States entered the War, Mr. Kolbe was transferred to student training camps, where he served from 1918 to 1919. From 1919 to 1928 he was assistant treasurer of General Motors and in 1932 he and Mr. Young went into the investment business together.

First Division to Discuss Program

Robert W. Atkins, the new Pathe executive vice-president, is a native Bostonian. He entered his father's sugar business, E. Atkins & Son, after graduation from Harvard. Later he formed the Punta Allegra Sugar Co., and subsequently was associated with Hayden, Stone & Co., bankers, and finally with his present firm, Proctor & Paine, investment brokers.

The regular monthly meeting of Pathe's directorate was held on Tuesday in New York, and was described as routine.

The board of directors includes Mr. Atkins, Mr. Kolbe, Paul Fuller, Jr., of Coudert Bros.; Henry J. Guild, Brightwater Paper Co.; Ellery W. Mann, Zonite Products, Inc.; George S. Montgomery, Jr., Coudert Bros.; Arthur B. Poole, Pathe Exchange; Arthur Sewall, 2nd, McClave & Co.; Charles A. Stone, Chas. A. Stone & Co.; Theodore C. Streibert, Station WOR; Charles B. Wiggin, Pearl Assurance Co., Ltd.; Arthur W. Miller, manager Pathe Laboratory at Bound Brook.

First Division Productions will begin discussions of production plans next week. Nicholas S. Ludington, president, who has been in New York for the past three weeks, planned to leave New York on Friday by plane for the Coast and to return next week. He and the First Division Board, including John A. Curtis, William M. L. Fiske, III, will then decide on the new season program. Dario Faralla last week resigned as a director and treasurer of First Division Exchanges.

Plans Set for Annual Fund Drive of N.V.A.

Named general chairman of the First Annual Actors Day Benefit for the N.V.A. Fund, Major Leslie E. Thompson, RKO Theatres executive, has selected committees and sponsoring groups to aid the drive. The fund requires $250,000 annually. This year donations will not be requested from theatre audiences, as in the past, but midnight benefit stage shows will be given in key cities. Distributors' representatives met with Major Thompson this week to map plans for cooperation.

National Screen Service will handle distribution of a trailer which is being made gratis by Eddie Cantor, and which will be shown in about 4,000 theatres. The benefit performances will be held on May 20, 10 per cent of the gross going to the N.V.A. Radio stars will urge attendance.

Coast Publicity Staffs Changed

Publicity departments of several Hollywood studios this week had changes in personnel. At Paramount, Bill Thomas becomes executive assistant to Bill Pine, now studio advertising and publicity director, with Tom Baily retaining the title of publicity manager. Mr. Pine's department will handle publicity for Walter Wangle Productions.

Herbert Moulton was appointed Paramount studio advertising head, Mr. Pine's former post.

Jeanette Rex on Tuesday resigned as publicity director for Sol Lesser. Her successor was not named.

Plans New Session on Newsreel Hours

Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth will confer with newsreel executives within the next week to discuss further the working schedules for newsreel cameramen.

Mr. Farnsworth already has held meetings with Lou Krouse of the IATSE, O. V. Richards of the local news cameramen's union and others in an attempt to effect an equitable plan whereby working hours will be definitely outlined under the code.

"Time" Drops Bit on Long

The sequence in the current "March of Time" release which concerns Huey Long, Louisiana Senator, has been deleted in New Orleans. The unofficial reason for the deletion was the influence wielded by Long.

Roosevelt Names Walker to Head Relief Projects

Frank C. Walker on Tuesday was named by President Roosevelt as head of the Administration's new $4,800,000,000 campaign to end unemployment.

Mr. Walker, who is widely known in motion pictures through his association with his uncle, M. E. Comerford, in the operation of the Comerford theatre circuit, also replaced Donald R. Richberg as director of the National Emergency Council. Mr. Richberg will concentrate on the NRA.

President Roosevelt placed Mr. Walker in charge of a new agency, the Division of Applications and Information, which will pass on the merit of all work projects to be sponsored by the Administration to alleviate unemployment.

Press dispatches from Washington said that Mr. Walker, as head of the new division, will virtually be "czar" of the huge work relief fund, inasmuch as only those projects that he approves will be passed on to the Allotment Board, of which Mr. Roosevelt is chairman.

Mr. Walker, a close friend of the President and his adviser during the campaign of 1932, was treasurer of the Democratic National Committee. He served for a time previously as director of the Emergency Council, established by Mr. Roosevelt after his inauguration.

Born at Plymouth, Pa., and matriculating at Spokane University and Notre Dame, Mr. Walker served as district attorney at Butte, Mont., where he also practiced law with his brother, Senator T. J. Walker. He has been associated with the Comerford theatre interests since 1924.

Golding Joins Fabian, RKO Shifts Managers

Lou Golding has resigned as manager of Proctor's, RKO Newark house, to become division manager for Si Fabian, handling operation of upstate New York houses recently acquired by the independent circuit operator. RKO, as a result, has shifted several managers. Robert Ungerfeld has moved from the Franklin, Bronx, to Proctor's, with Mike Edelstein succeeding to the management of the Franklin. Murray Lafayette has been transferred from the Alhambra to the Apollo, formerly in charge of Mr. Edelstein and Frank Howard has been made manager of the Alhambra.

Goldman Circuit Gains In Pennsylvania Area

William Goldman, former zone manager for Warner Theatres in eastern Pennsylvania, is taking an increasingly important place in exhibition in that territory. With six houses set for his new circuit and four others planned, Mr. Goldman has become a competitor of Stanley Warner, which dominates the area. He has taken over the Strand and Victor in Pottstown from Warner. Operating the Hippodrome there, he has control of that city. With four theatres in Philadelphia, Mr. Goldman plans to enter the Pittsburgh territory.

"The Devil is a Woman" and WHAT a Woman!

DIET

A WOMAN all women will want to see . . . .

—a Dietrich who will prove a revelation to the fans. Fascinating . . . vivid . . . a Dietrich ever-to-be-remembered. Women will thrill at her story, her role, her acting, her gorgeous costumes. Here's what molders of public opinion say of Miss Dietrich and "The Devil Is a Woman":

N.Y. AMERICAN (Alice Hughes)—"Never a more lavish fiesta of beautiful clothes...fascinations no woman can resist."

SCREENLAND (Delight Evans)—"Dietrich at her most devastating! Gorgeous costumes! Stunningly spectacular . . . excitingly exotic."

LILY DACHE (Noted Designer)—"Clothes perfectly magnificent . . . Dietrich superb, perfectly exquisite."

NEW YORKER (Beatrice Mathieu)—"Her finest American picture . . . theme as moving as 'Of Human Bondage'."

VANITY FAIR (Helen Van Norden)—"Does first real acting since 'Morocco'."

WOMAN'S WEAR—"Most elaborately conceived costumes seen on the screen."

MOTION PICTURE—"Dietrich never more beautiful."

If it's a PARAMOUNT PICTURE

A WOMAN all men will rave about . . . .

—a new Dietrich to capture the hearts of men and fire their imaginations! The siren of "Blue Angel"...the innocent of "Song of Songs"... the temptress of "Morocco"... the adventuress of "Dishonored"... the alluring deceiver of "Shanghai Express"—all these go to make up the Dietrich of "The Devil Is a Woman." More comments from those who influence mass opinion:

KING FEATURES (Pare Lorenz)—"Best looking picture that has come out this year... and the best picture Marlene has had since 'Morocco'."

HARPER'S BAZAAR (Baron Huene)—"Marvelous! Photography better than anything I ever saw."

MOTION PICTURE—"Remains the most glamorous woman to invade the sense of men."

SCREENLAND—"Not the languid lady of previous pictures... but a loving, breathing woman."

HOLLYWOOD MAGAZINE—"Glamor, allure, beauty and mystery. No one like her. Sensitively super-feminine."

MOVIE CLASSIC—"Dietrich never more beautiful."

"Three loves have I, the fools!"

"Come share my lips and I'll break your heart!"

"For every kiss I gave you I had a laugh with another man!"

"I know twenty ways to say 'I love you'—and they're all alluring lies!"

Films Get Share of Australian Trade

By CLIFF HOLT

Sydney Correspondent

Taking the stock market as a guide, the motion picture business showed no improvement during 1934; in fact, there is a slight reduction in combined share values as compared with a year ago. In January, 1934, one share in each of the principal companies would have cost £5/17/8. Today the same parcel would cost £5/15/9.

Motion picture business in this country did not break any records during 1934, but in comparison with other branches of commerce, it got its share.

New Monogram Distributor

Monogram product will go through Australia and New Zealand under the aegis of Film Distributors, Ltd., newly formed with a capitalization of £20,000 ($100,000). Release begins at once. Physical distribution will be handled by British Empire Films, which distributes the British International product.

Film Distributors, Ltd., has a five-year franchise on the Monogram output. Under the conditions of the franchise any or all of the first year's group, amounting to about 80, may be rejected if considered unsuitable.

Monogram promised to become active on the Australian market nearly twelve months ago, on the arrival of Max Ehrenreich and Al Aronson from New York. They announced that the capital of the already formed Monogram Pictures, Ltd., would be increased £100,000, and that the company would engage in distribution and production. Certain expected financial backing did not materialize, however, and the foundations of the organization crumbled. Mr. Aronson returned to New York, and the Australian executives appointed by him and Mr. Ehrenreich withdrew.

Behind the new company are Mr. Ehrenreich, who will fill the capacity of managing director; J. J. Mulligan, Harry L. Ward (secretary), K. W. Asprey and Alexis Albert. Mr. Mulligan is a prominent Sydney solicitor. Mr. Asprey is a director of General Theatres Corporation and Greater Union Theatres: Alexis Albert is the son of Frank Albert, music publisher, real estate owner and investor, and one of Australia's wealthiest men.

"Stingaree" Barred

Although free for exhibition in all other states, RKO Radio's "Stingaree" has been banned in N.S.W. under the law prohibiting bushranger stories on the screen. The Commonwealth censors approved the picture, but despite protestations by the Motion Picture Distributors Association and Ralph Doyle, chief of RKO here, the police department stepped in and cut RKO out of about 25 per cent of its revenue-earning possibilities in Australia. Some time ago an Australian bushranger story—"When the Kellys Rode"—was outed in New South Wales though its release in other parts of the Commonwealth was permitted.

STAGE NOW THREAT TO SUNDAY FILMS IN N. Y.

Governor Signs Bills for Legitimate Shows on Sabbath; Equity Withholds Sanction

Providing a serious competitive threat to the established motion picture theatres of New York city and state, Governor Herbert H. Lehman Tuesday night signed the two bills sponsored by Senator Julius S. Berg permitting dramatic and musical productions of the legitimate theatre to be performed on Sundays where permitted by local ordinances.

This is the first time in the history of New York state that Sunday showings of legitimate productions have been permitted, although several attempts have been made in the past ten years, only to meet defeat as a result of the strong lobbying by Actors' Equity Association.

Motion picture showings on Sundays have been permitted for about 15 years, a bill to permit them and other entertainments and sports on the Sabbath having been pushed through the legislature by James J. Walker when he was at the height of his state senatorial career.

Governor Lehman's signature to the two Berg bills does not necessarily mean that Sunday shows in legitimate theatres in New York and other situations are now assured, because Equity has not yet decided whether it will permit its members to work on the Sabbath. Inasmuch as Equity has a completely closed shop in the legitimate talent field, much will depend upon the vote of the Equity Council.

Two Bills Are Amendments

The governor's action, however, does mean that the legitimate theatre is now on a plane of competitive equality with motion picture theatres, vaudeville and burlesque, which are permitted to function after 2 P. M. Sundays.

The two bills are in the form of amendments to the penal and labor laws and in signing them the Governor issued a memorandum in which he wrote:

"Under the existing law motion picture exhibitions are allowed in any city, town or village after 2 o'clock on Sunday afternoon where authorized by the legislative body of such city, town or village. Baseball, football, hockey, outdoor sports, vaudeville, vocal and musical entertainments have similarly been permitted for years."

Provides for Local Option

Referring to the measure amending the penal law, Governor Lehman wrote:

"This bill amends the law so as to treat legitimate theatre productions exactly the same as motion picture exhibitions. The bill contains no mandatory feature; each community is given the power to decide for itself whether there shall be motion picture exhibitions and legitimate theatre productions on Sunday evenings."

Governor Lehman's memorandum also pointed out the most important provision of either of the two bills, which stipulates that no community, in determining whether or not such performances are to be allowed, can violate the provisions of the labor law requiring that employees be given one day's rest in every seven.

"I have simultaneously approved another measure which supplements this bill," Governor Lehman wrote. "It amends the labor law by specifically providing that every employer putting on legitimate theatre productions shall give all employees, including all actors and performers in the cast, at least 24 consecutive hours of rest in each calendar week."

The bills point out that in communities where Sunday shows are not now permitted the fact that the Berg bills have become law does not permit producers or managers to show in those communities unless the governing bodies of those communities adopt laws permitting such Sunday activity.

The only organized opposition to the Berg legislation was provided by Equity and the Lord's Day Alliance, the actors' opposition being led by Frank Gillmore, Equity president; Florence Reed, Madge Kennedy, and Selena Royle. Among those in favor of the bills were William A. Brady, veteran manager, and Dr. Henry Moskowitz, head of the League of New York Theatres. Representatives of organized labor also appeared at Albany in behalf of the bills.

The Equity Council, which is now the last obstacle of any importance to Sunday performances on the legitimate stage, will discuss the matter at it next meeting on Tuesday in its New York headquarters.

Expect National Referendum

It is expected the Council will recommend a national referendum by mail among Equity's membership. In that case their decision would not be known before the end of July or August and, in any event, because few of New York's legitimate theatres have adequate cooling systems it is considered doubtful if Sunday performances would commence before September.

Assuming that Equity does disapprove of Sunday performances, all actors, including those who want to play on the Sabbath, would be bound by the vote. There have been many reports of "revolt" among some Equity members, details of some of which appear on page 46 of this issue. Paul Dullzell, Equity secretary, said Tuesday that any such members who "rebel" against the Council's rule will face immediate loss of membership.

Members of the League of New York Theatres, comprised chiefly of managers, already have discussed plans for Sunday shows. One is to have spectacles which could be produced in large theatres allowing lower admission prices, regarded as a necessity.

The consensus of Broadway opinion is that the majority of musical comedies would take advantage of Sunday night performances if they receive Equity's approval, and take Mondays off. Dramatic productions probably would continue according to current custom.

U. A. Handles Eastern Publicity for Goldwyn

Samuel Goldwyn has dropped his eastern publicity office, all publicity for Goldwyn Productions, which releases through United Artists, being handled by that company's publicity department, directed by Hal Horne. That arrangement is in force with 20th Century, Reliance and London Films, also releasing through United Artists.

George Daws, who had been in charge of eastern publicity for Goldwyn, is handling special promotional work on the Mickey Mouse Disney cartoons. Hal Sloane continues in charge of exploitation and publicity for Walt Disney productions.

Coast Exhibitors Win Zoning Fight

Independent theatre men of southern California won their fight against recommendations of Fox West Coast for changes in the Los Angeles clearance and zoning schedules, proposed by the local board, when the Code Authority adopted only one of FWC's recommendations. This means the Los Angeles schedule is the first in the country to receive the Code Authority's approval.

Previous decisions had declared Warners' Forum and the Fox Uptown to be non-competitive and placed them in different zones. The Code Authority on Tuesday reversed the ruling and put both houses in one zone.

The Code Authority adopted the Los Angeles board's recommendation that Harry Arthur's Balboa be placed in a separate zone outside of Los Angeles in order that it may day-and-date with other Los Angeles houses charging 40 cents admission. Los Angeles has twelve 40-cent houses.

Executives of FWC contested the Code Authority's verdict in the matter of the Balboa, claiming this house holds the key to all admissions in Los Angeles.

It is understood FWC may file an appeal with the NRA at Washington, William T. Powers, FWC attorney, asking William P. Farnsworth, Deputy Administrator, on Tuesday to see that quick action is given the appeal in the event it is taken.

FWC's request for a clearance of 14 days between houses charging five cents also was turned down by the Code Authority in favor of the local board's price schedule, the schedule providing for from 10 to 11 days between five-cent houses after downtown first run.

For houses charging 40 cents, clearance is 21 days; 35 cents, 31 days; 30 cents, 42 days; 25 cents, 56 days; 20 cents, 77 days; 15 cents, 119 days; 10 cents, 182 days; five cents, 365 days.

The Code Authority also passed a resolution that the Los Angeles schedule be put into effect not later than May 15 and it is considered likely the local board will make May 9 the effective date.

Independent Supply Men to Meet in Chicago

The annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association will be held at the Edgewater Beach hotel in Chicago June 15 to 18, inclusive. Inter-organization policy will be discussed and officers elected. In addition, a campaign for advertising and promotional publicity will be considered.

J. E. Robin, president, said more than 35 manufacturers are expected to have exhibitions.

Stage History Reviewed at Picture Club Forum

Forty years of theatrical history were spanned, in a light vein, on Tuesday at the regular weekly forum of the New York Motion Picture Club, by Daniel Frohman, pioneer stage producer; Joe Laurie, comedian; Dave Genaro, "Cakewalk" dance creator; and Lizzie Wilson, Joe Howard, Mike Bernard, Jim Thornton, Tom Ward, and Vesta Victoria, who made "Waiting at the Church" famous.

Acme

VERNA LONG

"Miss Typical Consumer," as selected in New York last week by the National Alliance of Art and Industry, spends, herself, only one per cent of her yearly salary on motion pictures, although, being "Miss Typical," and single, the National Alliance assumes she has at least two "boy friends" who spend considerable in entertaining her at the motion picture theatre, and elsewhere.

Selected as "Miss Typical Consumer" was Verna Long, 21, of New York, on the occasion of an exposition conducted by the Alliance to focus attention upon the needs of the average man and to demonstrate modern industry's solution of his practical, artistic and social requirements. Miss Long was selected to typify the typical consumer because women spend 85 percent of the family budget.

The young lady represents the largest single group of women, that between 20 and 25 years of age. She is five feet, six inches tall, weighs 123 pounds, has brown hair, hazel eyes and a fair complexion, and is employed as a combination model and salesgirl at R. H. Macy's New York department store.

National Alliance officials said she earns an average income, some $1,300 a year, belongs to a typical family, is of average weight and height, is unmarried and is of typical appearance.

Her expenditures and budget are as follows, on a yearly basis: Wardrobe, $255; rent, $240; food at home, $208; lunches and carfare, $149; physicians and dentists, $52; vacation, $50; hairdressing, $35; cigarettes, $20; motion pictures (admissions purchased by herself), $15; miscellaneous amusements, $5; savings, $52; miscellaneous, $219—total, $1,300.

Exhibitor Groups Meeting

Members of Allied of New Jersey and the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware were scheduled to hold a joint meeting in Philadelphia this week to discuss topics of mutual interest.

Pettengill Measure Due to Be 'Shelved'

The Pettengill anti-block booking measure, which has received the vigorous support of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors and various reform groups, is expected to be "shelved" at the current session of Congress, due to the pressure of more important legislation. That was indicated in Washington this week by Congressman Pettengill himself, who said he had "no idea" when his bill would be heard by the House commerce committee.

In various state legislatures anti-film legislation was notably absent from the calendars. In only a few state legislatures was adverse film legislation introduced.

In Alabama, under a general sales tax of five per cent, the film industry faces taxation when the legislature reconvenes April 30. Representative John C. Coleman said this week he will introduce such a bill.

The only developments in the California legislature at Sacramento were the killing in the Assembly of the Democratic 30-hour week bill, and passage of a bill raising corporation taxes from two to four per cent of net income.

With the opening of the third week of Florida's legislature, the sales tax previously advocated and then dropped was reintroduced and would place a straight three per cent tax on every transaction with the exception of the sale of gasoline. Theatre tickets, according to tentative plans, would be assessed at the rate of one cent on each ten-cent ticket and two cents on each ticket of 40 cents and over. A bill to outlaw bank nights was introduced last week, its purpose to place such a high license fee on theatres indulging in the practice that the plan could not be successfully operated. In towns of 5,000 or less the license fee would be $50 for each drawing, up to a fee of $500 for each drawing in towns of 100,000 and up.

The ten per cent admission tax bill was defeated in the Iowa legislature at Des Moines last week.

Having passed the Minnesota House, indications now are that the Senate will concur on a three per cent sales tax measure which applies to motion picture admissions as well as to other commodities. Admissions up to 11 cents would be exempt; 11 to 34 cents, one cent tax; 35 to 64 cents, two cents; 65 cents to $1, three cents.

Sponsors of Sunday shows in Pennsylvania this week were optimistic over the news that the legislature was taking up six different bills in its law and order committee to permit Sunday films by local option.

The Nebraska legislature killed a two per cent sales tax measure which sought to put a levy on theatre admissions.

In Wisconsin the Carow bill, which would place a four per cent tax on the gross receipts of theatres, was assailed by exhibitors from all over the state at a committee meeting in Madison.

Senate Reconsiders Copyright Convention

The Senate at Washington last week reconsidered its earlier vote ratifying the copyright convention, and returned the international treaty to the calendar pending action on the copyright bill which is expected to be introduced soon.

Cameraman Candidly Says "Ouch!"

Arbitration of New York Labor Dispute Dropped

Abandonment of a concilation move to readjust operators' wage scales under the motion picture code, and charges by union projectionists in Kansas City that the National Labor Board is prejudiced in favor of the American Federation of Labor, were the principal developments of the week in theatre union circles, as picketing growing out of disputes continued along several fronts.

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees in New York, the National Recovery Administration, through Sol Rosenblatt, compliance director; the Independent Theatre Owners Association and two independent unions, Allied Motion Picture Operators and Empire State Operators, had been conducting salary readjustment discussions for weeks and these abruptly were abandoned over the weekend, to await Congressional disposition of the NRA itself. Mr. Rosenblatt was said to have so decided.

The dispute in Kansas City which caused the Independent Motion Picture Operators Union to attack the National Labor Board came when the board upheld findings of its regional labor board that E. S. Young did not violate Section 7-A of the code in dismissing an independent union member from his Central theatre because of his union affiliation. Mr. Young is said to have admitted violation, and the case was considered a pivotal one in clarifying the rights of exhibitors and operators under Section 7-A.

Musicians' Local No. 802 was preparing to picket all theatres in New York not employing musicians. A general theatre strike of all crafts was threatened.

Both independent unions and IATSE branches in the New York area were conducting a city-wide picketing campaign for jurisdiction, better wages and/or shorter hours. Detectives were watching theatres for violence, and it was said some 175 arrests had been made in the fight.

SALOMON THE CANDID

March of Time Engages High-priest of Candid Still Cameramen for Motion Picture Work

The motion picture is extending itself to embrace the "candid" camera technique of the still photographer who snaps unawares the world bigwigs and newspaper headliners. March of Time has engaged in Paris Dr. Erich Salomon, highpriest of candid still cameramen, to lead the way.

Since much of Dr. Salomon's widely known success in snapping headliners in off-guard moments depends on his silent, unobtrusive equipment and manner, he has hesitated to attempt motion picture work. However, March of Time arranged to supply him with a silent, almost unnoticeably small high-speed motion picture camera made according to his specifications, and negotiations were concluded last week in France for his services.

Lawyer, Banker to Photographer

With his Leica camera, no larger than a man's hand, he has snapped leading foreign statesmen, royalty, news personalities. In Paris, with Richard de Rochemont, March of Time representative on the Continent, Dr. Salomon visited the many factories of motion picture cameras, selected a Leblay which will be made to his order with silent gears, extra lenses, special timing attachments. As soon as the equipment is ready he will devote a month to experimental work. He says he knows nothing about taking motion pictures and wants to learn, in his own way, before starting on assignments.

He learns quickly. Six years ago he wasn't interested in photography, not even as an amateur. Onetime lawyer, banker, in 1928, at the age of 42, he was connected with the publishing firm of Ullstein. Hearing what Dr. Paul Wolff and others were doing with the diminutive Leica camera, he became interested, decided to try his hand at snapping unposed pictures of news events. By assuring the president of a Berlin court he would not use flashlights, would cause no commotion, he got permission to take pictures of a murder trial. These were published in Ullstein's Berliner Illustrirte Zeitung, caused a sensation. That started him on his candid-camera career.

"Secretaries, Table and Salomon"

Distinguished-looking, master of seven languages, keenly interested in politics, Dr. Salomon has access to high official circles closed to the regular cameramen. Briand, France's former foreign minister, has said, "There are just three things necessary for a League of Nations conference: a few Foreign Secretaries, a table and Salomon."

Once when Briand, Germany's Stresemann, and England's MacDonald were leaving Paris, Dr. Salomon boarded the train to bid them goodby. As the train was about to pull out of the station, Dr. Salomon turned to go, caught his coat on the handle of a compartment door. In trying to free it, the straps of his camera became tangled. As the departing whistle blew, the guard of the private diplomatic car came to his rescue, told him not to bother, ride on with the party. Some of his best shots of traveling diplomats were taken on that trip.

Prized possessions in his portfolio are self-portraits of himself with unsuspecting subjects. In April, 1929, he called on Sir Austen Chamberlain, casually placed his camera, with a self-timing shutter set for action, on a bookcase. As he leaned over Sir Austen's shoulder to show him samples of his photographs, the shutter clicked and he and the minister were registered on the same negative. Several years later he took the same kind of self-portrait of himself with William Randolph Hearst.

Particularly notable are his pictures of notables at international conferences—pictures of German and French ministers at a Hague conference, in earnest argument at eleven o'clock in the morning; pictures of these same ministers, sagging in chairs, eyes heavy, ties undone, table littered with papers, cigar and cigaret stubs, at one in the morning.

Under the auspices of Fortune magazine, Time Magazine affiliate, Dr. Salomon came to America in 1931, went to Washington with Premier Laval, took the famous picture of the Hoover-Laval conference first published in Time. For Fortune he has recorded a secret session of the ways and means committee, official Washington at formal dinners, senators, generals, Washington widows at the Bachelors' Cotillion, the first pictures ever taken of the United States supreme court in session.

Chinese Raise Fees For Film Censorship

Foreign-made pictures submitted to the film censorship board of China are subject to an examination fee of $20 per 500 meters, a sharp increase, under a revision of the Film Censorship Law passed recently by the Legislative Yuan at Nanking. Any film less than 500 meters will be subject to the $20 fee. If a film is re-submitted, the fee is doubled. No examination fee is to be charged for Chinese-made pictures, although a nominal charge is to be made for any expense incurred by the board in examination. Recently Dr. Alfred Sze, Chinese minister to Washington, protested to the State Department against the restrictions imposed on the importation of Chinese eggs to the United States.

The Central Film Censorship Committee at Nanking has petitioned the Executive Yuan, urging that pictures passed by the committee should not be subject to further examination by local authorities.

Trans-Lux Net Profit For Year Equals $180,637

Trans-Lux Daylight Screen Corporation and subsidiaries has reported a net profit of $180,637 for the year ended December 31, 1934, and Trans-Lux Movies Corporation, film subsidiary, reported a net loss of $51,159, according to the annual statement. The 1934 net profit compares with a net profit of $114,926 in 1933.

The film subsidiary showed an operating profit of $2,998 before deductions for depreciation and amortization and administrative and general expenses.

ZANUCK WOULD HALVE PRODUCT TO END DUALS

20th Century Production Head Also Suggests Shutdown For Month to Better Quality

Darryl Francis Zanuck—the youthful producer of "The House of Rothschild," "Cardinal Richelieu," "Les Miserables" and others—flew into New York from Hollywood last week and set about telling the industry how to settle some of the vexations now rampant in both production and exhibition. Two of the 20th Century Pictures vice-president's more pointed recommendations were:

1. Close all major studios for one month to "starve" the public and the theatres as a solution of the double feature problem.

2. Cut major company production programs in half in order to concentrate solely upon Class "A" product.

Closing the studios for one month and starving the public for film entertainment would, Mr. Zanuck believes, strike a powerful blow at double features and improve the quality of pictures generally. In addition, a production holiday would be a benefit to producers, he said, because it would offer them time to concentrate on the study of more suitable story material.

Sees Improved Quality

His second recommendation—that involving the cutting of production programs in half—was offered at a general press reception in the United Artists' home office.

If, he observed, every major company in the business would cut its production schedule in half and concentrate on Class "A" pictures, the result would be not only generally improved quality of output but would do much toward solution of the dual billing problem.

"This business of turning pictures out for five cents a dozen, allotting $100,000 for this one, $150,000 for the next and $250,000 for that one and stopping when the money is spent is the bunk. It can't be done," he declared.

Doesn't Blame Exhibitors for Duals

"To make it worse, every picture is advertised the same way—as the 'biggest and best.' What's the answer? If a man happens to see three of these 'B' pictures in a row he gets disgusted and stays home to listen to the radio. The only way he can tell when a good one comes along is by word of mouth advertising."

Mr. Zanuck emphatically stated that he didn't much blame exhibitors for double billing because "some of the stuff they have to show isn't worth a quarter for two of them."

Pointing to 20th Century's concentration on Class "A" product, he said: "We have no budget. If the idea is good and we have faith in it, we keep at it until it's finished, whether it costs $400,000, $500,000 or a million. And we don't try to chop it down to 7,000 feet if it holds up naturally at a greater length."

"Personally," said Mr. Zanuck, "I'm in favor of the longer ones if they're good. Exhibitors won't dual them; they'll stick in a newsreel and a couple of shorts."

Mr. Zanuck said, however, that the system of concentrating solely on the big pictures is the biggest risk any producer can take.

"We can go broke or make a fortune quicker than any other concern. We have no theatre commitments to absorb the weak ones. They all stand or fall on their individual merits."

The Legion of Decency has been an influence of great importance to the industry, Mr. Zanuck observed, and to back up his contention he pointed out that there have been more "great" pictures turned out in the past six months than in any other similar period in the industry's history.

Mr. Zanuck arrived in New York in time to witness the world premieres of his "Cardinal Richelieu" at the Radio City Music Hall, and "Les Miserables" at the United Artists' Rivoli. He plans to leave the end of this week for an Alaskan shooting expedition, before returning to work on next season's schedule.

Farley Rescinds Blanket Delivery

United States postal order No. 6338, which developed into a controversial issue immediately it became effective, and which was found an unusual opportunity for the theatres of the country in their exploitation of product, was rescinded last week by Postmaster General James A. Farley, effective July 1, 1935.

The order provided that local postmasters were required to supply on request information relative to the number of boxes served by their branches, after which an advertiser could deliver to the post office the required number of third class pieces, addressed merely to "householder" or "patron" and the post office would insure delivery to each mail box. The rate was three-quarters of a cent per ounce, with a minimum of two ounces. Theatres became extensive users of the new service in direct mail selling to prospective patrons.

The order was issued on October 12, 1934, and newspapers were among the leaders in registering protest, claiming that the order put the Post Office Department in the position of fostering one type of advertising in preference to others.

Mr. Farley's official explanation for rescinding the order said that "after continuing this test for six months the department has concluded that the revenue derived from this source is not sufficient to justify its continuance." Thomas Quinn Beesley, executive director of the National Council of Business Mail Users, protested the rescinding of the order and questioned the reason officially given by Mr. Farley.

'Ad' Pictures Hurt, Says MPPDA

The motion picture theatre screen is not the proper place for advertising reels, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America declared this week, and action will be taken to discourage their theatrical use. This was decided Monday in New York at a continuance of the annual directors' meeting, when the following resolution was adopted:

"Much concern is felt over the reports that various projects are now underway aimed at injecting advertising films into entertainment programs, and the association will conduct a study of the matter. A report and recommendations will be presented at a later date.

"The motion picture theatre is and should be reserved exclusively for entertainment. The motion picture theatre screen is not a proper medium for advertising, whether this be by direct presentation of outright advertising films, or by some indirect effort to present advertising films under the guise of entertainment."

That the use of sponsored advertising reels has been growing in theatrical exhibition is generally known. Remembering the nationwide protest leveled at the industry by press and public against the practice as indulged in some three years ago, the large companies apparently intend to prevent a recurrence. The public complained that it was paying admission to witness entertainment, not advertising "blurbs"; the press charged unfair competition on the grounds that money was being diverted by national advertisers from advertising in the press to the screen..

Too, distributors realize that screening time given to advertising films ordinarily would be devoted by exhibitors to regular theatrical releases, thus reducing rental revenue.

Some of the large companies themselves participated in the production and exhibition of sponsored reels three years ago, but this time production is in the hands of the so-called non-theatrical or advertising film producer, who solicits theatres for screen time on behalf of national advertisers, giving the film free of rental charge, and, in many cases, paying the exhibitor for showing it.

The Hays directors discussed the legislative situation in California, but no action was taken at the meeting. They also unanimously adopted a resolution in recognition of the work of Louis Lumiere, French scientist, on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the motion picture in France.

Better Grosses Seen In Tax Collections

Improvement in theatre grosses was indicated in the report of the Internal Revenue Bureau at Washington on admission tax collections during March. The total, $1,283,595, compares with a total of $1,267,375 for March, 1934. For the first nine months of the fiscal year collections amounted to $11,666,261, a gain of $783,893 over the total for the same period of the previous year, when the aggregate was $10,882,368.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A FRIEND OF LOU SOBOL'S brings back fresh from Hollywood the very true story about a smart stock racketeer who has always had a soft spot for his daddy. Every week he used to send the old gent a check for $50, and his pop would protest, on the grounds that "I don't like to take charity from anyone—not even my son. I wish I could work instead." The stocketeer continued, however, and each week the old man would write begging him to see if he couldn't locate work for him out there instead—he didn't want to have to depend on his son. So the stock salesman conceived a polite fiction. His father is a costume designer. He wrote him and told him that one of the studios was interested in new designs. Send him some samples. Immediately a new lease of life began for the old fellow. He worked feverishly day and night on designs and shipped them to his son.

"They're marvelous," the son wrote back. "Metro-Goldwyn is crazy about them. They're paying you $75 to start. Here's your first check." The fiction kept up until, one day, the son told one of the executives of a leading studio how he was kidding his old man. The executive asked to see the designs, liked them and took them down to the studio. The result was that the old man was hired on the spot, sent for and is now drawing a weekly salary of $225.

Paramount has a "charm school" at the studio in Hollywood. Operated by Zecel Sylvonia, former Ziegfeld Follies girl, it is a branch of the studio's drama school and was inaugurated solely for the edification of Paramount's up-and-comin' stock players.

Fraulein Sylvonia, of fine German stock, instructs classes daily in the art of social charm—teaching histrionic proteges to balance peas on their knives; walk properly without skipping or clogging; sit down easily without raising dust from the old family sofa.

The "charm school" has been in operation for over a year and—according to the company—has succeeded in lifting young thespians into a higher social stratum—that is, if you can judge by outward appearances.

Al Kaufman and Ralph Kohn, formerly of Paramount Pictures, in reminiscent mood, so Vic Shapiro writes us, were harking back to a sideline project once planned by Adolph Zukor, then president of the Famous Players, which preceded Mr. Zukor's present Paramount company. Kaufman and Kohn were to be partners, the trio having considered embarking in the chicken-and-egg business, to be established at Mr. Zukor's farm near New City, New York. The ranch, on the side of the road, was to be a showplace. Chickens were to be all white. Coops were to be extra spotless, too, with bright green roofs.

When it came to picking a name for the ranch, Al Kaufman suggested "Famous Layers Chicken and Egg Corporation."

DIRECTOR WILLIAM KEIGHLEY on the Warner lot in Burbank finished "The G Men," about the United States Secret Service, and sat down in his chair in relief. There had been considerable excitement and fighting and shooting and roughhouse. He looked around the set, representing a kitchen of a Wisconsin summer resort. It was a shambles, piles of broken dishes, bullet-riddled cans of foodstuffs, shattered bottles of catsup and utensils turned into veritable sieves by machine-gun fire, littered the floor. The windows were paneless, the glass shot out by the same weapons that ripped the shelves.

Keighley was tired, and at the moment he needed quiet. Barton MacLane and Russell Hopton, playing the roles of gangsters, had been crouching under the cottage kitchen sink while George Daly and Fred Davis, Warners' machine-gun experts, sent a hail of lead over their heads. Jimmy Cagney, Bob Armstrong and the rest of the "G-Men" had just staged a realistic fighting attack in capturing the resort.

There was a free-for-all fight between Cagney and Edward Pawley, another "gangster." They had battered each other around, tossed each other across tables, and literally incapacitated themselves while the cameras whirred.

On another stage Armstrong and MacLane banged away at each other, shooting through a closed doorway, and using real bullets because blanks won't tear holes in wood.

Cagney came out of the fight with a sprained finger, sustained in a jiu jitsu bout; Russell Hopton's right leg was injured when he backed into the "getaway" car while a bank holdup was being filmed; Lloyd Nolan was knocked unconscious when Edward Pawley brought his manacled wrists down upon his head; Frank Evans, an assistant cameraman, was wounded by a bullet in the leg.

Keighley was tired, very tired, when he turned to a newspaper and read a headline: "United States Attorney General Cummings says the current crop of pictures dealing with the deeds of the Department of Justice are too sissified."

Down in Birmingham, Alabama, it has been the custom for juries tied up over night on court cases to break up the monotony by going to the theatre. Recently Arthur Garner, Seventh Day Adventist preacher, and member of the jury of Criminal Court, agreed to attend with the other eleven jurors on the same panel, on condition that they listen to a Bible reading and sermon delivered by him later in the evening.

With this agreement, Mack Johnson, bailiff, took the jurors to the movies, where Minister Garner blindfolded himself and sat in a special chair with his back to the screen so he would see none of the show. Then the jurors returned to their quarters at the Molton Hotel and listened to Garner's Bible reading and sermon.

Press dispatches from Hollywood tell us that Mae West's newly decorated apartment suite includes a full-length mirror placed in the ceiling directly above her head. There are mirrors in every door, on every wall, on every coffee table and tabouret, so that wherever she turns the effect is to create an army of buxom Mae Wests.

Only one picture, a portrait of herself, hangs in the whole suite. It's an heroic nude, they say.

THERE'S ALMOST AS MUCH color and human interest in the everyday performances of Erpi's service men in the field as in the routine of their parent American Telephone's linemen. Both are Johnny-on-the-spot when it comes to emergencies.

Typical is the incident of Erpi's front line activity following an SOS call from an exhibitor in Tennessee who telephoned the Memphis office for a service man to repair his equipment in order to continue a show. Complete breakdowns, so frequent in the old days, when the end of every reel brought a stop for a changeover, are rare in this era. Anyway, the nearest service man was on the road at the moment riding his car to the town of Boga Loosa, and the Erpi people at Memphis set out to locate him. They telephoned the Bogo Loosa police chief, explained the situation to him, and, appealing to his community spirit by telling him the town's theatre would be without movies unless the trouble-shooter was stopped on the road, enlisted the cooperation of the whole department. They stationed a squadron of coppers on the road to watch the license plates, and after a wait, stopped the repairer, who was dazed and amazed when they led him to the theatre, sirens screeching as they sped down the main street.

She got the names of the other 61 from Kay Francis, their mothers having told the star in the mail about the adoption of the name. What the mothers do not know is that the lady of the movies who so inspired them to name their daughters Kay Francis this and Kay Francis that is really not Kay Francis. She's Katherine Gibbs.

FEWER TWO-REELERS IN 1935-36 DUE TO DUALS

Major Companies May Eliminate Two - Reelers, Holding Duals Cannot Support Them

Executive staffs during the week were actively shaping 1935-36 programs and deciding on convention arrangements and sales policies. They concluded wholesale purchases of story properties and talent, and held discussions pointing toward considerable reduction, even complete elimination, of two-reel subjects, concentrating on singles.

Following Paramount's decision of one week ago to abandon the two-reeler in favor of singles, until the prevailing double feature trend subsides, Columbia, Metro, Radio and Universal gave consideration to a similar solution of the double feature problem as it affects short subject sales. Programs containing two features, a newsreel and trailer cannot support two-reelers, it is held.

The following developments were reported during the week:

Coleman

Robert B. Coleman, at Atlantic Studios, Pittsburgh, was completing a series of 12 travelogues and educational one-reelers, to be released as "Encyclopedia of the Screen."

Columbia

Chicago and June appears to be Columbia's choice of the place and date for the annual sales convention, where field sales representatives will be told about a new series of four Peter B. Kyne western features, which increases the western output from eight to 12, Ken Maynard appearing in the larger group. Whether the acquisitions will cause an extension of the annual feature program from the usual 48 to 52, had not been determined. It is expected Columbia will follow the trend of reducing, even eliminating two-reel short subjects in favor of single reels only. Harry Langdon was signed this week as the star of a new short series, the comedian having finished a series for 1934-35 some weeks ago.

Criterion

David Strong's Criterion Films will distribute in this country a series of shorts, entitled "In Quest of the Perfect Woman," produced in north Africa by Tom Terriss for Hammer Pictures, Inc. The first three releases are: "The Veiled Dancer of Eloued," "Vampire of Marrakesh," "North of Sahara."

Du World

Vlademar Bell sold distribution rights of the Feodor Chaliapin feature, "Don Quixote," to Du World Pictures.

First Division

Exhibitors in Kansas City will deal next season with Midwest Film Distributors, of that city, in purchasing "March of Time," the independent exchange having acquired the franchise this week. Omaha and Des Moines accounts will also be serviced by Midwest.

First Division's Cincinnati branch has been merged with Majestic exchange, and will be in charge of Lee L. Goldberg. Maurice Chase will be financially interested with Fred Levy and Mr. Goldberg, both of whom also own Big Feature Rights, Louisville.

Fox

Chicago was definitely selected as the location for the sales convention of Fox, which will screen for delegates the first four 1935-36 specials: Janet Gaynor's "The Farmer Takes a Wife," Will Rogers in "Old Kentucky," "Dante's Inferno" and "Redheads on Parade."

Buster West and Tom Patricola were in New York preparing to start work in 1935-36 Educational comedies for Fox release.

GB Pictures

GB Pictures will hold regional sales conventions, starting late in May, each lasting four days, the first to feature announcements of sales staff additions and a successor to L. J. Schlaifer, sales executive, resigned.

Walter Huston is the latest Hollywood star to be acquired for Gaumont British pictures made in England, sailing upon the conclusion of the road tour of "Dodsworth." Mr. Huston will make "Rhodes," based on the life of Cecil Rhodes, socalled "Empire builder." The company will produce "David Livingstone" in conjunction with James A. Fitzpatrick, and may make others based on lives of other explorers.

Guaranteed

Clifton Hurst Productions disposed of American distribution rights to "Norah O'Neale," produced in Ireland, to Guaranteed Pictures, which also acquired this week, from Ambassador, all foreign rights to the eight Kermit Maynard westerns now being made in Hollywood.

Hoffberg

Foreign rights were acquired by J. H. Hoffberg, from Willis Kent, to "Outlaw Rule" and "Range Warfare," featuring Bob Russell, and "Circle of Death," with Monte Montana.

Liberty

M. H. Hoffman's Liberty Pictures completed its 12 1934-35 features and immediately started production of "Hollywood Hotel," first of 12 for next year. Production budget will be increased.

The company, through J. H. Hoffberg, foreign distributor, opened a Liberty exchange in Buenos Aires to serve Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile, with Jack Lustberg in charge, Natalio Gutman, formerly with Columbia in Argentina, as sales manager and Enrique Friedlander handling publicity. This is the first step to establish direct distribution for Liberty in South America.

Melbert

"Fish from Hell," three-reel novelty, will be distributed internationally by Melbert Pictures, which this week sold Philadelphia and Washington rights to Murray Beier's Preferred Pictures.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Leaning toward single-reelers and elimination or reduction of two-reelers, MGM executives this week were considering a reconstruction of the short subject program for 1935-36. Principally effected would be Hal Roach's two-reel "Our Gang" comedies, and Mr. Roach was in conference with Fred Quimby, short subject sales head at the New York office.

William Anthony McGuire, playwright and film executive, will produce 1935-36 features for MGM, which has also signed William Wellman and Edward Sloman to the directors' staff. "The Hands of Orlac," French novel by Maurice Renard, will be a release next season.

Paramount

"Rich Man's Son" will be the first to be produced by Paramount and a new unit headed by B. P. Fineman, who returns to the studio's executive staff after five years.

Max Fleischer's former series of "Screen Songs" will be added to the new season's schedule, having been dropped a year ago.

Radio

RKO, like Columbia, MGM and Universal, is considering substituting one-reelers for two-reel subjects next season.

Republic

W. Ray Johnston was progressing with the organization of his new Republic Pictures, national distributor, reporting the following development:

New York and Philadelphia franchises were acquired by Herman Gluckman, head of Capitol and Majestic exchanges, who was appointed to Republic's advisory committee of exchange owners. Mr. Gluckman will distribute in both cities under the exchange name of the new company, handling that product exclusively.

Republic Pictures Corporation of New England has been formed in Massachusetts with Herman Rifkin president. William G. Underwood and Claude Ezell of Dallas acquired the Republic rights in that territory, and formed Republic Pictures Corporation of Texas.

Edward A. Golden, general sales manager, was in Toronto, discussing Canadian distribution with Oscar Hanson, president of Empire Films, Ltd., distributor of Mr. Johnston's Monogram product in the Dominion.

In Hollywood, new talent and story material was purchased by Trem Carr, production head. Purchased were: "Manhunters," Norman Hall's Liberty Magazine story; "Women with a Past," by Frederick and Fanny Hatton; "The Big Show," by Dorothy Reid; "The Gentleman from Louisiana," by Tristram Tupper; "The Deer Slayer," by James Fennimore Cooper; "The Spanish Cape Mystery," by Ellery Queen," and "Dancing Feet," by Robert Eden.

Republic will produce in the East, making at least one, "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round," in New York, at the Bronx Biograph studios. Mr. Carr appointed Mrs. Wallace Reid story editor, and assigned Sada Cowan to the scenario of "Forbidden Heaven," and William Jefferson to write the "Two Black Sheep" script.

William Murphy joined the home office publicity staff, directed by Edward Finney.

Rowland

William Rowland plans production of a feature series of musicals at Biograph's Bronx studio, but has yet to arrange distribution.

United Artists

Distribution rights were acquired by United Artists, from Guaranteed Pictures, to eight Bob Steele westerns, for Latin American, Mexico and West Indies.

Samuel Goldwyn's first 1935-36 production to star Merle Oberon, and her second for the company, will be Richard Doddridge Blackmore's "Lorna Doone."

Harry M. Goetz, for years treasurer of Consolidated Film Industries, will serve no longer on Consolidated's board, resigning to concentrate on production for Reliance Pictures, released through United Artists.

Universal

Universal is another of the large companies considering elimination of two-reel subjects next season, to concentrate on one-reelers.

The company's convention, originally set for May 25, at the Stevens Hotel, Chicago, has been set back to June 1 to 3.

Six Spanish talkers will be made in this country next season by Universal for distribution abroad, and none will be duplicates of the American program. Plans for actual production in Europe will be set following conferences in New York and abroad with company officials and N. L. Manheim, foreign head.

Warner

Sales effort for this season will be concluded and the new season's selling campaign started during a five-week sales drive which will get under way immediately at the Warner New York and field distribution offices.

Hear Witnesses in General Talking Suit against Erpi

The anti-trust trial of General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation against Electrical Research Products, Inc., Western Electric and American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which are charged with having built up a monopoly in the sound business through a series of contracts with exhibitors, finally opened on Monday before Judge John P. Nields in the United States District Court in Wilmington. The trial is expected to last about two weeks.

These restrictive agreements are the basis of complaint:

A "tying" agreement in the licenses or leases of Erpi to exhibitors whereby exhibitors agree to purchase from Erpi all repair and replacement parts for the reproducing apparatus and equipment leased by Erpi.

The exclusive agreements in the contractual letters accompanying the leases of Erpi to producers whereby producers agree to distribute films produced on the producing apparatus only to exhibitors supplied with Erpi reproducing apparatus and equipments.

It is also charged that the exclusive agreements in the contractual letters require producers to refrain from distributing talking motion pictures to theatre exhibitors who have not acquired reproducing equipment from Erpi.

Stanley Company of America, one of the original co-plaintiffs, has settled its grievances with the defendants. Duovac is no longer active.

Before the trial opened, the defendants amended their answer to the charges by including the statement that Duovac, since the case was instituted, has gone into bankruptcy and is no longer an active company and hence is not entitled to any injunctive relief.

To this, Samuel E. Darby, of New York, leading counsel for the plaintiff, said that had the "vice not existed, Duovac might still be in the business," of manufacturing electrical devices including vacuum tubes and photo electric cells.

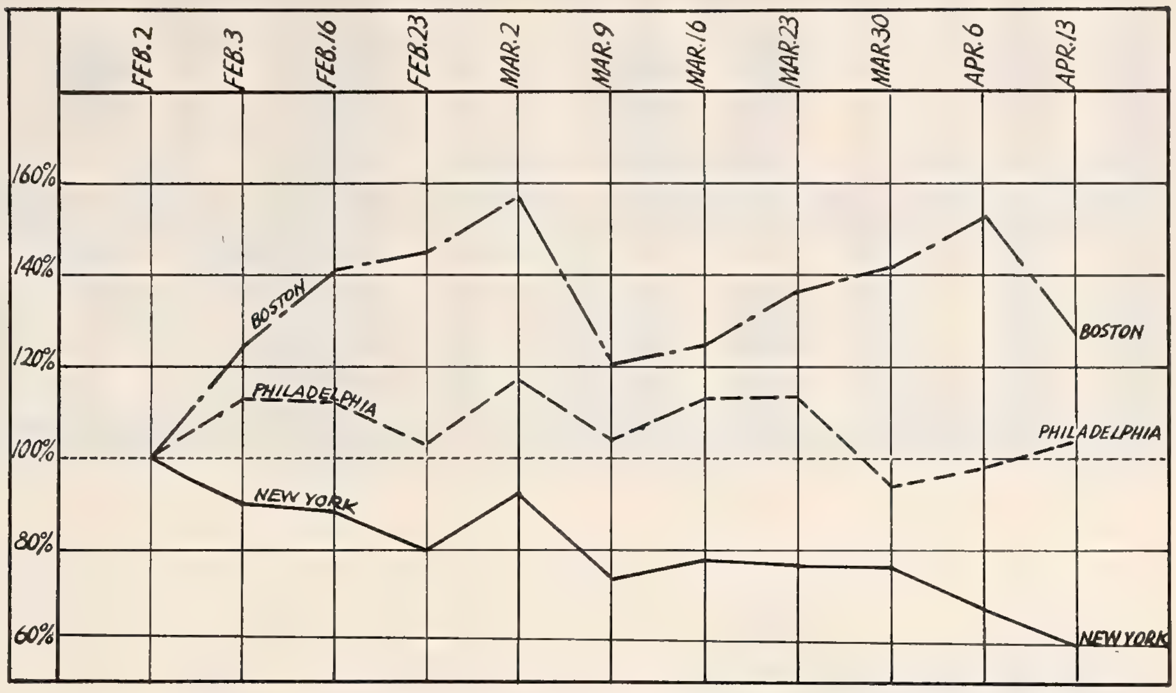
The first days of the trial were spent entirely by both sides outlining their cases. Mr. Darby and Mr. Ephraim, of New York, and former Federal Judge Hugh M. Morris, of Wilmington, are attorneys for the plaintiffs; George F. Hurd, C. M. Bracelen and John H. Ray, of New York, and Arthur Logan of Marvel, Morford, Ward and Logan, of Wilmington, are acting for the defendants.

Witnesses for the plaintiffs Tuesday were E. M. Loew of Boston; Edward Levy, counsel for the MPTOA; Charles W. Picquet, president of the MPTOA of North and South Carolina; Harry Pearlman, Philadelphia. Testifying Wednesday were George E. Quigley (by deposition), vice-president and general manager, Vitaphone, and John Miller of Brunswick Radio Corp., also a Warner subsidiary, and others.

General Talking Pictures, Duovac Radio and Stanley Company of America appeared in United States district court in Wilmington in 1932 charging Erpi, Western Electric and A T & T with controlling 90 per cent of the sound industry, and asked Judge Nields to issue a preliminary injunction enjoining the defendants from enforcing their cross-licensing agreements.

Judge Nields handed down preliminary injunctions restraining Erpi from enforcing or attempting to enforce provisions by which certain producers were obligated to distribute only to exhibitors supplied with Erpi reproducers.

The decrees also freed Stanley Company, Duovac and General Talking Pictures from "tying" agreements with Erpi whereby Erpi supplied all replacement parts for theatres operated by the plaintiffs.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, indicates the trend of business in each of three eastern key cities during the eleven weeks' period from February 2 to April 13, 1935. The gross for the first week of this period in each city is taken as 100 per cent for that city.

ITALY ACTS ON NEW IMPORT RESTRICTION

Expect American Firms Will Be Permitted to Introduce Only Slightly Fewer Films in 1935

by VITTORIO MALPASSUTI
Rome Correspondent

The Italian Government has passed a bill which establishes an annual fund of ten million lires for a period of five years for support of the Italian film producers. The aim is twofold, to obtain a better class of Italian pictures and to enlarge the field of production.

This is not what might be called State production, as in the case of Russia, where the state finances production. In Italy the state only lends money to producers and under certain guaranties. It is a bank credit service such as that given by the Bank of Cinematographic Credit in Berlin.

At the same time another decree was passed to restrict importation into Italy of film, together with other goods, this in order to avoid as far as possible the exportation of gold from Italy. The decree is positive, but American and foreign importers into Italy, on making a special demand at the Finance Office, would be granted permission to import.

The decree was made effective as of April 1. At this writing no importation permits have been granted, but it is generally believed that American companies will be allowed to introduce into Italy for the 1935-36 season a number of pictures which will be only slightly less than the total introduced for 1934-35.

[The previous law, which had reduced by one-fourth the legal importation of commodities and had applied to the motion picture industry as well as other goods, expired April 1. American companies this week were awaiting word of publication of the new decree, which would make it law.—Ed.]

Quite a few pictures are now going into production in Italy. A feature on the Italian Navy, "Carene di Acciaio," Maenti Film, will be directed by Alessandro Blasetti. Another will be "Love," an ICI production directed by Carlo Lodovico Bragaglia. The third is "Passaporto Rosso" ("Red Passport"), Tirreria Film, dealing with an episode of Italian emigration and directed by Guido Brignone. "Lohengrin," E. Ventura, with scenario by Aldo Debenedetti, will be followed by "Automobile di tutti" ("Everyone's Auto"), Novello Film, scenario by Zavattini, and directed by Mario Camerini. "Scarpe al sole," a picture of the Alps and Alpine soldiers, scenario by Paolo Monelli and direction by Mr. Elter, will be made by ICI. Consorzio VIS will produce two pictures under the direction of Giovacchino Forzano.

GB Plans Story Department Here

As further evidence of its intention to gain a firm corner in the American market for its product, GB Pictures is planning the establishment of a story department as an adjunct to the company's New York headquarters to acquire plays produced in New York and books by American authors whose themes are definitely American. This was revealed by Michael E. Balcon, executive production head, last week in New York prior to his departure for England.

The next immediate step in GB's penetration of world markets with its own distribution system will be taken in the opening of exchanges throughout South America.

DAYLIGHT SAVING IN 263 MORE TOWNS

Observance Starting Sunday in 794 Communities Shows Gains in South; Plants Change Clocks

Daylight saving time becomes effective Sunday at 2 a. m. in 794 communities in 13 states and Canada, an increase of 263 places since last year. Long an exhibitor complaint, because it lengthens the period for outdoor activities in daylight, thereby shortening the evening indoors, the practice as effected by local ordinance shows this situation:

	Number of Communities
State	1934	1935	Net Change
Connecticut	33	33	....
Delaware	3	8	+ 5
Georgia	0	1	+ 1
Idaho	0	3	+ 3
Illinois	21	90	+ 69
Indiana	19	14	— 5
Maine	36	59	+ 23
Mississippi	0	1	+ 1
New Hampshire	20	23	+ 3
New Jersey	60	118	+ 58
New York	204	276	+ 72
Pennsylvania	72	93	+ 21
Vermont	1	2	+ 1
Canada	62	73	+ 11
TOTALS	531	794	+263

In hundreds of communities exhibitors have been leaders in the fight to prevent return of daylight saving.

Daylight saving observance will be more general this year in the rural districts where hitherto opposition has been keenest, and there will be a marked extension by industrial plants in communities which do not officially recognize advanced summer time, according to the returns in a survey of daylight saving by the Merchants' Association of New York. One factor cited was the shortening of working hours under the NRA.

More than 300 communities in New York State alone will observe daylight saving time, including places where industrial plants will observe the summer hours though the town itself adheres to standard time.

Inroads in South

For the first time this year daylight saving has made inroads on the South. It is to be observed this year at Atlanta, and at Jackson, Miss., with the prospect that the influence of these cities will have the practical effect of forcing observance in surrounding towns.

Three states will go on daylight saving in their entirety. These are New Jersey, Rhode Island and Massachusetts. Three states, Connecticut, Maine and New Hampshire, continue in effect laws making illegal the public display of daylight saving time. Nevertheless, daylight saving will be observed in the industrial cities and towns of both Connecticut and Maine and in the principal industrial cities of New Hampshire as well as in many of the resort sections of these three states.

Observance in Canada will be about the same as last year. From the Far West comes word that the towns of Burke, Kellogg and Wallace of Idaho have all officially adopted the new time.

Daylight saving also will be observed in Great Britain, Northern Ireland, France, Belgium, The Netherlands and Portugal.

Industrial Schedules Change

In Rochester, N. Y., where a referendum resulted in a small majority in favor of standard time, many industrial concerns alter their schedules so as to give employes daylight saving schedules.

Practically every community in Michigan now follows eastern standard time the year 'round.

Due to demands for daylight saving in cities, towns and villages outside the eastern time zone, all of Ohio was put on eastern standard time, effective April 3, 1927, by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

AMPA to Hold Election, Dinner

G. Bruce Gallup, advertising director of Columbia Pictures, will be inducted into the presidency of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, at the annual "Naked Truth" banquet on Saturday evening, at the Hotel Astor in New York.

Although the annual election to succeed the present administration headed by William R. Ferguson, MGM, and Paul Benjamin, National Screen Service, will not be held until this Thursday, Mr. Gallup was assured of the post, being the lone candidate in a field which is crowded with candidates for the other offices, two nominating condidates having selected slates.

At the "Naked Truth" affair, Ruth Etting will make her announced last public appearance, having decided a few days ago to retire from theatricals. Another feature will be the appearance of Arthur (Bugs) Baer with a galaxy of brother cartoonists who will swoop down on the diners and rip off caricatures of the folk in action eating. Too, William Doriani, European tenor and star of the La Scala Opera, Milan, will be seen and heard for the first time in New York.

Allied Owners Hearing Postponed

Postponement of a hearing for confirmation of a reorganization plan for Allied Owners Corporation, theatre holding corporation, was announced Saturday in Brooklyn, New York, federal court, until May 3rd, in order to obtain a verification of creditors' assents.

Correction

In Motion Picture Herald issue of April 6 a news item stated that David A. Ambuter, head of the Ambuter Film Laboratory, Boston, had entered into an association with William Wool and George Sellman. Mr. Ambuter continues in individual operation of the laboratory.

Four Cities Acting on Double Billing

The fate of voluntary and highly controversial city-wide prohibitions by exhibitors against double featuring hangs in the balance in four of the largest markets—New York, Los Angeles, Cleveland and Kansas City.

Exhibitors in Cleveland, representing circuits and the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, were still attempting to arrive at an agreement acceptable to both.

Efforts of Kansas City owners to effect a plan whereby a committee of exhibitors and distributors would designate certain pictures that could be dualed, prohibiting the double featuring of better class product, were halted by W. D. Fulton, operating five suburban theatres.

In New York lack of interest appears to have killed the plan of Harry Brandt, independent circuit owner, and his Independent Theatre Owners Association, to bring both independent and circuit owners, and distributors together for a conference with the view of banning double bills.

Harry Vinnicoff and Ben Berinstein returned from Code Authority conferences in New York to their Los Angeles theatre headquarters to start immediately another move to establish a double bill ban there.

Richards Heads Paramount Units

E. V. Richards last week was elected president of the Paramount Publix reorganized subsidiary companies, Saenger Theatres and Saenger Realty Company, both with headquarters in New Orleans. Other officers of both companies are Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president; N. L. Carter, secretary, and Walter B. Cokell, treasurer.

The other development in the Paramount reorganization during the week was the filing of a complaint against A. C. Blumenthal in the supreme court in New York by Charles D. Hilles and Eugene W. Leake, former Paramount trustees, in an attempt to recover $36,000 and interest since September 29, 1932, Blumenthal being charged with obtaining unfair preference in the redemption of his twenty-year 5½ per cent debentures of Paramount Publix.

The petition of the Paramount trustees to have the American Tri-Ergon patent infringement claim against it expunged was approved Monday in New York by Special Master John E. Joyce in a report to Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe.

Atlas Corporation, large investment company headed by Floyd L. Odlum, a director-elect of Paramount Publix, submitted to the board an offer to underwrite alone the entire $6,500,000 of new Paramount stock subscription warrants. The bid, asking a fee of $64,000, was accepted.

May 15 was selected for the stockholders' meeting at which one director will resign and eight will be formally elected, as follows: Stephen Callaghan, Robert Cassatt, H. A. Fortington, William Gray, Jr., John D. Hertz, Floyd Odlum, Charles A. Richardson and George J. Schaefer. Dr. Julius Klein will resign.

BIG CHANGES COMING IN BRITISH THEATRES; INDEPENDENTS WARY

Agreement Between Odeon and County and United Artists Awaits Schenck Action; New Booking "Co-op" Forming

By BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

The stories of a merger of the Odeon and County Cinemas circuits, and of an agreement between these groups and United Artists, have been "denied" in terms which amount to a substantial corroboration of the main facts. Describing published announcements as premature, principals of the two groups say that an agreement is being considered and that its final form awaits Joseph M. Schenck's arrival in London.

It is generally believed here that a fusion of the two companies is planned, with UA probably taking a substantial financial interest, and certainly entering into definite contracts for product. To follow, it is stated, is a big public issue of capital. The addition to the new board of Reginald Bromhead, lately managing director of Gaumont-British is rumored but not confirmed. The new money is to be used to bring Odeon-County rapidly to the status of a major circuit, with from 150 to 250 modern theatres.

Whatever the final form of the merger, the get-together of these two theatre groups is of great importance in itself and a significant indication of the shifting and sifting of interests at present in progress in the British field. Both economic and tactical factors have indicated a serious attempt to oppose Gaumont-British domination in the theatre field and the attempts of that company, temporarily checked but probably not abandoned, to control the booking situation; a County-Odeon-UA tieup has definitely that aspect.

Odeon to be 100-Theatre Circuit

The present strength of the groups, both of which are expanding rapidly, is considerable. Odeon has 50 theatres and County more than 30; in both cases their strength lies in the South and West and with particularly good representation, actual or planned, in London neighborhoods and Coast resorts. Odeon has three Birmingham theatres. Its current building plans are for 50 more theatres, doubling its strength.

Oscar Deutsch of Odeon and Charles J. Donada of County, indicated as joint managing directors of a fused enterprise, have both come into prominence within the last few years. Mr. Deutsch, a Birmingham metal merchant, after buying theatres in a small way, financed the BTH sound system and then started the Odeon circuit on ultra modern lines, with finance drawn, it is generally believed, from the wealthy Halifax Building Society. Donada, a Swiss, was an executive of Paramount, London, from 1913 to 1932. County Cinemas, Ltd., established in 1927, has a capital of £125,000 and its financial adviser is J. Amery-Parkes, a lawyer representing big city interests.

Concurrent news that the Maxwell company, Associated British Pictures, had taken over another group of theatres, including three London "supers" controlled by H. A. Yapp, emphasizes the speed with which the trade is re-grouping on the basis of bigger circuit combinations. It also explains the steadily growing fears of the rapidly diminishing independents and the persistence of the hope, among these "small men," that some time, somehow, it will be possible to form a combination with the bargaining power of a circuit.

Rowson PDC Board Chairman

Simon Rowson, formerly joint managing director of Ideal Films, Ltd., which was absorbed recently by Gaumont British, has been elected chairman of the board of directors of Producers' Distributing Corporation, and is sharing the managing directorship with Reginald Smith. It is understood PDC plans to increase its capitalization and extend its producing and distributing activity.

Cooperating on Booking

Although Will Evans, straight from his achievements for Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, failed to negotiate a single booking through an earlier Film Industries Cooperative Society, and in the face of further recent evidence of distributor strength in the defeat of the GB-Union-Hyams booking deal, theatre men are, it is said, enrolling by the hundreds in a new cooperative organization which, in its own words, aims to "act in behalf of independent exhibitors in their dealing with manufacturers and renters and . . . undertake bookings for its members."

It is significant that a small trade paper announcement of this new body brought more than 250 letters from exhibitors anxious to join. It is perhaps even more significant that, though a committee of six has been appointed, it is stated that "for obvious reasons it would be inadvisable to divulge their names." Fear of distributor reprisals is understandable, but for how long will it be practicable to maintain this secret society basis for an organization which plans to deal with the Kinematograph Theatres Society on equal terms?

Just what the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association will do about this new body is another point. Manchester, where it originated, has always been a "left wing" hub in exhibitor politics, but undoubtedly there is much in its policy to appeal to that section of exhibitors, in all parts of the country, which thinks that CEA general policy is too often affected by respect for or fear of the circuits. By definitely excluding the circuits from membership the new body will definitely appeal to the small man. What it will be able to achieve for him is another matter.

4,994 Theatres

A total of 4,994 cinema theatres in the United Kingdom and Ireland is shown by the latest survey completed by Western Electric, which usually gets ahead of official statistics. There are 4,637 active sound theatres and one somehow manages to keep going with silent films; 356 are closed.

The detailed figures, showing the position at April 1 this year, are:

	Sound	Silent	Closed
England	3,549	1	173
Scotland	514	0	68
Wales	340	0	52
Ireland	234	0	63

Western Electric Survey Shows 4,994 Theatres in the United Kingdom and Ireland; 356 Closed; One Silent House

Although many new "supers," representing a net gain in seating capacity, have been erected in the period, the figures show a reduction of 199 theatres since Western Electric's 1930 survey.

Biggest British House Planned

H&G Kinemas, Ltd., is to proceed with erection of the new "super" at Kilburn, London, which was announced when the H&G-GB booking deal was broached. The capacity then stated was 4,700, and the intention to make the theatre the biggest in the United Kingdom persists. The brothers Syd and Phil Hyams and A. J. Gale are directors of H&G (Kilburn), Ltd., which has a capital of £30,000. The original estimate of the cost of the house was £350,000.

Paramount in Birmingham

Paramount will extend its British circuit by building a "super" on part of the King Edward's School site in Birmingham if a deal for the sale of the complete site to other interests, for £2,000,000, goes through. Verity & Beverley, Paramount architects here, will submit plans to the Entertainments Committee on May 20.

Film Suggested by King

John Maxwell of ABP revealed at a press lunch that "Royal Cavalcade" was made as the result of a suggestion from King George himself, who thought it desirable that such a film be shown in the capitals of the British Empire in Jubilee Week. This will be achieved by the use of air transport.

A preliminary plan for joint production of a Jubilee film, by the British industry as a whole, was found impracticable, said Mr. Maxwell.

Mr. Maxwell also announced that a gala performance would be held at the Regal on May 3, from which it is hoped to obtain £50,000 for the King George Jubilee Fund. ABP will give £25,000 and hopes to arrange for first-night receipts in all parts of the Empire to go to the fund.

Wells Film Progresses

H. G. Wells has been putting in a lot of time on the set at Worton Hall, where London Film Productions is now for the first time using the specially erected new floor, the largest in England, made necessary by the demands of "Whither Mankind?" Five cameras are being used on the current setting, which represents a West End street on the eve of a "next war" air raid. Georges Perinal is controlling lighting and Robert Krasker has charge of the cameras. W. Cameron Menzies is directing five versions of "Whither Mankind"—in English, German, French, Spanish and Italian. Leslie Banks, Raymond Massey and Ralph Richardson have the three leading male roles.

It is planned to hold the premiere at the 8,000-seat Albert Hall in London, donating the proceeds to the Prince of Wales' Jubilee Fund.

Stars at Elstree

Grete Natzler started work for BIP's "I Lost My Heart in Heidelberg," which is being directed by Otto Kanturek, cameraman of "Blossom Time" and "Abdul the Damned." Richard Tauber has arrived for his part in the as yet untitled Paul Stein picture. Stein directed Tauber in "Blossom Time," which has just been declared the best British picture of 1934 in the annual Film Weekly patron vote.

ALLIED SETS NATIONAL CONVENTION PROGRAM

Gathering at Atlanta Opens May 21; Set Four-point Program of Exhibitor Business

Pointing out that "weather conditions in mid-May are usually ideal, balmy and not too hot, flowers will be in bloom, birds will be tweet-tweeting and conditions perfect for a never-to-be-forgotten spring vacation," Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors this week sent to the membership the suggestion that all hands turn out on May 21, at Atlanta, for the annual convention. The program was announced as follows:

Monday, May 20:
7:00 p. m. Informal reception for national officers (refreshments).
Tuesday, May 21:
9:00 a. m. Registrations—Piedmont Hotel.
9:30 a. m. Golf tournament—East Lake Country Club. Bobby Jones, director.
3:00 or 4.00 p. m. Directors' meeting—Piedmont Hotel.
4:00 p. m. Ladies' tea at Governor's Mansion.
9:00 p. m. Informal dance including old-fashioned barn dance—Peach Tree Gardens.
Wednesday, May 22:
10:00 a. m. Continuation of golf tournament, if necessary.
1:00 p. m. Bridge luncheon for ladies—Piedmont Driving Club.
1:00 p. m. Luncheon, delegates and visitors—Atlanta Athletic Club.
2:00 p. m. Business session—Atlanta Athletic Club.
8:00 p. m. "Heaven Bound," play, Big Bethel Negro Choir—Atlanta Athletic Club.
Thursday, May 23:
9:30 p. m. Sightseeing tour of city.
12:00 noon. Barbecue—Stone Mountain.
2:00 p. m. Business session—Atlanta Athletic Club.
8:00 p. m. Banquet-dinner dance—East Lake Country Club.

The Allied bulletin notes the following chief topics to be discussed:

"1. By the time the meeting is held the NRA situation will have crystallized and it will be timely for the exhibitors to muster their influence and strength in behalf of a fair code—or none.

"2. Hearings will have been held on the Pettengill bill and the time will be ripe for the independent exhibitors, assembled in great numbers, to dispel the smoke screens that have been laid by Hays propagandists and bare the facts in reference to block booking.

"3. The sales policies and product of the various producing companies will come up for analysis and discussion and intelligent exhibitors will gather information which will prove of the greatest value in negotiating their product requirements for next year.

"4. The exhibitors will be confronted with the serious situation that has arisen in Chicago, and which may spread, involving the action of Loew's in obtaining options on properties and threatening to build theatres as a part of a campaign to make exhibitors buy Metro pictures on onerous percentage contracts not forced on the exhibitors in that territory by any other producer.

"In Minneapolis last week the exhibitors of the Northwest unanimously resolved that if Loew's acquired or built a single theatre in pursuance of that campaign they would recommend to the convention at Atlanta a nationwide boycott of Metro pictures."

Committees were appointed late last week to have charge of the convention, which will be held at the Piedmont Hotel, instead of at the Robert Fulton, as originally announced. These committees follow:

Millard Webb, Director, Writer, Dies on the Coast

Millard Webb, 42, well known Coast director, died in Hollywood last week of an intestinal disease after an illness of nine months. He was taken ill on his return from Europe, where he had directed three pictures.

"Gentlemen of the Press," one of the first popular films about newspapermen, was one of his better known pictures. He wrote the screen play with Agatha Pratt Mye, English newspaperwoman. He also directed "The Sea Beast," starring John Barrymore; "Naughty But Nice," with Colleen Moore, and many others.

Mr. Webb was born in Clay Center, Kan., and attended the Nevada School of Mining and Engineering. He started his successful screen career in 1915 as an extra player in one of D. W. Griffith's companies.

Surviving are his wife, the former Mary Eaton of the Ziegfeld Follies; a daughter, Barbara Jane Webb, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Webb and two sisters and a brother, all of Los Angeles.

Jersey Invites Studios to Move

As the country's newspapers started to treat less spaciously the story of Hollywood's threat to move studios from Hollywood if the state legislature passed its proposed excessive taxation program, New Jersey added its bid to the producers to move to its shores.

Governor Merriam in California, appeared, however, to be losing his control over the tax proposals, as sentiment veered toward a gross transaction tax instead of the personal income, admission, sales and other so-called nuisance proposals that started the trouble.

Mayor Frank Hague, of Jersey City, Democratic leader of the state, was in Hollywood conferring with Harry Cohn, Winfield Sheehan, Irving Thalberg, Henry Herzbrun, Fred Beetson, Pat Casey and Louis B. Mayer. Another meeting was set for New York with Harry Warner, Nicholas Schenck and Adolph Zukor.

Mayor Hague is said to have told the large producers, all of whom were represented except Warner, that they could "write their own ticket." The producers engaged John Milton as their attorney and representative. Mr. Milton is a close associate of Mayor Hague, and is a former Jersey City corporation counsel.

E. A. Schiller, a vice-president of Loew's, Inc., while visiting New Orleans from New York, said: "The film industry could move out of California so quick it would make Upton Sinclair's head swim; and it will do it if his men in the legislature make it impossible by taxation for the industry to do business." He said that New York and Florida have been most prominently mentioned as possible locations for a transplanted production center.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 263 (one of special group of questions on sound).—(A) What should the projectionist do in case of loss of sound during a show? (B) A badly worn or eccentric intermittent sprocket will usually cause film damage and picture jump or weave. What is the usual effect of a similar condition with respect to the sound sprocket? (C) Why is it highly undesirable for sound from the projection room monitor to reach the auditorium, and what should be done to prevent it from doing so? (D) What new burdens has sound put on the projectionist with respect to the care and operation of equipment?

Answer to Question No. 257

Bluebook School Question No. 257 was: (A) What, in your opinion, constitutes the best projection room location from all points of view? (B) What, in your opinion, should be the limit of location of projection room above the screen, and why? (C) How would you proceed to measure the projection angle in your own case?

The following made acceptable answers: C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; D. Danielson; H. Edwards; R. J. Arntson; C. Oldham; K. Arrington; A F. Sprafke; L. Cimikoski; T. J. Wentworth; G. Thompson; T. Van Baulkenburg; H. Pitchkey and C. Mellinger; R. Geddings and L. Grant; Bill Doe; P. H. Kay; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; S. Johnson and E. Hodson; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; S. Spooner and B. H. Thaller; D. Bennett; F. Harlow and G. Harrison; D. Stellegos and G. Wayne; L M. Goss and T. Danielson; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; R. and K. Wells; H. Hughes and E. Mantol; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; T. H. Bernard and C. Holly; R. G. Crews and T. T. Davidson; S. C. Hollenbeck and R. B. Maxwell; B. L. Thomas; S. L. Parker; B. R. Danielson; F. L. Savlor and G. N. Guidotti; H. B. Singleton; B. N. Somers; T. Turk; A. Richardson, N. L. Haynes and D. T. Bennett; T. N. Rogers and G. B. Randall; F. T. James; N. K. Hendries and B. L. Jackson; G. B. Lantree and R. Davis; H. H. Wylie; M. L. Daniels; D. L. Sinklow; D. L. Hubbard, J. R. Sanborne, H. Munier and T. L. Frazier; P. L. Nathan.

I have selected the reply of G. E. Doe to Section A. He says, "I believe this is a question to which no fixed answer can reasonably be made. Too much depends upon the general plan of the theatre. According to my view, the best location is one that will: (1) Provide a minimum of projection angle consistent with no otherwise seriously objectionable features, the angle, under no conditions, to exceed 15 degrees from horizontal. (2) Such position as will keep the projection distance within limits that will not require the use of projection lenses of less than five-inch E.F., or more than seven-inch E.F. (I would say not less than 4.5-inch E.F., minimum, as very satisfactory results may be had with 4.5 lenses.—F. H. R.) (3) A location that will not displace high price seats, interfere with audience view, or necessitate unreasonably high cost in installing, fireproofing and ventilating the room.

"In general, this usually means back of the rear auditorium wall, above the balcony, if any, but as low down as conditions will permit. Too often the room is placed high up without the slightest necessity for so doing. The main floor, while theoretically best, usually really is not, for several reasons. Such locations have been very largely abandoned. Above a second balbony, or any location that causes in excess of a 15-degree projection angle, is bad. In many cases it is carried to a degree that is outrageous. Very often the rear of the first balcony offers, all things considered, the best location."

(B) I believe Danielson gives us a short, comprehensive answer. He says, "This would be governed by the projection distance, since, other things being equal, the longer the projection distance, the less the angle of projection, which in no case should be more than enough to increase (through distortion) the height of the screen image by more than five per cent."

PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

(C) There were some rather astonishing answers to this one. The matter is not very complicated. Obtain a board, say, 4 to 5 feet long, and a spirit level. Test the level by reversing ends to see if it registers the same both ways. Locate the board in position beside the lamphouse and mechanism and level it exactly. Now, by any convenient means, determine height of center of light source and center of front end of projection lens above the top of the board.

Lay all this out on paper, or on a table top, the latter by means of threads stretched on pins thrust into the table top. Keeping the relation of the two lines unchanged as to angle, raise the board-top or "horizontal" line until it joins the angle line, whereupon you may determine the angle of the two lines either by calculation or by means of a protractor, which latter may be obtained for a few cents from any dealer in artists' supplies, or from almost any good stationery or department store. To use the protractor, just lay the center mark on its flat side, and the "90" figure on the scale on the horizontal line, the flat side center mark exactly where the two lines join.

EASTERN SMPE SECTION MEETS

The East Coast Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers played to an overflowing house at its last meeting, when E. I. Sponable of the Fox organization read an illustrated paper in one of the large screening rooms at the Fox main office building in New York City. His subject was the gradual improvement in sound from the earliest days until the present. Certainly he dealt with the matter in masterly style. We were privileged to examine some of the very early equipments, among them one of the first practical sound cameras. Also, a very large number of slides were shown, in which early equipment details and processes were illustrated, and to top it all off several genuine old-time film recordings of sound were reproduced.

LET 'EM HAVE IT

Reliance

As the production cycle based upon the exploits of Department of Justice men becomes a picture entertainment reality, intense efforts are being made to insure that each is absolutely different than the other. In this feature, all that is theatrically commercial in portraying the adventures, hazards, sacrifice and heroism of the operatives is preserved, while the substantiating dramatic and romantic story is one fully taking advantage of all acknowledged entertainment essentials.

Authenticity is assured in all phases reflecting the straight functions of the D. J. men through the technical direction of Don Wilke, who, together with his father, was connected with the Department for many years. The original story is by Joseph Moncure March and Elmer Harris, with added dialogue by Al Boasberg. Direction is by Sam Wood, whose latest credit is "The Cat's Paw."

There being much topically based exploitation opportunity in the story of the men who dedicate their lives to the service of the country in the warfare on crime, the lengthy cast also contains many names which in themselves are fully able to whet patrons' appetites. In the production, Richard Arlen is the prototype of all heroic G men as Bruce Cabot is the composite headline criminal. Romantic love interest centers about Arlen and Virginia Bruce, whose brother, Eric Linden, a rookie operative, sacrifices his life to round up the public enemies. Various characters, who step out of recent headlines as defenders, friends and enemies of the law, include Alice Brady, Harvey Stephens, Joyce Cmpton, Gordon Jones, J. Farrell MacDonald, Bodil Rosing, R. E. O'Connor, Hale Hamilton, Dorothy Appleby, Matthew Betz, Paul Fix, Matty Fain, Christian Rub, Wesley Barry, Clarence Wilson, Sidney Brace and nearly a score of others.

As Edward Small, who made "Count of Monte Cristo," is also the producer of the picture, there is an added guarantee of the production's exploitation and entertainment quality.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON

Fox

This is a gay, romantic, action-packed story of an Argentine gaucho (cowboy) who has a way with women that is the envy of all men. It returns Warner Baxter to the atmospheric "Cisco Kid" character in which he won high popularity. A singing, dancing devil-may-care pampas buckaroo, he falls in love with an angel who dropped from the skies via an airplane crash, to follow her to Buenos Aires and against a colorful background of exciting adventure and conflicting emotions win her heart.

The story is an original by Gordon Morris, brother of the actor Chester. Screen play and adaptation are by Ernest Pascal and Bradley King. Direction is by James Tinling. Song numbers were composed by Lew Pollack, Paul Webster and Walter Samuels. Baxter and Ketti Gallian each sing one; the third is a riding song of the gauchos. Pollack is remembered for his "Diane" of "Seventh Heaven" and he and Webster wrote "Two Cigarettes in the Dark."

Ketti Gallian, who made her screen debut in "Marie Galante," shares the lead with Baxter. In a specialty number Titi Guizar, noted broadcast favorite, makes his first screen appearance. Veloz and Yolanda, famous stage and night club dancers, will introduce the Cobra Tango in the Buenos Aires cafe scenes where Rita Cansino, another well known dancer, will be seen in a sensational number.

As the production vividly pictures the novel and alluring color of its locale, equally thrilling insight is given of the romantic and adventurous gaucho life.

There is definite showmanship value to the subject matter, and the supporting personalities, in addition to those mentioned, also have commercial merit. To be seen among the players are John Miljan, J. Carrol Naish, Jack La Rue.

FROM READERS

ON PROGRAM OF PARENTS-TEACHERS

Motion Picture Herald's presentation (in the issue of March 30th) of the announced program of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers in connection with the Pettengill bill, now before Congress, continues to prompt expressions from individuals directly within the industry and those indirectly connected with it.

I see no reason why the public should be so interested in the motion picture business. However, I believe there is no immediate danger of churches, schools or other organizations becoming customers, on account of financial conditions. Our churches here are in no position to go into the motion picture business, and I believe you will find the same conditions existing in all communities.

No church, school, organization could afford to buy films at their present prices, and none of the producers are going to reduce their prices, or give special concessions to these people.—Mrs. David Ross, President, National Indorsers of Photoplays, 437 East 38th Street, Indianapolis, Ind.

"GOVERNMENT HASN'T GONE NUTS YET"

I just cannot get excited about her (Mrs. A. Raymond Klock's) statement, because I don't believe the Government has gone nuts yet.

Of course churches, charity hospitals and all non-tax and volunteer labor, plus prison labor, could compete with theatre investments, banks, railroads or anything else in the way of taxpaying business, but so far the Government has failed to give any of these institutions a death grip upon business, and I am sure in this case it will get the usual treatment.—E. V. Richards, Saenger Theatres, Inc., Tudor Theatre Building, New Orleans, La.

NO MORE LADIES

MGM

Cast names dictate the practical showmanship which most likely will be generally adapted in selling this production. The feature is Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery and Franchot Tone in what, contrary to natural expectations, is an unsophisticated romance drama with comedy. As this trio is supported by Charlie Ruggles, Edna May Oliver, Reginald Denny and Gail Patrick, the locales being Park Avenue, glamorous New York night clubs, swanky Long Island country homes and clubs and Palm Beach hotels and resorts, it's the story of a modern girl who, to forget her past, marries a lovable rascal who is equally anxious to be rid of the menace of any pretty face. Then to the tune of many surprising situations the playboy falls back into his old ways. His wife, loving him, does likewise and in the end outwits him in sequences full of comedy.

Based on a stage play by A. E. Thomas, the feature is being produced by Irving Thalberg. It was adapted to the screen by Rachel Crothers, Donald Ogden Stewart and Horace Jackson and directed by Edward H. Griffith. Patrons know what to expect of Miss Crawford and Montgomery when their work is recalled in such pictures as "Our Blushing Brides," "Letty Lynton" and "Forsaking All Others." The writing and directing credits further emphasize this quality when it is remembered that they were associated with such entertainment as "Let Us Be Gay," "Holiday," "When Ladies Meet," "Animal Kingdom," "Dinner at Eight" and "Barretts of Wimpole Street."

The title being significant of the breezy modern story trend and the cast names a dominant commercial factor, production backgrounds and costumings being of the expected class, showmanship which readapts all that has been used in connection with similar pictures featuring the same lead personalities should be plenty efficient in arousing public interest.

KEEPER OF THE BEES

Monogram

With several alterations promising to add to its human interest dramatic value, this production is a modernized adaptation of one of Jean Stratton Porter's best known books. "Girl of the Limberlost" and "Laddie" already having revived an interest in the Porter novels and their entertainment values, story content of this is potentially promising of a brand of exploitation that should accentuate the pulling power of the author's name.

The screen play is by Adele Buffington, who not only is credited with many successful originals and adaptations but worked with Mrs. Porter prior to her death and consequently has a keener understanding of what the author was trying to do than one who did not enjoy the association. Christy Cabanne is directing.

Essentially the story is a whimsical drama. It deals with a war shattered man who, believing that he is living on borrowed time, comes to a little idyllic seaside village. There he becomes associated with a kindly old character, the Bee Master, and his child protege, Little Scout, through whose kindness he finds a new will to live. Romance, that takes a pecularly modern twist, is inserted via the medium of Molly, whom the man marries for a reason he only vaguely can understand. The human interest of the theme is made more potent when the women who bears his name dies, only to have the girl who caused him to pause at the village return to marry him.

The cast has Neil Hamilton and Betty Furness in the lead roles, with the veteran actor Hobart Bosworth as the Bee Master and Edith Fellows as Little Scout. Emma Dunn, now in "White's Scandals," is Aunt Margaret and Helen Jerome Eddy will be seen as Shorty.

THE FLAME WITHIN

MGM

This is a story of dynamic love conflict. The significance readily read into the title graphically indicates the intensity with which it burns. Essentially a seriously toned and sophisticated problem theme, it is also human to such an extent that there is potentially an equal appeal for both class and mass patronage.

A word as to author, director and player credits as well as the gist of the story content should establish the character of showmanship necessary to sell it. Story and direction are by Edmund Goulding, who made "Rip Tide." The main action centers about five principals. These are Ann Harding; Herbert Marshall, recently in "The Painted Veil" and "The Good Fairy"; Maureen O'Sullivan, last seen in "Copperfield" and "West Point of the Air"; Louis Hayward, a newcomer who seems to have the personality and talents of which future screen stars are made, and Henry Stephenson. Others in the cast are Margaret Seddon, George Hassell, Eily Malyon and Claudelle Kaye.

Modernly premised, the theme concentrates on a dramatic exposition of the most elemental romantic emotions. Ann Harding is a doctor devoting her life to psychiatry. Doctors Marshall, who loves her deeply, and Stephenson bring to her Miss O'Sullivan, a woman who attempted suicide as the result of the continual indiscretion of her sweetheart (Hayward). Renovating him, Miss Harding falls in love with him. Nevertheless he marries Miss O'Sullivan, while Marshall patiently waits and hopes. A year passes and the stage is set for the dramatic climax when Hayward, realizing that his love for Miss Harding is greater, would get a divorce, only to have Marshall in a suspense-packed situation claim Miss Harding as his and thus assure the happiness of all four.

The title being alluring and the quality of the story often having proved its commercial value, exploitation that takes full advantage of the values of both, in combination with the worth of the cast, should be applied.

COLLEGE SCANDAL

Paramount

Murder, mystery and comedy on a college campus is the stuff of which this production is being made. Athletics being ignored completely, other than for atmospheric purposes, it's a new kind of material for a familiar setting. Other forms of student activity are brought in, the chief feature contrasting the story's principal dramatic motivation being the presentation of an amateur musical show.

The story is an original by Beulah Marie Dix and Bertram Milhauser. The screen play is the work of a triumvirate consisting of Marguerite Roberts, Charles Brackett and Frank Partos. Direction is by Elliott Nugent, who made "She Loves Me Not," also a college background story. The picture is being produced by Albert Lewis, who handled "The Gilded Lily." Music and lyrics featured in the student show are by Sam Coslow.

The cast presented is composed of both familiar screen names and a batch of less known juvenile players. Arline Judge has the lead role, cast as the prying reporter of the college paper whose butting into things in which she has no business not only provides much of the straight comedy but also enables her to solve the mystery of the several murders. Romantic interest is carried by Kent Taylor and Wendy Barrie, a newcomer from the British stage now appearing in "It's a Small World." Others in the cast, a policeman, students and professors and college attendants, are William Frawley, Benny Baker, William Benedict, Douglas Blackley, Edward Nugent, Johnny Downs, Joyce Compton, William Stack, Mary Nash, Helena Evans, Edith Arnold, Samuel Hinds and Mary Ellen Brown.

Unlike the ordinary college story, this is highly dramatic; at the same time it preserves those elements of student life which patrons have come to look upon as a worthwhile entertainment feature. Most effective showmanship seems to be wrapped up in the dramatic story itself, but with much available in atmospheric background and cast values.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER

Warner

The stuff of which this airy, gay, novel musical comedy romance is being made is of the character readily lending itself to smash showmanship. A lively intriguing story full of surprising situations and developments is told against the backgrounds of the streets of New York, the canals of Venice and a radio broadcasting station. Essentially a comedy, it tells a love story to music and lyrics by Al Dubin and Harry Warren, a pair who have contributed much to many successful Warner musical pictures. It is being directed by Lloyd Bacon, recent maker of "Here Comes the Navy" and "Devil Dogs of the Air." His experience with "Wonderbar" is indicative of what he can do with musicals.

The story concerns a taxi driver who, given the opportunity of a radio audition, misses his date, then goes to Venice where as a gondolier on the Grand Canal he's unwittingly rediscovered by the sponsors of a cheese program. As the cab cruising gondolier of the program he wins himself fame and riches and of course the girl.

Dick Powell is starred. Supplementing the box office power of his name is a cast of personalities and specialty folk all of whom are favorably known. Included are Joan Blondell, now in "Traveling Saleslady," Adolphe Menjou, featured in the current "Gold Diggers of 1935," Louise Fazenda, William Gargan, appearing in "Black Fury," Grant Mitchell, Hobart Cavanaugh, George Barbier, Joseph Sauers, Rafael Storm and James Burke. In specialty numbers Ted Fio Rito and his band will be seen, accompanying Powell's singing over the air. The Four Mills Brothers are down for a number of their own, as is Judy Canova of the noted Canova family.

STRANDED

Warner

Kay Francis and George Brent, recently seen in "Living on Velvet" and "The Goose and the Gander," again are teamed in the leading roles, in a romantic love story which, in developing strong drama, reaches a climax strong with tense suspense in a struggle against death and destruction. The principal locales are a metropolitan railway station and a bridge construction job, two spots that should serve as effective backgrounds for the unusual romance, contrasting comedy, intrigue, dramatic action and thrill atmosphere.

The yarn is an original by Frank Wead, whose most recent stories are "West Point of the Air" and "Murder in the Fleet," and Ferdinand Rehyer. The screen play is by Delmer Daves, a collaborator on "Dames" and "Flirtation Walk." Frank Borzage, who handled Miss Francis and Brent in "Living on Velvet," is the director.

In the story, much that is of showmanship interest surrounds the association of Miss Francis, appearing as a Travelers' Aid Society clerk in the station, and Brent, a construction engineer. Their conflict leads to mutual love, complicated by romantic inclinations of Patricia Ellis and Gavin Gordon. Action develops when a labor racketeer, Barton MacLane, remembered for his similar role in "Black Fury," tries to hamper the bridge building job, an act that brings Miss Francis into a none too dignified situation, but finally smooths the way for warm and joyous romance.

Likewise, the stars and supporting cast are of acknowledged exploitation value. Others prominent in the large cast are Donald Woods, Robert Barrat, Mary Forbes, Frankie Darro, Mae Busch, Shirley Grey, Henry O'Neill, Joseph Crehan and Pat Moriarty.

BLACK SHEEP

Fox

Neither a bucolic rural romance nor a melodrama of an errant son as the title might first suggest, "Black Sheep" is a drama of tangled lives, hearts and romance, with all its action taking place aboard an ocean liner making a westward Atlantic crossing. Exciting adventure vies with unique love interest.

The story is an original by Alan Dwan, who also is directing, the screen play by Allen Rivkin. Lyrics for the one song featured are by Sidney Claire, who wrote "On the Good Ship Lollypop." The music is by Oscar Levant.

As the story unfolds it brings together an odd lot of characters in just as odd situations. First there's an international gambler, beating his way homeward because the cards and horses didn't behave the way he anticipated. The role is played by Edmund Lowe, last seen in "Great Hotel Murder" and "Mr. Dynamite." Then there is a woman, Claire Trevor, who despite critics' opinion, thinks she's an actress. Nevertheless she's walking home from her first European trip. Tom Brown, wastrel scion of Backbay Bostonians, becomes involved with kleptomaniac Adrienne Ames in an attempt to smuggle jewels through customs. Eugene Pallette and Jed Prouty are a pair of gamblers who take particular delight in fleecing Brown. Ford Sterling, veteran of the old Keystone Cop days, is a detective concentrating on watching Lowe. Others are Herbert Mundin, Robert Elliott, Mildred Harris Chaplin and Billy Bevan.

While the affair which develops between Lowe and Miss Trevor is the motivating influence, the accompanying drama which reveals Brown as his son, the contrasting comedy and the thrill of unusual adventure and surprise round out a formula that should not only be productive of interesting entertainment but also of a brand of showmanship to stir up more than ordinary interest in the players and story content.

To Direct Industrial Films

Hobart Brownell of Metropolitan Industrial Pictures, Hollywood, has been loaned to Wilding Picture Productions of Detroit to direct two dramatized industrial productions. One is a short subject for Dodge Brothers and the other is a feature length production for Firestone.

DEMANDS OF YOUNGER MEMBERS OF EQUITY CHALLENGE LEADERS

Playing of Benefits Without Permission Brings Test; Pay for Rehearsal Periods an Issue; Reorganization Threatened

Insurgents Insist on Protection in Radio; Member Drive Begun Among Broadcasters; Dissension Over Sunday Shows

Rumblings within the ranks of Actors' Equity Association—which for more than 20 years has represented the legitimate stage actor—threaten reorganization of the administrative system, following demands of an increasingly large number of radical younger members.

Not since the dark days of 1930, when Equity's attempt to saddle its closed shop policy upon Hollywood's creative talent caused wholesale resignations, has an Equity administration been faced with such serious problems. Not since the actors' strike of 1919 has there been such unrest within Equity's own ranks.

Among the issues at stake, the acting membership considers the following the most important:

1. The playing of benefits by members without express authorization of Equity.

2. The question of pay for rehearsal periods.

3. Membership drive in the radio broadcasting field.

4. Dissension over the Sunday show situation.

The first real test of Equity and the legitimate theatre Code Authority, on benefits that do not contribute 15 per cent of proceeds to actors' charities, came to a head recently when Eddie Cantor, of the Equity Council, and ten other Equity members were brought up on charges of playing an unauthorized benefit at a Manhattan theatre the week previous. These members face either a fine of $100 or suspension from Equity. In addition to Mr. Cantor, Equity members involved are Bert Lahr, J. C. Flippen, Earl Oxford, Dixie Dunbar, Sammy White, Jimmy Savo, Jimmy Durante, Jack Dempsey, Estelle Taylor and Patsy Flick.

Actors Protest

The benefit was for a home for orphans and the aged. A member of the legitimate Code Authority informed the committee that 15 per cent of the gross would have to go to the Actors Fund Repository for distribution to actors' charities. The committee members declined to cooperate, declaring they were using only night club bands and floor shows and therefore were not obligated to aid indigent actors. However, Bert Lahr, Earl Oxford and Dixie Dunbar are members of the cast of "Life Begins at 8:40," definitely a legitimate revue, and Equity proceeded to take action. Announcement of the final decisions of Equity and the Code Authority was awaited.

Many of Equity's members resent the ruling which, it is claimed, was made necessary by curtailment of funds in the Actors' Fund. The actors' protest is not at the request to contribute, but at the restriction in making appearances which they believe will enhance their publicity value.

Pay for Rehearsals Demanded

The second of Equity's major problems, that of pay for rehearsal periods, took up most of a regular Council meeting recently, but the ruling body decided not to press the issue too rapidly. There is no basic agreement between Equity and New York producers covering salaries during rehearsals and some thought the association might be able to adopt rules which would force producers to pay for rehearsals. The Council is planning to test the temper of the managers.

One plan already advanced by the actors is that players shall receive $25 a week after the first week of rehearsal period—the first week being the probationary time during which the producer may dismiss the player without salary claim, or the actor may quit without liability. This sum would be paid to players whose engagements pay less than $150 weekly.

Many actors are in favor of the plan universally practiced in London's West End, under which all players with salaries of less than £10 ($50) weekly receive the equivalent of $2.50 for each day of rehearsal, from the first week. This plan would not provide rehearsal pay for actors receiving more than $50 a week.

Younger members' violent criticism of the organization's inactivity in the broadcasting field and in the matter of demanding a closed shop in the radio industry, has goaded the executive body into a membership drive among the broadcasters. A special committee has been appointed and a budget set.

Equity's failure to get action in Washington on talent conditions in radio, and the delay of the Radio Code Authority on recommendations made by Equity more than a year ago, have become an increasingly sore sport.

Want Equity Protection

The Equity insurgents declare that the association has relinquished its projected jurisdiction in Hollywood to the Screen Actors' Guild —which has only a nominal Equity affiliation —that it has virtually dropped its jurisdiction in the vaudeville field and that, unless immediate action is taken, it will stand little chance in the radio field.

These Equity members take the stand that if they are in a position to accept broadcasting engagements they must have Equity protection against any sharp practices by sponsors, agencies and managers.

The Sunday show issue long has been a point of much dissatisfaction between member groups and the association's leaders. The majority membership appear willing to work on Sundays if the opportunity is afforded. On the other hand, actors in the higher brackets and the administration are definitely unfavorable to Sunday shows. Those members for whom jobs are scarce have taken the stand that regardless of Equity rules they will work on Sundays if so ordered by managers.

The new laws signed by Governor Lehman carry a definite stipulation that actors must have one day each week free from work. Because of this it was considered highly probable in Equity circles that Monday night performances may be dropped. This already had been tried to advantage by Dwight Deere Wiman with "The Distaff Side." Although he had not been able to show on Sundays, he had run an extra matinee each week.

Almost every type of amusement except the legitimate stage has been runing on Sundays, and when benefits are held for legitimate attractions on Sunday nights, grosses have jumped. The managers feel that Sunday shows will afford more persons an opportunity to attend.

Adding further to the Equity problem is a movement launched the past month to take the theatre out of Broadway and, resultantly, Equity control. An organization known as Stage Unity of America has been formed to revive the "road," but in a different way than ever before. Fundamentally the object appears to be to effect a complete breakaway from Broadway and its traditions. Plays will not be aimed at Broadway production nor will the Unity sponsors produce in New York.

10-City Circuit Proposed

Plans call for a 10-city circuit. Permanent companies would perform new plays and occasional revivals. Unity, which has offices at 112 East 19th street, New York, will not start production until the organization is assured of audiences. If results of the present campaign warrant, 10 companies will be in readiness for the first circuit early this summer, with actual playing to commence in the autumn.

Unity would offer players a minimum 10-week season at regular Broadway salaries. The organization also is looking for new plays. Authors would receive royalties for at least 10 weeks the first season, and their work would remain permanently in the companies' repertoires.

According to R. Paulding Steele, head of Unity, the movement has been formulating quietly for the past two years. The organization, he explained, will work through chapters in each city of the circuits. Chapters in at least six Eastern situations are to be launched at once.

Indiana Company Plans to Acquire Theatres in State

The Temple Court Theatre Company has been organized at Washington, Ind., for the acquisition of theatres in southern Indiana. The company is now erecting a house at Washington, which will seat 450. Harry M. Palmer is general manager, and Walter Hatfield is associated with him. Mr. Palmer is a pioneer theatre man of Indiana, having operated a theatre in 1906. For the past several years he has been associated with Publix Theatres and McCarrell Amusement Enterprises.

CYCLES, like supervisors, seem to be something that this business can't seem to get along with or without. Born in the welter of what production is most earnestly striving to do, the first of a cycle seeks to provide originality, diversity and departure from formula in screen entertainment. Out of it comes a daring, unorthodox theme which grips popular fancy. Immediately follows a grand rush to climb aboard the bandwagon. Executive, writer, director and actor brains, supposed to be devoted to the cause of originality and variety, go into all sorts of contortions striving not for something different, but to put a new and novel twist on the familiar premise. Then the public, satiated, stays away.

Showmen may expect follow-ups on trail-blazing films like "Black Fury," "Les Miserables," "Naughty Marietta," "Roberta," "G-Men," and if "Dante's Inferno" clicks, Hell itself may turn loose again, on the screen.

The brothers Warner, first on the screen with the gangster cycle, are again first with the anti-gangster films, "G-Men" glorifying federal agents in their implacable war on crime.

Then it occurred to one scribe that, in addition to making the G-man an inspiring figure and painting the gangster as getting his just deserts, the film showing the criminal as cringing and yellow when bereft of political connections, gang and gun, still afforded a psychological study.

Following "G-Men," the federals will have their innings in Reliance's "Let 'Em Have It," Paramount's "Men Without Names," Select's "People's Enemy," MGM's "Public Hero No. 1," and another from Warner entitled "Dr. Socrates."

Independent producers also are planning dramas around the federal agents.

Eastman Kodak Exploitation

After seeing MGM's "Little People," an animal short, Eastman Kodak decided to embark on an exploitation campaign designed to inspire Young America to "shoot" animals with cameras. The picture tells of an old woodsman who stalks small game with lens and film instead of a rifle. Tieups are to be effected by Eastman when the picture is released, parents and teachers groups to play a large part. "Little People," which Harry Rapf produced, and "Sequoia," also produced by MGM, were the mainsprings of the Eastman idea.

Stage Seeks Film Talent

Hollywood has reached out many times to New York for players; now a New York stage producer is in Hollywood for the avowed purpose of signing casts.

Al Woods is here in hopes of finding two big film stars and unknown talent to take care of his two fall productions, "Abide With Me" and "The Night of January 16."

Hollywood now is the mecca for talent, in his opinion, though New York still is the showroom. He strongly advocates discontinuance of personal appearances, holding that a star is cheapened by low admission price and short spiels. In his opinion, producers could clean up almost as much as they do in pictures by routing stars through key cities in good new plays for eight or ten week engagements once a year.

Al Woods launched on their stage careers Claudette Colbert, Ann Harding, Charles Ruggles, Glenda Farrell, Joan Blondell and many others.

News Flashes

Nicholas Schenck, it is said, wants David O. Selznick to sign a new ticket at MGM, but Mr. Selznick will wait until his pictures are finished before deciding. The producer has independent production plans in the offing. . . . Proving that the Independent Theatre Owners' stand on the Los Angeles zoning schedule postponement is not merely a brief flareup, the organization has sent Attorney Frank S. Hutton to Washington to protest Fox West Coast's delay to the Department of Justice. . . . Attorney M. Peirson Hall will file an answer in behalf of the local grievance board in the Bank Nights case involving the Oxnard Theatres and San Gabriel Theatres. Mr. Hall has received his instructions from Attorney General Homer Cummings. . . . Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City presented his studio removal proposition to all the major producers here, with more meetings coming soon. The producers dispatched engineers East and engaged Attorney John Milton in Jersey City to receive the engineers' reports.

Five Pictures Start

Usually a dull week in the exhibition end of the business, Holy Week witnessed a Hollywood production quietude seldom experienced. But five new features were put into work. Only four were completed.

Two pictures started at Columbia. With Leo Blugakov directing, "After the Dance," a romantic drama, went before the cameras. It has Nancy Carroll and George Murphy in the leading roles and Victor Kilian, Robert Middlemass, Wyrley Burch, Thelma Todd, Jack LaRue and Harris Barris in support.

"Range War" will present Tim McCoy, Billie Seward, Jack Rockwell, Ed LeSainte, Ward Bond and Guy Usher. David Selman is directing.

Warner started "Front Page Woman," adaptation of a recent weekly magazine serial titled "Women Are Bum Newspaper Men." Bette Davis will be seen in the title role. The cast to date lists George Brent, William Gargan and Errol Flynn. Michael Curtiz is directing.

At Fox Will Rogers started "In Old Kentucky." With George Marshall the director, the cast includes Dorothy Wilson, Charles Sellon, Russell Hardie, Louise Henry, Alan Dinehart and Bill Robinson.

Last of the newly started pictures is "Accent on Youth," Paramount. Based on a stage play, the picture will feature Sylvia Sidney, Holmes Herbert, Catherine Doucet, Astrid Allwyn, Herbert Marshall, Phillip Reed and Ernest Cassart. Wesley Ruggles is directing.

One to Each of Four Studios

The four completed pictures were equally divided among four studios. Warner finished active shooting on "Stranded," topical romance drama. Kay Francis and George Brent are co-starred. Frank Borzage directed. The support includes Patricia Ellis, Donald Woods, Robert Barrat, Mary Forbes, Florence Fair, Barton MacLane, Frankie Darro, Gavin Gordon, Joseph Crehan, Mae Busch, Henry O'Neill, Zeffie Tilbury and Pat Moriarity.

"Alias Mary Dow" was finished at Universal. A drama, directed by Kurt Neuman, the feature will present Sally Eilers, Ray Milland, Henry O'Neill, Phyllis Crane, Katherine Alexander, Lola Lane Clarence Muse, Chick Chandler, Walter Miller, Charles Sellon and Jane Meredith.

Monogram completed "Keeper of the Bees," a Gene Stratton Porter story. Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness, Emma Dunn, Hobart Bosworth, Helen Jerome Eddy and Edith Fellows will be seen. Christy Cabanne directed.

Handling "The Lost City"

United Artists has closed with S. S. Krellberg to handle "The Lost City" in Central and South American countries. The film has been booked by circuits in the metropolitan area.

Merchandise Deal Closed

Columbia has closed a deal with the Mershon Manufacturing Company, jewelry firm, whereby the company will have exclusive right to use the name and figures of characters in Columbia's "Scrappy" cartoons in its manufactured children's jewelry.

Boston Trailer Film Moves

The Master Motion Picture Bureau, trailer producer of Boston, has acquired its own building, on Piedmont street. The Ambuter Film Laboratory has taken over the New England distributors of the Victor Animatophone, 16mm. portable apparatus.

To Make Advertising Films

Promotion Films, Inc., was chartered last week at Albany, N. Y., to produce and distribute a series of commercial pictures on a national and regional basis. R. M. Savini is president, J. Michelson, vice-president and treasurer, and Cecil Bernert, secretary.

Sheinmann to Attend Congress

Joseph Sheinmann, president of the 86th Street Casino Theatre, Inc., New York, and now in Germany, has been invited to attend the International Film Congress in Berlin. Mr. Sheinmann has arranged for the importation of 60 German and Hungarian features.

Agfa Ansco Loss Reduced

Agfa Ansco last week reported a net loss for 1934 of $286,106 after charges, depreciation and income taxes. This compares with a net loss for 1933 of $519,474.

Mary Jane's Pa

(First National)

Comedy Drama

This is a domestic comedy drama, with the reputations which Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon have garnered for themselves in previous pictures apparently the most potential interest creating asset. It is clean, wholesome amusement with major appeal undoubtedly to the regular every week theatregoers. In the character of its hero, a now almost legendary tramp printer, there may be opportunity for unique showmanship that will arouse more than ordinary curiosity.

Sam Preston, small town printer publisher, suddenly is bitten by the wanderlust bug of his old craft. He deserts his wife and little family. Returning years later after wanderings that have taken him around the world, he is reintroduced into the clan via daughter Mary Jane. While his wife is very busily engaged, as a newspaper publisher, in promoting the political destinies of Marvin, Sam is relegated to the status of family cook. But Sam has not been an oldtime printer for nothing. Politics being the life blood of his craft, he naturally smells something wrong and of course it is that Marvin, instead of being the people's friend, is in reality only a tool of the interests.

Completely small town in atmosphere, the comedy and drama surrounding the two principal characters is supported by a juvenile romance which features Nan Grey, a newcomer, and Tom Brown. This angle, however, is enentirely secondary to the motivating premise which, adequately publicized and with advantake taken of the Kibbee-MacMahon popularity, appears to be the most effective medium of stirring up interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros.-First National. Directed by William Keighley. Screen play by Tom Reed and Peter Milne. Based on a play by Edith Ellis. Photographed by Ernest Haller. P. C. A. Certificate No. 680. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 68 minutes. Release date, April 27, 1935. General audience classification.

G Men

(Warner)

Drama

If from a practical showmanship and commercial viewpoint the producers determined that "G Men" was to serve as a model for similarly based pictures, they have succeeded. It is alive with action, packed with thrill, full of the spirit that a thousand and one banner line newspaper stories have made vividly familiar.

"G Men" has two stories. One, first showing the reason, is the dramatic and romantic career of a G man from his rookie days to the moment in which he wipes out the re-creation of America's most notorious public enemy number one. The other is the gun-roaring picturization of years of daily headline newspaper stories, graphically detailing the Government's fight on organized crime. Down the line they come, and as fact is blended with fiction and liberal theatric license taken, the best remembered highlights are reenacted.

First is depicted the new mobster lawlessness to which repeal of prohibition gave birth; the killing of an unarmed Government operator, then Brooklyn's half million dollar bank truck robbery, followed by a digest of a score or more midwest bank robberies and the toll of life taken, the Government galvanized into action; laws passed to meet the new menace, Brick Davis joining the service and the conflict between him and his superior McCord. Follows the Kansas City Union Station massacre, dynamically portrayed in detail, and McCord and Brick moved into Chicago to avenge Farrell's slaying and to wage relentless warfare on the "Dillengers, Nelsons and Hamiltons." As all this is going on, romance and comedy contrast, between Brick and McCord's sister, Kay, is cleverly worked in.

There's the Wisconsin woods episode; barking dogs to nullify the coup, the seething gun battle and its ensuing carnage, from which the ace criminal Collins escapes. Succeeding is the Chicago apartment house incident in which Brick is almost killed as he saves McCord's life while Collins again escapes to shoot his wife, Jean, Brick's old flame, who he believes has tipped off the G men to his hide-out.

Collins kidnaps Kay in an attempt to make her a hostage to assure his escape to Canada. This builds to a breath-taking finale as wounded Brick, rushing from the hospital to the dying Jean, learns where Collins is. In one suspense-packed sequence, with Kay's life at stake, he wounds the desperate Collins, who dies in a terrific auto crash.

As the production has two stories, it is also three kinds of a picture. It's a new kind of war picture with a new kind of gangster, and it also is a dramatic romance. It combines the most potential audience appeal characteristics of all three.

In most cases all the real exploitation that "G Men" needs has already been done. Every newspaper story that has been written during the past several months anent the Goverment's war on public enemies is an ad for it.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Daring Young Man

(Fox - Robert T. Kane)

Comedy

Fun and laughter loom as the outstanding commercial and entertainment values of this picture. Its premise being to amuse, it does that in several ways even though things get pretty well mixed up. The action is fast and generally exciting from a comedy viewpoint, in situations and dialogue. The picture, which first starts out to be the comedy romance of a woman-hating newspaper man who falls for the right girl when she comes along, develops into a hokum burleque picturization of the incidents of a recent eastern prison scandal.

While there is much jail atmosphere, it is not a prison picture in the accepted meaning of the term. Rather it's a detailing of what happens to romance when duty calls and a reporter crashes jail to gather the why and wherefor lowdown for the entertaiment and edification of his newspaper readers.

Don McLane and Martha Allen are rival reporters. Long his admirer, Martha finally contrives to have Don pop the question. But at the church door comes a message from his boss ordering Don to get on the job, crack his way into Welfare Island and get all the facts on the rumored sensational goings on occuring there. Deserting the prospective bride, Don dashes to the job. Inside, the treatment being straight hokum, conditions full of hilarity are revealed—the muggs and the lugs have taken over administration of the jail and are using it and their sentence time for gay mirth and recreation.

Don gets the stories all right, but his paper doesn't. The deserted bride works a series of gags whereby all Don's scoops appear in her publication. Although the trick gets Don humorously in wrong with his own editor, it convinces him that his future is best assured with Martha bearing the title Mrs. McLane.

Presented to patrons as an all-laugh show which has no other objective other than to be ridicuously amusing, the show contains many exploitation ideas that, smartly adapted in the spirit which motivates the story, should do much to stimulate patron curiosity.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Sons of Steel

(Chesterfield)

Drama

A combination of romance, drama and action in a steel mill, this independently produced picture, while lacking an outstanding cast, nevertheless has a lively and attractive title, reasonably well borne out by the story itself, and a somewhat novel premise which may well be useful in the selling of the picture.

Charles Starrett, who has attained some popularity in more or less active roles, is in the lead, supported by Polly Ann Young and William Bakewell in particular. The rather unusual thematic idea has a weathy steel mill owner employing, in a laboring position, the ward of an old mill worker, after the boy's graduation from college, that boy being his own son, brought up by the man and his wife after the death of his mother. The boy's romance with the daughter of his guardians, and his struggle for a position in the type of work in which he is interested, form the backbone of the story. His father gave him to the poor couple in order that the boy might experience a few of the world's hard knocks. His good intentions almost end disastrously, but reconciliation and understanding have their day. There is action in a raid of striking workers on the closed mill.

The selling may well be developed about the theme and the action promised in the title. The picture in the main is well produced, and done in interesting fashion.

Starrett, ward of the old couple, and Bakewell, son of wealthy and indolent Holmes Herbert, who, with his brother, Walter Walker, jointly own the steel mill, are graduated from college together. Returning home, Bakewell loafs, Starrett hunts a job. Finally, his guardian lands him a job as an ordinary worker in the plant, his father revealing no connection, while Bakewell takes over the sales department, the business being in a bad way. Dissatisfied, Starrett is fired by his father when he tells him what he thinks of his methods of operation, and Starrett is easy prey to recalcitrants who seek to stir up trouble in the mill. Blakewell, meanwhile, in the wrong spot, makes a failure of the sales department.

When Starrett's guardian is struck down by a mill guard, he leads a raid on the mill, crashes in and rushes to his father's office. There he upbraids "the boss," who finally tells him the truth. Starrett persuades the men to call off the strike, and with an automobile design of his own, they retrieve an important contract, while Bakewell, in his mechanical department, becomes a successful manager. Miss Young, Bakewell's secretary, with whom he is in love, and Starrett go away on their honeymoon, while the two old men prepare to retire, having nothing further to do.—AARONSON, New York.

The Cowboy Millionaire

(Fox - Sol Lesser)

Comedy Romance

Something brand new in the line of "Western" entertainment is introduced in this picture. So far is the departure from formula that its presentation—and it should be a satisfactory feature for almost any kind of theatre and audience—is quite likely to be a commercial surprise. Gone are all the old theatric heroics with their breakneck riding and shoot-'em-up sensationalism as the hero shows up at the crucial moment to save the gal. In their place is a novel comedy romance, smartly contrived, told with zip and dash, preserving the best ideas of the outdoor action attractions while striking a new tack that should both please devotees of westerns and prove interesting to those who ordinarily pass up such shows.

The show has a standard beginning that gives not a hint as to how it is to develop. Bob and his pal Persimmon are a pair of prospecting miners who to ease the monotony of their lonely lives take jobs as prop cowboys at a Dude ranch. The main stunt to welcome new guests is the staging of a fake stage coach holdup. For this, Parmella Barclay, a haughty English visitor, and her aunt Henrietta fall hard. But Bob finds himself falling in love with the girl. She, after hearing from the hotel clerk that Bob is a phoney cowboy who has made a bet that he can win her, hires him for her guide with the intention of giving him a fine showing up. However, things don't go as either intended, and to hide her chagrin the girl leaves for England. Then the whole character of the picture changes. Bob follows her and as he honestly attempts to convince her that his love is real, Persimmon, back home, suddenly discovers that the mine is a bonanza. The far-off Bob prevents Persimmon from selling out, and he wins the girl in a spectacular anti-climax that is almost certain to provide a surprising thrill.

Novelty, which neither the title tone nor screen reputation of George O'Brien vaguely suggests, appears to be the most valuable selling adjunct. While there is plenty to interest and hold the attention of the essentially "western" fans, there is a lot more with which to intrigue the others. Let the customers know, without telling too much, that this is a comedy romance with all the necessary qualities to amuse and surprise them.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Stolen Harmony

(Paramount)

Drama

George Raft again appears as a dancer, but in this instance he is a saxophonist in a band and, momentarily, a gangster in addition, a combination of characterizations and situations which should open the way for attention-attracting selling. Furthermore, there appears a wide opportunity for selling the more than featured appearance of Ben Bernie, the "old maestro," and his band. That Bernie, cigar and all, has a large popular following through his radio work and stage appearances there can be no doubt.

The story has rather a novel idea, and an entertaining if somewhat fantastic development. Raft plays the gangster for a short time, but fictitiously, in an effort to apprehend a gang of dangerous criminals. Throwing a note of timeliness about the story, the amazing idea has Bernie's entire band kidnaped by a gang of hunted desperadoes and made to play for them in their forest hideout. There is romance, and comedy and music, plus a specialty number or two, and climactic action of punch-laden quality to enliven proceedings and bring the film to a smashing conclusion, quite literally.

As a young man with a jail record, who attempts to go straight, and is nearly killed in his effort to prove to those who had faith in him that they were making no mistake, Raft does a good job of his role. He is by turns the suave and polished dancer and the two-fisted gangster. Bernie offers an engaging performance in his important role.

Raft, saxophonist in a prison band, impresses the visiting Bernie, friend of the warden, who persuades Bernie to give Raft, who was jailed for "one mistake," a chance in his famous band. Raft more than makes good and the band starts a cross-country tour in a huge streamlined bus. When the partner of Grace Bradley, featured dancer, walked out, Raft gets the chance and the couple are the hit of the show, while Miss Bradley and Raft develop more than a little interest in each other. Comedy is supplied in the situation which finds a big money man from the west, turned down by one of the show's singers, following the bus across country in a dilapidated cab.

In Chicago, Raft is approached by an old prison mate, who wants Raft's help in robbing the bus safe. Raft refuses. When the safe is robbed, Raft recovers the money, but is caught by the police. Bernie sees to his release, but doubts him. Miss Bradley is hurt and cannot understand when Raft insists he will leave the bus at the next stop. They are captured by a gang, taken to their hideout and made to play. One of them recognizes Raft, who has been using an assumed name, and Raft becomes one of them, to all appearances. When the police get too active in pursuit of the missing bus, the gang brazen their way out, with Bernie's gun-point cooperation, and steal an automobile. Raft goes with them, races through the next city, and deliberately smashes the car in front of a police station, the police taking care of the gang, Raft becoming a hero, returning to the band, and to Miss Bradley.

Active and entertaining material, it should be suitable for playing any time in the week.—AARONSON, New York.

The Return of Chandu

(Principal)

Melodrama

This is material for the youngsters, and such of the older generation who may extract some degree of entertainment from the melodramatic adventures of the great Chandu, magican of magicians, in his untiring and ever successful fight against the evil forces of black magic. They aim at the capture for human sacrifice of the beautiful Egyptian princess protected by the all-powerful Chandu, who, in private life and polite Beverly Hills, Cal., society, is the charming Dr. Chandler.

This feature is complete in itself, but made up from the serial of the same title. It is taken from the wellknown radio melodrama.

Bela Lugosi is Chandu (Chandler), while Maria Alba is the princess who is protected, and loved by Chandu. The picture, melodrama all the way, is a series of kidnappings, rescues and battles between Chandu and the black magicians, with Miss Alba as the foil. Involved are Clara Kimball Young, as Chandu's sister, and her son and daughter, Dean Benton and Phyllis Ludwig, respectively.

The princess arrives in the United States for a visit to Chandu's sister, and at a party feels the presence of danger, in the person of Lucien Prival, leader of the forces of evil. Just as she is about to drink poisoned liquor, Chandu, who escaped capture merely by making himself invisible, arrives to frustrate the plot. She is kidnapped, again Chandu rescues her, his car moving without guidance to the house where she is held captive. They board a yacht for a South Seas cruise, another attempt is made to get Miss Alba, but again Chandu comes to the rescue in the nick of time at night on the ocean. When the yacht puts in at a port for repairs, both Miss Alba and Miss Young are captured, and the sacrifice is about to be made on the spot, with both women as the victims, when the unbeatable Chandu arrives, engages in a wild battle with Prival, who lands in his own sacrificial fire, while Miss Alba and Chandu are finally free of the evil ones.

There is plenty of suspense, and melodramatics and action, for the youngsters, at any rate. The weekend is the time to play it.—AARONSON, New York.

The Phantom Fiend

(Olympic Pictures)

Murder Mystery

An arch fiend, abroad in London, whose pleasant pastime it is to come upon women, usually young, in dark places at night, and slit their throats, is the not too gentle theme of this adaptation of the novel, "The Lodger," by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes. The picture, produced in England by Julius Hagen's Olympic Pictures, is effectively produced, with all the suggestion of gruesomeness and little or none of the actuality.

The film has a most unexpected conclusion. What had appeared to be a theme devoted to "catching the criminal" suddenly becomes one of solving a mystery of identity. All of which has its effect on the romantic element, a happy effect in that the suspect is cleared.

Ivor Novello, who should be familiar to American screen audiences, plays a rather difficult leading role to fair satisfaction. The others are alike unknown in the theatres of this country. While the dialogue is spoken with the unmistakable "King's English," there appears to be sufficient action mystery and suspense to compensate.

It would be well, perhaps, to permit the title and its implication of mystery and murder and the like to carry the film's weight, at the same time making whatever use of the name of Novello suggests itself, depending on how well known he may be in the particular community.

The phantom fiend, whose foul deeds have aroused London and made a newspaper holiday, is described by a visiting analyst as a foreigner, musically talented, who escapes from a Continental insane asylum. A music-loving foreigner, Novello, engages a room at a small rooming house, whose owners have a daughter, Elizabeth Allan, a telephone operator. Her fiance, a newspaper reporter, is assigned to the case. Miss Allan is more and more attracted to the retiring stranger, who plays so well. The atrocities pile up. Moments of amusing comedy, handled for the most part by the girl's imbibing father, are interspersed.

Finally, as the stranger and the girl fall completely in love with one another, suspicion dawns on the father. He gives his information to the reporter and Novello is arrested. He escapes, handcuffed, manages to call Miss Allan and have her meet him at a point in the park. Novello arrives in time to kill the phantom fiend. He's the brother of Novello, closely resembling him and sought by him throughout London. The solution clears the way for Novello's romance with Miss Allan.—AARONSON, New York.

The Casino Murder Case

(MGM)

Murder Mystery

One of the more recent delvings into criminality on the part of the notable Philo Vance, astute and polished gentleman criminologist, here comes to the screen as moderately entertaining screen fare. Paul Lukas, of recognized ability, has been cast as Vance and the devotees of the mysteries of Willard Huntington Wright, otherwise known as S. S. Van Dine, the creator of the character Vance, here will find their suave and polished mental giant speaking with a definitely foreign accent. Mr. Lukas works hard to get the most out of his role.

In support are such good names as Alison Skipworth, Donald Cook, Arthur Byron, Ted Healy, Louise Fazenda and Purnell Pratt. There has been created a full quota of mystery, and suspense, action and atmosphere, but the Sergeant Heath of Healy strives too hard to supply the picture's comedy relief. One murder, two near murders and a suicide are the motivating forces, and Vance displays, although a bit obscurely, his genius for getting behind fact and clues to the root of the evil, with his customary nonchalance and vigor. This time, too, Vance combines his sleuthing with a measure of romance, and is equally successful in both.

The most effective selling procedure seems to lie in emphasizing the mystery, the origin of the picture—the Van Dine story of the same title, which appeared in serial as well as book form—with references to previous films of the same series.

As usual, the suspects are numerous and the killer is the person rather least under suspicion, which is all quite according to Hoyle. When Vance receives a message that Cook, weak-willed son of Alison Skipworth, who dominates her wealthy family, is to be in danger at the casino of his uncle, Byron, things begin to happen. They continue to happen until the end of the film, though occasionally impeded by too obvious attempts to inject sequences of smart humor and sophistication.

Cook's showgirl wife is found dead, and Markham (Pratt) and Healy set to work. Cook is poisoned at the casino, but recovers. His wife is murdered. The chain of "signposts," as described by Vance, points too readily to Byron, so Vance decides that is the wrong road. A new chemical water composition, heavy water, is involved, and Byron's secret plant for its manufacture is one of the stopping places along the Vance road. Then Rosalind Russell, Miss Skipworth's secretary, and the girl to whom Vance finds himself more strongly drawn as the case progresses, is poisoned, but slightly, and finally Miss Skipworth is found dead, an apparent suicide, with a note confessing to the murder of Cook's wife. Vance is unconvinced, despite the fact that the handwriting is genuine.

His conclusions are proved accurate, when Cook invites him and Miss Russell to the office of the now closed casino, admits he was guilty of the death of his wife, and that his own poisoning was a blind, and shoots Vance, or shoots at Vance, since that gentleman has seen to it that Cook's gun is loaded for him—with blanks. The waiting police finish Cook neatly.

It is satisfactory mystery fare.—AARONSON, New York.

Strauss' Great Waltz

(Tom Arnold)

Romance with Music

Produced in England by Tom Arnold, and directed by Alfred Hitchcock, this is yet another version of the now cinematically old story of Johann Strauss, the great Austrian composer, his efforts to belittle, through jealousy, the ambition of his young son, and the eventual public acclaim which comes to the younger Strauss. Despite a capable cast, the production somehow misses fire, giving evidence of rather ineffectual production.

The music is not quite the inspiriting, ever present backbone of the picture which might be expected. The only number which has a strong and important place in the story is "The Beautiful Blue Danube," one of the most famous of all waltzes, and the composition which firmly established the fame of the younger Strauss, whose friends had to resort to trickery in order to introduce the song to the public. Young Strauss' difficulty is not only paternal, but even more important, to him, of a romantic nature. His sweetheart fears she will lose him if he turns finally to music, and away from her father's confectionery shop, and jealousy enters there, too.

The cast is headed by the popular British player, Jessie Matthews, who has come to some prominence in this country through recent appearances. It is understood that this is one of her earlier efforts in England, the release date noted being for this country only. The picture apparently was made some time ago. Supporting her are Edmund Gwenn as the elder Strauss, Edmond Knight as the son, and Fay Compton as the countess who befriends the boy and arouses his sweetheart's jealousy.

When Johann Strauss is at the height of his Vienna fame, his son, ambitious to become a composer in his own right, plays "second fiddle" in his father's orchestra. Angered at his father's disparaging remarks concerning his ability, the boy quits the orchestra. His sweetheart, Resi, is of two minds: she would help him with his music with her encouragement, but fears she may lose him if he becomes wedded to his art, and realizes that her father is interested in a son-in-law who will assist him in the confectionery business.

Young Strauss accidentally meets the countess, who becomes interested in him when she realizes he has talent. She asks him to set to music a poem she has written, which meanwhile had been turned down by the elder Strauss when approached by the countess' husband. At a suggestion from Resi, the Danube waltz is written. The countess and an old music master conspire to decoy the elder Strauss away from his big concert, and force the boy to conduct his own composition, which is an immediate and sensational success. The countess follows the boy to his rooms, and when her husband comes racing after her, Resi steps in to save the situation. Then young Strauss realizes he may have both his music and the girl, while his father understands that his successor has been discovered.

Not particularly effective, and with no outstanding marquee names, the selling of the film should concentrate on the romance, the historical figures and such of the Strauss music as is part of the production.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Tom Arnold. Directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Based on play by Heinz Reichert, Dr. A. M. Willner and Ernest Marischka, and the musical arrangement of Julius Bittner and E. W. The Ghost Walks

(Chesterfield)

Comedy Mystery

More comedy than mystery, the comedy phase containing some real laugh moments, the mystery not very mysterious and not too serious, with several disappearances but no murders, this independently produced picture looks to be fairly satisfactory regular run program material.

The selling may best be concentrated on the comedy element of the story, with a hint of the mystery to arouse patronage interest, and whatever play upon the title suggests itself to the exhibitor as a means of attracting attention. The cast, although it has familiar names, contains none which may be considered of draw value, the consequent necessity of selling story and title being obvious. John Miljan and June Collyer head the cast, with Johnny Arthur and Spencer Charters virtually leading the support.

The rather novel idea has a playwright deliberately taking a wellknown theatrical producer and his secretary, Richard Carle and Arthur, respectively, to the large house he has rented previously, and there, with a group of professional players, putting on for their benefit a horror play he has written. When the producer discovers the script in playwright Miljan's room, he and his secretary assume the rest of what takes place to be part of the play, and Miljan is unable to convince them that two disappearances and the discovered fact that there is an escaped lunatic about the place, are not part of the play.

When, in an atmosphere of the usual storm, thunder and lightning, Miljan brings Carle and Arthur to the house to stay the night after their car is struck, the two are immediately made nervous by the actions of the occupants of the house. They seem to know Miljan, and although Miss Collyer appears to be in love with him, there is an irritable brother, and a doctor, who is supposed to own the house, and a girl who is subject to hallucinations concerning the murder, several years before, of her husband. They are all part of the cast. There are amusing moments at the dinner table, but things take a serious turn when the girl appears to have died, then disappears, and a guard arrives to say an inmate has escaped from a nearby insane asylum.

While Carle and Arthur think the play still is going on for their benefit, the brother disappears and two other guards arrive. The lunatic, it is feared, is loose in the house. Then begins a series of hand reachings, hidden doors and the like, ending in the disappearance of Miss Collyer and finally Carle himself. Eventually Charters, the first guard, is found in a cellar laboratory, where, thinking he is a famed physician, he is about to operate on his victims. He is the lunatic. The play, it is decided, is a success.

Mystery and comedy, with accent on the comedy, this appears satisfactory program material for a midweek playing position.—Aaronson, New York.

Moscow Laughs

Comedy with Music

The Russian motion picture industry, in this first film of its type to reach the United States, is at great pains to paint a new kind of picture of the Soviet people, one indicating the inhabitants of the collectivized state as merry and gay, laughing and wholeheartedly enjoying jazz music.

The film's action is basically slapstick. It would seem that the producers, in an attempt to get away from the usual heavily dramatic story emanating from the state-owned Russian studios, have catapulted to the other extreme. A slight romance has been injected, but the film is largely concerned with efforts to be amusing.

A Russian jazz band is the center of activity in the latter part of the picture, a band which is said to be the leading one of its kind in Moscow and is led by the star himself.

The film appears to be of the sort for those interested in seeing Russian pictures. It contributes nothing which the regular run of American patrons cannot find, with better execution, in the product of the American studios. The music is tuneful, and the feminine lead, Lubov Orlova, has an excellent voice.

Kostia, herdsman on a collective farm near a health resort, is mistaken for a famous musical conductor by the wealthy daughter of a foreign engineer, who invites him to a party. He plays on his shepherd's pipe, his grazing animals wander into the house and wreck the place in inebriated fashion, and Kostia is ordered from the house. Aniuta, maid of all work, is in love with Kostia, but he does not notice her.

Kostia goes to Moscow, is pursued behind the scenes of a theatre, dons dress clothes as a disguise, and finds himself on the rear stage rostrum before a symphony orchestra, which had not met its director. When he waves his arms they play the Hungarian Rhapsody, trying to follow him. Kostia flees when the real conductor appears, and later becomes the leader of a jazz band, which seems to spend most of its time wrecking instruments and beating each other. He meets Aniuta again, the girl having been discharged, and she is induced to appear with the band as a vocalist. She is a success and they are reconciled.

Interwoven are repeated scenes of buffoonery, designed to create as much excitement of a comedy nature as possible.—Aaronson, New York.

Distributed by Amkino. Produced by Kinocombinat. Directed by Gregery Alexandrov. Music by I. O. Dunayevsky. Running time, 95 minutes. Release date, March 21, 1935. General audience classification.

Rocky Mountain Mystery

(Paramount)

Western

A combination of western and mystery, this is an adaptation of the Zane Grey story, "Golden Dreams," which fact should have more than a little bearing on the selling of the picture. In addition there are the two popular players, Randolph Scott, large and handsome western star, and Chic Sale, character actor of prominence.

The story centers about a mine high in the Rocky Mountains. With a great deal more "western" than "mystery" as the mainstay of the yarn, it appears good weekend material, with special attention to be directed at the younger element of the patronage.

Scott arrives at the mine to succeed his brother-in-law as supervising engineer. He learns that the foreman has been murdered and his predecessor accused of the crime. Scott joins forces with the sheriff, Sale, to uncover the murderer. Finally, after considerable action along the way, and after Kathleen Burke and Howard Wilson also have been murdered, Scott uncovers sufficient evidence to "get" his man. But he accomplishes that only after a rough and tumble battle all over the mine, which ends in the murderer plunging out of a high window to his death. Scott and Ann Sheridan conclude the picture on the expected romantic note.

There is plenty of action and punch to be sold to those who are devotees of the western.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Producer, Harold Hurley. Directed by Charles Barton. Screen play by Edward E. Paramore, Jr. Adapted by Ethel Doherty from Zane Grey's story, "Golden Dreams." Art direction, Hans Dreier and Dave Garber. Photography by Archie Stout. P. C. A. Certificate No. 476. Running time, 68 minutes. Release date, Feb. 8, 1935. General audience classification.

So You Won't Talk

(Warner-FN-British)

Farce

With Monty Banks playing a silent part, this Beaudine-directed effort of the Warner-FN-British studio very successfully recaptures the atmosphere of the pre-talker screen farce in which action spoke more entertainingly than words. It is full of action, has speed and a genuinely funny plot idea, and individual incident is of the semi-slapstick type so lacking of late.

Tom Geraghty's original story offers some useful exploitation angles. Tony Cazari, part owner of an Italian restaurant in London, is left $500,000 by his grandfather on condition that he does not speak or write for thirty days, during which he must endure the society of the gold-digging feminine relatives who have helped the old man into his grave. An accident prevents him from explaining matters to his fiancee before his lips are sealed. A racecourse crook who already has tricked Tony into putting his own and partners' savings on a loser, is bribed by the women fortune hunters—who get the money if Tony falls down—to force him to speak and he ultimately does so by pretending to shoot his girl, but they have all forgotten Summertime, and Tony has already won the fortune.

Tony's struggles in the hands of the middle-aged plotters and his attempts to escape the still more deadly attacks of their vampish young ally provide good laughs and plenty of them. There is a particularly good scene in which the old ladies dance themselves into exhaustion in trying to discover if Tony has the birthmark belonging to the rightful heir. The dumb man's use of a flute to indicate his wishes and other minor comedy angles are well presented and all the parts are well played, with Claude Dampier shining as the imbecile lawyer's clerk who has to watch Tony. Ralph Ince, also, has a good part as the tough.—ALLAN, London.

Produced by Warner-First National at Teddington and distributed in England by First National. Original story by Tom Geraghty. Directed by William Beaudine. Running time, 85 mins. "G."

Action Melodrama

Produced by Mascot and originally available in serial form, this is a selection of the action and story highlights of that serial, of the same title, and the concoction of a feature, which has more than its share of action plus, and should be just the thing for the weekend position on the regular run theatre bill, with special emphasis on the younger element of the patronage advisable in the selling.

It is chock full of thrill and punch, as the hero races on the dirt tracks, as he risks his neck in airplane stunts for the motion picture, goes in search of danger in the test driving of a new car on the proving grounds, and in general serves to provide action which should keep the youngsters, and some of the adults, close to the edges of their theatre chairs.

Jack Mulhall is the daredevil, Lola Lane the inevitable girl in the story, and Frankie Darro, always capable youngster, having a good deal to do with what goes on. The story, as is usually the case with this sort of action material, is simplicity itself, merely serving to carry the action and afford as many opportunities as possible for one hairbreadth escape from death after another. There is, of course, the menace to the happiness and success of the young couple, the land which is saturated in oil, a fact not realized by its owner, and the eventual undoing of the villains of the piece, with a couple of murders thrown in for good measure.

The exhibitor may well sell it for what it is, an action yarn with plenty of thrill and lively moments, and in the position of the week when that type of material is apt to attract its greatest number of followers.

The story has Mulhall, racing driver, swearing off the track when his best friend, a newsreel cameraman, is killed during a race. The young brother of the deceased, Darro, is left in the care of Mulhall. He meets Miss Lane, whom he had previously rescued on the track, and enters into partnership with her in her transportation business, the mainstay of which is a school bus contract. Edwin Maxwell, leader of the menace, attempts to force her to sell her oil land by attempting, by foul means, to force her to lose the bus contract. Stopped by Jack or Darro innumerable times as she would sign the deed away, the two eventually save the day, but not until they run the full gamut of adventure and danger.—AARONSON, New York.

Distributed by Majestic. Produced by Nat Levine for Mascot. Directed by Colbert Clark and Armand Schaefer. Supervising editor, Wyndham Gittens. Story by John Rathmell, Colbert Clark. Screen play by Al Martin, Armond Schaefer, Barney Sarecky, Sherman Lowe. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date, Dec. 18, 1934. General audience classification.

Topnotchers

(RKO Radio)

Fair Subject

With the "Easy Aces," man and wife, attending a motion picture theatre and supposedly looking at the same picture shown to the audience, something in the nature of a sports reel is unfolded, with the husband, talking to his wife, supplying the accompanying narration, and she, with her constant comments, attempting with only fair success, to supply the comedy. Shown are Man o' War, famous race horse; Berlinger, Olympic athlete, and others noted for their skill in swimming, running, baseball and other sports. Fairly interesting material.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Graduation Exercises

(Columbia)

Amusing

This is an amusing enough cartoon in the Scrappy series, in which Scrappy is late for the graduating exercises at school on account of his younger brother's escapade. To get in, the baby mounts on Scrappy's shoulders and they appear as the expected bearded member of the school board. The tricks they play on the teacher finally lead to their undoing, but they enjoyed themselves while it lasted, and so should the youngsters seeing the subject.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Lost Chick

(MGM)

Good

One of the Harman-Ising cartoons in color, this is amusing and entertaining, as the mother hen loses one egg, which is found by two young squirrels, hunting for nuts. They think it is a nut, search for no other food, and when winter comes and the chick hatches, they care for it. Then comes hunger and cold, and at the pleading of the chick, which had been taken home by its mother, the hen goes out into the snow, finds the squirrels and brings them to her home. A number which youngsters especially should find delightful.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Screen Snapshots No. 7

(Columbia)

Good

This number in the series, which has the name of Harriet Parsons attached, is rather considerably better than the usual run of these shots of the film personalities off the set. It opens with a big Hollywood dog show, with the stars showing the pets, then moves here and there about the town, to conclude, at some length, with the recent big race at the new Santa Anita race track, alternating with shots of the stars watching and good pictorial work on the race itself.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Shoestring Follies

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

There is entertainment in this musical subject, which features Eddie Peabody, the diminutive master of the banjo. Two inpecunious would-be producers attempt to put on a show and gather entertainers wherever they can get them for nothing. The result is a lively combination of girl-chorus material, a comedy song and Eddie's more than expert strumming of the banjo, aided by a chorus background playing neon-lit banjos. A good subject.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Old Age Pension

(Universal)

Fair

Henry Armetta, Italian comedian of the peculiar gait and continuous difficulty is, in this case, the marital victim of his wife and two children. They see in the approaching passage of an old-age pension law an opportunity for riches without work, and act accordingly, with Henry as the sufferer. He dreams a nightmarish dream of being forced to lie to government pension agents in order to get his check, then of telling the truth and being beheaded in his living room. On the whole the subject is fair, but the beheading scene appears entirely unnecessary, and should serve to frighten little children by the score.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Spice of Life No. 6

(Columbia)

Fair

The humor in this number of the series cannot be considered more than fairly provocative of laughs, as Doc Rockwell introduces the subject with some of his nonsense chatter, and the screen reproduces bits of humor gathered from publications everywhere, which are occasionally amusing. The series is produced in cooperation with the "Literary Digest," and the number concludes with Rockwell finishing his discourse on the advantages of whittling.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Little New New York

(RKO Radio)

Fair

One of a new group of subjects featuring the "Easy Aces," this is virtually a travel subject, the audience looking over New York as it is today, with occasional contrasting flashes of the city many years ago. The Ace couple, man and wife, are attending a film theatre, see the subject, and the husband acts as guide handling the accompanying dialogue, while his wife constantly interrupts him with remarks that are only occasionally amusing. A fair subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Sorcerer's Apprentice

(Metropolis-Tapernoux)

Unusual Interest

Produced in France, but entirely without dialogue, this is, in effect, pantomime accompaniment to the musical score of Paul Dukas, who based his composition on Goethe's poem of the same title. The story is of the experiences of the apprentice who began to experiment with the magic formulae of his master during the latter's absence. His master, returning, punishes him by creating weird phantoms. The pantomime dance of the apprentice is effective. The subject, excellently produced, should have unusual appeal to class audiences, in particular.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Parrotville Old Folks

(RKO Radio)

Good

One of the Rainbow Parade cartoons in color, and effectively done, this tells of the old folks' home in Parrotville, the inmates of which are regaled with music by the old sea captain and his man. The old parrots use their perches as pogo sticks in dancing to the music, and make a good job of things when dinner is served. An entertaining and colorful subject.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Dixieland

(Vitaphone)

Of Interest

Sixth in the See America First series, produced by E. M. Newman, with John B. Kennedy handling the interesting accompanying explanation, this pictures landmarks of the Old South, in the period just before and after the Civil War, these mementoes of a vital phase in the nation's history calling to mind the "events leading up to the tragedy," so to speak. Although lacking in action, the subject and the series, should be of general and, specifically, school interest.—Running time, 10 minutes.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Neb.

Dear Herald:

We have been considering the matter pretty seriously and after due deliberation have come to the conclusion that the "Brain Trust" must have got busy on that "Shelterbelt" to "bring rain," since it rained on us all through Kansas and has been raining for the two days and nights we have been home.

This morning the rain turned into snow and we are having an April shower with an early March temperature which has kept us shut in and has sweetened our angelic disposition to a point where we want to kick the house cat in the belly and upset the center table.

The snow reminds us of the spring snows we used to have when we were a boy back in southern Michigan. They were called "sugar snows," for that was the time they made maple sugar, and you remember how we used to go out to the sugar camp and take a snowball and pour maple syrup on it and make maple wax, don't you, Oscar? Oh, gosh, wasn't that sumthing? Whenever we think of those days we feel pity for the boys of this generation, but then, that wasn't what we wanted to talk about.

But That Bale of Hay—

When we came through Belleville, Kan., we stopped to call on our old friend, Sam Blair. We expected that Sam had gone down to the creek bullhead fishing, since we heard that his wife had gone to Denver. The last time we had seen Sam he was in a hospital and was recovering from an exploratory experiment by a horse-doctor from Chester, Neb. Sam said that in his explorations he had discovered a monkey wrench, some binding wire, a Hubbard squash, a can of sardines, but he never could figure out where that bale of hay came from. You perhaps don't know Sam. Sam was born on Friday the Thirteenth in the dark of the moon just after the January blizzard in the Rio Grande valley, and is therefore not to be held responsible for what he says. If we had Sam's power of imagination and his sense of appreciation we believe we could enjoy hearing a crooner croon "Her cheeks were like the roses and her lips were crimson red," but being a bonehead, like we are, we believe we would sooner hear two tomcats discussing politics over a clothesline. Well, anyhow, we were mighty glad to meet Sam and to learn that he is getting along fine after his operation, but what makes us sore is that he and Mrs. Blair occupied apartments only a block from where we lived all the while we were in Corpus Christi, Texas, and we didn't know it until we called on him at Belleville. Sam, you know, operates all theatres of the Blair Enterprises, which circuit of houses, under his able management, are a few of the things which are making the Jayhawk state a pretty good place to live. Sam bet us two dollars that his candidate would be elected president at the next presidential election. Sam lost just two bucks; that is, unless these trees on that "shelterbelt" bring us plenty of rain.

Walt Bradley, who directs the activities of the Moon theatre here in the metropolis of the west, tells us that his business has been better at the Moon for the past two months than it has been in any like period for a long time. We can't figure out a reason for this condition. The crops were light, they killed off five million pigs, and there are no alphabetical activities around here, and if you can figure out a plausible reason for this increase in business you will be entitled to a front seat at the next political convention.

The only solution for this condition that we are able to find is that the Legion of Decency must have been cleaning up the films and making them of more interest to people who still retain their sense of decency. Maybe that isn't the proper reason, we don't know, but we are for whatever it is so long as it increases business.

All's Well

No doubt you will be interested in learning how this beautiful city on the banks of the raging Elkhorn (which almost went dry last summer) managed to get along during our absence down among the Longhorns in the Rio Grande valley the past winter. You are to be commended for the interest you are taking in the welfare of "The Pride of the West." For your information we will state that on our arrival home we found that the Night Watch had been ringing the curfew regularly every night at ten o'clock (which nobody had paid any attention to for ten years) and had slept peacefully in the city hall; the cows were grazing contentedly on the court-house lawn; Bill Smith had reshingled his henhouse; the jaw-bone poker club had framed up some new rules against us; Frank Smith's dog Fannie had weaned her litter of ten pups (all dogs but eight), and otherwise the town had been running along in the same old groove, which would indicate that our absence was hardly noticeable. That's just the way it goes with some towns. Of course there were a lot of folks who were glad to see us back, the most of whom we had omitted to settle with before we went away, and their claims ranged from fifty cents to a borrowed lawn mower. That's just the way it is with some people, they never forget anything.

The ability of these folks to remember reminds me of a drayman back in our home town in Indiana. He remembered our girl's birthday. We had forgotten all about it but he remembered it and gave her a box of chocolates and that's how it came that we found him at her house the next Sunday evening when we called. Doggone the luck anyhow; we never could remember anything.

The other day we paid thirty cents a pound for pork chops down in Concordia, Kansas. The farmer who raised and fatted that hog got seven cents a pound for it. What we'd like to know is, who got the other twenty-three cents. It begins to look like the farmer was in the wrong end of the hog business.

When the farmer feeds his pigs
Without a single sigh or frown
And he weeds the garden out so it can grow,
He will pity Mrs. Wiggs
When she took her pigs to town
Because the boys up at the top will get the dough.

Last Christmas Lyle Talbot sent us his photograph showing himself holding a bunch of Christmas packages and wearing a smile that reminded us of the smile he used to wear at our wife's dinner table when she brought on the beans and sowbelly. We were thankful that he remembered us and we are glad to note that he is fast working up to the top of the ladder and will soon be in a class with Wallace Beery, Ned Sparks, Clark Gable, Allen Jenkins (a distant relative of ours, very distant), Joe E. Brown, Eddie Quillan, Shirley Temple and several other folks, including Henry B. Walthall. We knew Lyle when he used to feel of the fuzz on his upper lip and cast side glances at the girls on the street, and we are glad to know that he, along with the rest of them, is not a regular customer of the public soup kitchen. Thanks, Lyle, for the photograph. Come on in any time.

The rain that this corn belt has received the past two days and nights gives us the best outlook for a crop we have had for some time, and with a good crop business ought to be good, and without it fishing ought to be good.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR·ME

Columbia

AGAINST THE LAW: John Mack Brown—Pretty good for Friday-Saturday. Running time, 62 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BEHIND THE EVIDENCE: Norman Foster, Sheila Manners—This is good material for double feature programs. We played it on a double bill and it pleased. It has plenty of action, is well enough produced, and the acting is fairly effective.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

BEST MAN WINS, THE: Jack Holt, Edmund Lowe—Pretty good program picture. Running time, 64 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy —The best liked picture that we have played in a long time. Should be booked for more than one day as word-of-mouth will build up the business. Our second day was only 20c. less than the first and that is unusual in any man's theatre unless the second day falls on Saturday or a holiday. You won't go wrong in booking this one. Running time, 105 minutes. Played April 11-12.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Good. Well liked by everyone. Racing sequence very best. Will build.—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

FUGITIVE LADY: Neil Hamilton, Florence Rice —A rather melodramatic film which was liked on a double feature program with "Behind the Evidence." —J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

JEALOUSY: Nancy Carroll, Donald Cook—I agree with my brother exhibitors. A complete flop at the box office. Lost money for us. Recording fair. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LAW BEYOND THE RANGE: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—Played this as the co-feature with "That's Gratitude" and it walked away with the honors. Strangely enough this town does not go for western pictures and its liking of this was an exception. Business was below average for Saturdays, possibly because of a bad storm, but probably because the pictures had no drawing power. Running time, 58 minutes. Played April 13.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Fay Wray—Good story which pleased, but stars do not draw.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

WESTERNER, THE: Tim McCoy, Marion Shilling —A very good western. Running time, 57 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Very good. Had the house in an uproar. Quite an increase second night. Be sure and mention fact the story is taken from Collier's "Jail Breaker."—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE; Edward G, Robinson, Jean Arthur—Here is a very fine picture but it did not draw well. For some reason Robinson does not draw and Columbia should select better titles for their pictures. Those who saw it were well pleased. Running time, 93 minutes. Played April 9-10.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Fort Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—It's easy to understand why almost every exhibitor is praising Columbia. This company has produced another picture which any type of audience should enjoy. It is a human down-to-earth comedy which tells of a timid soul who is mistaken for a gangster who forces this Mr. Milquetoast type to change places with him. It is all good fun and the audience heartily enjoyed it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

First National

BABBITT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Well liked and a lot of real entertainment. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 3.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—In my estimation the best picture ever produced. It has everything, story, comedy, love interest, haunting melodies, stirring martial music and that grand old U. S. Military Academy. Drew exceptionally well. They raved. Socko this one. Played March 3-4.—Lamar Guthrie, Rogue Theatre No. 3, Tipton, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS: Joan Blondell—Fair. Blondell and Farrell make a fine team. All they need is better stories. Played March 27.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—Very entertaining. Well liked by all.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—Poor cast, no laughs. This is Brown's worst up to date. Played April 7.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Everybody likes Shirley. James Dunn very good in this picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—As far as box office is concerned it's great, and that's the answer to any exhibitor's prayer.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Excellent in every way. Little Shirley Temple is wonderful. This broke our house records. Running time, 82 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CARAVAN: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young—Fair. Many were disappointed. The name fooled them, most expecting another "Wagon Wheels" or "Covered Wagon." Played March 31.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CARAVAN: Loretta Young, Charles Boyer—This should have been a box office hit. The story is there, romance, comedy, music that reminds one of Victor Herbert. Why did it not click? The title "Caravan" suggests so many things. It suggests an Arabian desert picture, a western or a gypsy picture. Whatever the cause, we just did a bare average with this but the picture deserves getting behind and it will please those who come.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—Very good. Oland always pleasing.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—My patrons like Will Rogers. Personally, I think when you've seen a Rogers picture all the others are almost the same. Why not star him in another kind of a story?—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Good picture to good business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—Good little program picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—Fair air-action picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers, Richard Cromwell, Rochelle Hudson—For the first time in our small town lives we got to see a Will Rogers "hot off the griddle." Usually they're warmed over and old before the little theatre gets them. And did we break a record? We did. Biggest box office returns in history, which shows how nice it would be if the small exhibitor were not held back sixty days for the big fellow. Of course, it's a percentage picture and a peak night feast means a famine of a day or two which the little theatre must swallow. But there's only one Will Rogers and the public loves him (and Shirley Temple).—Mary H. Davis, Dixie Crystal Theatre, Clewiston, Fla. Small town patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: "Pat" Paterson, Lew Ayres—Fair program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian —Fair. Poor title. Stars do not draw.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian, Ned Sparks, Helen Morgan—This program picture received fair audience response. It is well made, though not out of the ordinary.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MYSTERY WOMAN: Mona Barrie, Gilbert Roland —Fair program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Just fair. Janet seems to be losing her appeal very fast.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Trifle tiresome due to lack of action. Dialogue and situations funny and helped hold audience. Gaynor and Baxter wasted on such a trivial story. Business fair.—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan—Pleased the younger elements.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: James Dunn, Alice Faye—Very poor entertainment.—Leo C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—This is really better than expected. It is a story that exposes the acting school racket in Hollywood but it has a well knit story. Good comedy supplied by Mitchell and Durant, a couple of elaborate musical numbers that show decided originality. A fair average business considering the Lenten season. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

UNDER PRESSURE: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—Plenty of action. Not much in it for women. Will go over where McLaglen and Lowe are liked.—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien, Dorothy Wilson—Great at the box office and everyone pleased. Give us more like it. O'Brien seems to appeal to all classes.—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

THE WHITE PARADE: John Boles, Loretta Young—As our friend Walter Winchell would say, "An orchid for you," so I say, "An orchid to all who helped make this." If someone were to suggest the subject of "Student Nurses" for a picture, one could hardly get enthused, and yet they took this subject and made one grand picture of it. I had seen it before my playdate, got behind it and did above average with it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Mascot

CRIMSON ROMANCE: Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza, Erich von Stroheim—Another war picture which is no more original than the rest; just war, broken friendships, saddened mothers, and shattered romances. The audience response to this picture was fair on a double feature program. Women heartily disliked the story.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp, H. B. Warner—One of the best bets you can make on Friday-Saturday. It's above the average and will please not only western fans, but others more sophisticated. The plot is good, it has an historical glamor and some really delightful Gene Autry music to lift it out of the rut of the commonplace shooting and fighting which are all right as seasoning, but why not make more westerns like this and the George O'Brien and Randolph Scott, Zane Grey stories? They have a general appeal. Most folks (not decadent) like clean outdoor adventure, and with a little music and cowboy singing, westerns go over well weekly in my town. And don't you ever think my western fans don't know the difference between these two types of westerns. The box office proves it conclusively.—Mary Hayes Davis, Dixie Crystal Theatre, Clewiston, Fla. Small town patronage.

MARINES ARE COMING, THE: William Haines, Esther Ralston, Conrad Nagel, Armida—William Haines may have ceased to be popular in the large metropolitan houses, but he is a welcome return in the theatres catering to the family-type patronage. Our patrons were more than pleased with this well made program picture distinguished for its action and witty dialogue. To the picture-wise, this film is obviously inexpensively produced, but it is far above the average independent picture. Armida was especially noteworthy as the fiery little sweetheart of Haines; this diminutive lady deserves better film opportunities than she has received in the past few years, for although not beautiful, she is talented. This picture is mass entertainment and has nothing to appeal to the more discriminating "class" patron.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—Fine entertainment for all classes. Plenty of comedy.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—Played this for one day only to the best midweek business since first week of January. Where they liked "Forsaking All Others," this will go over in a big way. Running time, 73 minutes. Played April 10.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This one pleased. Drew the grown-ups as well as the kids. Held up nicely for a three-day run. Laurel and Hardy always do good for us. Good business. Running time, 79 minutes. Played March 18.—Esther Schaber, The Senator, Ashley, N. D. Small city and country patronage.

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—A sort of opera and like most such productions very strongly tinctured with hokum. It goes over 100 per cent with the kids and pleases the adults nearly as well. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 12-13.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—This is another one of these all talking pictures. No action, just talk, talk, talk. Just a waste of a darn good cast. Did a good business the first night but after the good news got around nobody came but my brother-in-law. Running time, 84 minutes. Played April 7.—Esther Schaber, The Senator, Ashley, N Y. Small city and country patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, Lionel Barrymore, W. C. Fields, Edna May Eliver—Good acting with the Dickens story well done. An exceedingly long picture that I think could have been slightly cut and helped some. It will attract people who are not usually seen in the theatre and you probably won't see them again until another like it. That is our experience. However, I don't think that any of the other Dickens pictures would have a chance at the box office. This one happened at the logical time when clean pictures are being clamored for and it was only the strong advertising campaign that put it over. Others I don't think would hit. I know that Oliver Twist was made many years ago and my records show that it flopped at the box office.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Edna May Oliver, Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, Roland Young, Basil Rathbone, Maureen O'Sullivan—This is very likely to go down in history as the best picture made this season. Probably a number of others will outgross it in small towns, but it should do a satisfatcory business anywhere. Running time, 133 minutes.—Played April 5-6.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Maurice Chevalier—A lot of money wasted. No draw. Costume pictures do not go. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 7-9.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnsville, Ore. Local patronage.

OUTCAST LADY: Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall—No good.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—Best Garbo has made. Some fine acting in this. Fair box office. Played March 31.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—This production did not strongly appeal to our patronage, which complained that the picture was slow and dull. I found it to be fairly entertaining.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TIMES SQUARE LADY: Robert Taylor, Virginia Bruce—Fair program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

VANESSA—HER LOVE STORY: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—In capital letters the advice is to avoid this one. An awful bore about nothing. I think someone in the small audience liked it. Running time, 77 minutes. Played April 5.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Fort Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WINNING TICKET: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda—Metro's error and a bad break for any exhibitor that plays it. In the first place, Fazenda was through long ago and Carrillo has been in support in about two pictures and Metro is trying to rocket him into stardom with the result that the picture is a headache for any audience. It would make a good two-reel comedy and that it all. Carrillo is not known except for small parts that he has done in other pictures. I will grant that he is good as a character actor but as a star to bill in lights he has yet to arrive. And the exhibitor pays for the mistake.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Paramount

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—I guess Mae West is through as far as I am concerned. Not one of her pictures has made money for me. Our patrons don't go for her pictures. Running time, 78 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert—A lot of money wasted. Very little entertainment. Running time, 102 minutes. Played April 10-12.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Jack Oakie, Joe Penner, Lanny Ross—This still had box office when I showed it, even though it is several months old. I do not need to tell you it is entertainment, but I do want to tell you that our old friend Jack Oakie can still give it out and also take it and here's hoping he will continue for a long time. Lanny Ross has the best screen voice I know of and a grand screen personality. Joe Penner goes over and will be okay if the screen fans don't tire of his stuff. More power to Joe Penner.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind.

CRIME WITHOUT PASSION: Claude Rains—I will add my comment to this much debated picture. On a double program this is not so bad, but what makes it appear worse than it is, is the prologue representing sin, I suppose it is, and that footage about 75 feet or so, is about the most horrible piece of film ever projected on a screen. I caught it the first show and did not show those scenes again. The prologue scene is partly repeated at the ending but only a couple of short flashes. No one commented one way or the other, if they did not like it. The other half of the program pleased.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ENTER MADAME: Elissa Landi, Cary Grant—Enter Madam and if I make no mistake you will open the back entrance and let her go right on through. Hysterical opera stars screeching their heads off and what one patron said when he left holding his head would not get by the mails. It was not a polite word that he had for it. Of all the dumb clucks that it has been my misfortune to run this one is it. May I never run another like it. Supposed to be high class musical, but my patrons had another name for it. The worst panning a picture has had for some time and they had reason.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Very good. This type of role just suits her. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction. Fred MacMurray's styles of acting takes hold.—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Randolph Scott—Drew fairly well but nothing extra. Story seemed to be all chopped up and disconnected. Entirely too short for a picture of this caliber.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theathe, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott, Evelyn Brent—A rather hashed up plot and poor continuity, but seems to please. Anyway, it drew them out. Played on a Sunday and Monday.—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Cary Cooper, Franchot Tone—This picture is gigantic. It is one of those pictures that no matter how much advertising you may do, it requires about one day's running before they will come in. After that you go to town. It will do marvelous business on out. Have been wondering why we have not had Gary Cooper in any pictures of late and you will find the answer in this picture. Many patrons thought this the biggest picture they ever saw.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie—Only a fair program picture. Running time, 81 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THUNDER OVER MEXICO: This is truly a great picture. It is all that the advertising says it is. It broke all box-office records for three years. The picture is something different and it is terrifying in its realism. The great Russian producer, Eisenstein, made it. People actually stood up and cheered after it was over. It was so impressing. People came from all over to see this picture. I myself do not think that I have ever seen such a picture before. Yet, it is so simple in contrast with other pictures but yet so more powerful than any other picture I think I have ever seen. It is the way it is done with such beautiful settings and the way the producer shows us clouds as no other film has ever brought out. The music with the picture was so beautiful that words can not express it. I think this picture will go down in the minds of the people who saw it as one of the greatest pictures which they have ever seen. Everyone who saw it expressed their appreciation of it. I myself have never seen such an excited audience which attended this picture. People just raved about it, told their friends and we had to have S. R. O. sign up every time we presented it. It sure gave us a good feeling and we believe that show business will still be great if we can play good pictures. This shows that people want pictures that are different. I have not gotten over the rush business which we did. I hope that some of you will play it. If it is advertised right it will do business for you. Recording perfect and print in perfect condition. Played April 12-15.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special audience.

Monogram

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney—Poor program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. Small town patronage.

RKO

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—Fine story, good cast, big box office. Played March 24.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CAPTAIN HURRICANE: James Barton, Helen Westley—Terrible. I haven't had a good picture for so long I'm ready to close up.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

DANGEROUS CORNER: Virginia Bruce, Conrad Nagel, Melvyn Douglas—The ending of this film spoiled it for many of our patrons. After working up to a highly logical climax the picture is spoiled by a subtitle "This is what might have happened. . . . This is what really happened" which makes way for the customary "I love you, you love me" ending. Until the final reel this film is intensely interesting. It is a well produced picture and is splendidly acted.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE: Fred Astaire Ginger Rogers—This is a swell picture and pleased all who saw it. However, I couldn't get them in very well on it. That Ginger's a honey. Played February 17-18.—Lamar Guthrie, Rogue Theatre, No. 3, Tipton, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

GIGOLETTE: Adrienne Ames, Ralph Bellamy—Just another picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

LADDIE: Gloria Stuart, John Beal—A splendid picture and very well received. A real human story and splendidly directed. Running time, 67 minutes. Played April 4-6.—M. W. Mattecheck, Larke Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Pert Kelton—Just fair program picture—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Pert Kelton—Just a fair comedy that pleased about 50 per cent of my patrons. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—Very good. Patrons liked it.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—A charming story which was keenly enjoyed by the not very large audience of rather cultivated people who saw it. But "Grand Old Girl" and "The Little Minister" are not small town money makers. Wheeler and Woolsey's "Kentucky Kernels" will make you more money. And thanks to somebody it's decently clean and not like "Africa" was.—Mary H. Davis, Dixie Crystal Theatre, Clewiston, Fla. Small town patronage.

RED MORNING: Steffi Duna, Regis Toomey—Just fair picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—This is a very nice picture but not strong enough for a Sunday date. Our patrons rather disappointed because of no music or dancing. Did a fair business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played March 24.—Esther Schaber, The Senator, Ashley, N. D. Small city and country patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—A very good thrill picture that pleased and made money. Fine for any day of the week. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Another good one from RKO. This one has everything, romance, comedy, mystery and plenty of action. Powell and Rogers sure make a dandy team. Wish we could get more pictures like this. Our crowd sure went for it in a big way. Did an excellent business. Running time, 84 minutes. Played April 11.—Esther Schaber, The Senator, Ashley, N. D. Small city and country patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—Great. Richard Dix just suited to this kind of role. Good business and gave 100 per cent satisfaction.—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI: Fredric March, Constance Bennett—Very fine picture with grand comedy, Morgan stealing the show. The few who saw it were well pleased. Played April 3-4.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CLIVE OF INDIA: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—Good picture to poor business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

CLIVE OF INDIA: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—Don't waste your money on this one. Producer insisted on our playing it three days. One would have been plenty and more. Not nearly as good as "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." Action drags. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 31-April 1-2.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LAST GENTLEMAN, THE: George Arliss, Edna May Oliver, Charlotte Henry—Was afraid of this picture, thinking it would be too highbrow to please all of my widely varied audience; this being a feared general impression. But it proved a delightful surprise; human, simple, delightful comedy and wonderful characterization. The second night proved Arliss has mass appeal. In the right kind of pictures, like this, we believe he would not only please the select few, but the masses. Box office receipts better second night than first proves something, doesn't it?—Mary H. Davis, Dixie Crystal Theatre, Clewiston, Fla. Small town patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou—Very good. Beery scores again. Played April 7.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou, Virginia Bruce, Rochelle Hudson—This picture drew well two nights and delighted everyone. It has a general human interest appeal second only to Will Rogers. Highbrows, lowbrows, nobrows, little children, sophisticates and ruralites—they all loved it, for it speaks a universal language and has many and varied points of contact. Beery was a funny, lovable prince of humbugs. When the bearded lady of his circus attempts to make love to him, his comic distress sent the audience into gales of laughter. Menjou was excellent, the freaks interesting to circus-minded youngsters of seven to seventy, and Virginia Bruce as Jenny Lind a thrilling joy to music lovers. By all means run this picture two or three days if you want to make friends for your theatre and even up your losses on bad nights. Best of all, you get a square deal and do not have to play it on percentage on a peak night. It is obtainable at a fair straight price.—Mary H. Davis, Dixie Crystal Theatre, Clewiston, Fla. Small town patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou—Good picture to poor business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

HUMAN SIDE, THE: Adolphe Menjou, Doris Kenyon, Charlotte Henry—This program picture received satisfactory audience response. It is well made.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—One of the finest pictures this year. Marvelous cast and great story. Played March 27.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—Good program picture. Running time, 71 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones, Sheila Terry—Good western that drew well and pleased. Running time, 64 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones, Sheila Terry—Poor. Buck a good draw but this very disappointing—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

STRANGE WIVES: Roger Pryor, June Clayworth, Esther Ralston, Ralph Forbes—An average program picture which was fairly well received by our patronage on a double bill with "Crimson Romance."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull, Frances Drake—Nice little picture for small town; nothing big or prtetentious, but very entertaining.—Wayne T. Jenkins, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Ken used to be okay, but the more I see of him with those powder puff fights, bad stories, his old man figure and the others in the cast, the more I think he should take a vacation, a permanent one. This is his worst in my estimation. Running time, 58 minutes. Played March 8-9.—Lamar Guthrie, Rogue Theatre No. 3, Tipton, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—A very good picture that pleased any who saw it and it drew pretty well. However, it was not just the picture one would expect by the title given it. Not outdoor enough but it's okay and they will like it. That man Muni is plenty good. Running time, 67 minutes. Played March 15-16.—Lamar Guthrie, Rogue Theatre No. 3, Tipton, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis, Margaret Lindsay—It is not often that a picture as thoroughly entertaining and original as this is released. It is one of the hits of the year and deservedly so. Acting, production and story are of a high order and the casting is perfection itself. The audience thought it great and I enjoyed it too. Don't pass it up.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

'COULDN'T DO WITHOUT IT'

"The first department I turn to is 'What the Picture Did for Me,' writes Wayne T. Jenkins of the People's theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo. "I don't know what I would do without it.

"I am sending in some reports, more from the audience reaction, which I believe to be the best indication as to whether a picture goes over or not."

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne—Vitagraph's flamboyant trailer gave this picture everything. The best musical picture of the year and how they can put out this lime of hooey and know that the picture will not anywhere measure up, as they could have gathered from the various reports on it in the Herald. It is the most boring picture that we have ever run. It meanders around for 80 long, long minutes and you wonder when it will end. Irene Dunne sings and sings on every occasion and without rime or reason for it except to waste footage. The most disappointing picture that we have from Warners. They dragged everything in the studio including a vamp and then it was a no-good vehicle that should have gone on the ash heap and not been released. The audience gave a huge sigh of relief when it ended. They evidently waited it out expecting something to happen which never did.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak, Ned Sparks, Helen Morgan—Plenty of publicity put this over for the first day, but the second day fell down considerably, indicating disapproval on the part of those who attended the first showing. Running time, 95 minutes. Played April 8-9.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Educational

BLACK SHEEP, THE; Terry-Toons—Very good cartoon comedy. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TIME ON THEIR HANDS: Song Hit Stories—Very good. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

HEARST METROTONE NEWS: Have always expected a lot more from Metro News than we have received. We rate this newsreel as one of the poorest.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

MOTORCYCLE COSSACKS: Oddities Series—All of Metro's sport reels are very good, only they do a lot of substituting. We were supposed to play the release on "Donkey Baseball," only to receive the one being reviewed. The same thing happened on a bowling subject a few weeks ago. Running time, 8 minutes.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

TOYLAND BROADCAST: Happy Harmonies Series—Color was up to the high standard that we now look for in color cartoons, but as subjects of this sort go, we would rate this reel below par. Running time, 8 minutes.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

Paramount

PARAMOUNT NEWS: This is the best-liked newsreel that we have played. Paramount gives us a very late release and much better service than do the other newsreels.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

STRINGS AND STRAINS: Paramount Varities Series—Very unusual and amusing subject that combines music, comedy, good acting and a clever marionette sequence. Deserves a place on any program, although it offers little chance for exploitation. Running time, 10 minutes.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

RKO

ALONG CAME A DUCK: Toddle Tale Cartoons—Good little carton. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FERRY GO ROUND: Headliner Series—Only fair. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PASTRYTOWN WEDDING: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Very fine short subject that pleased all. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

DIZZIE DWARF: Oswald Cartoons—Only fair. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HAPPY PILGRIMS: Oswald Cartoons—Fair cartoon. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Feld, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WORLD'S FAIR AND WARMER: Universal comedies—Good two-reel comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Vitaphone

ART TROUBLE: Harry Gribbon—Comedy that is way below the standard set by this company. There was no necessity of timing the jokes or gags to coincide with the audience laughter, because there just wasn't any of the latter. Running time, 20 minutes.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

Serials

Universal

RUSTLER'S OF RED DOG: John Mack Brown—Started out slowly, but with the third chapter it is now beginning to pick up speed and is attracting more of the older folks than did "Tailspin Tommy," which went over big with the kids. Twelve episodes. Running time, 20 minutes each.—Seth H. Field, Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine. Small town patronage.

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Noah Berry, Jr.—Just finished playing this serial and find it one of the best serials we have played the 20 years we have been in business.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BOOK REVIEW

MAKING A PHOTOGRAPH, by Ansel Adams. London: The Studio, Ltd. 96 pp. 7¼x9¼. $3.50.

This volume is one of the publisher's series entitled "How to Do It," which should indicate the general character of Mr. Adams' aims. He is interested in those persons who have discovered in the camera an instrument of serious self-expression and who have not had the instruction and experience necessary for really effective results. The author was one of the first to make such a discovery for himself. From it he has fashioned a career that is an integral part of the development of modern creative photography. Incidentally, Mr. Adams is an American.

The text is consistently confined to the essentials of equipment, materials and methods, in keeping with the precise purposes of the book, and is thoroughly amplified with simple, readily understandable diagrams. In addition, Mr. Adams has included selected pictures from his own notable productions, giving for each one the technical conditions under which it was made. Furthermore, these are not photo-engraver's reproductions, but actual prints from the negatives. Each print represents a specific problem in subject and treatment.

It is assumed that most of the reader's work will be done outdoors. The studio, however, is briefly considered. The camera, lenses, developing and printing equipment, paper and chemicals are concisely discussed before practical theory is reached. (And Mr. Adams keeps the latter practical.) Then follows a step-by-step analysis of the process of making a photograph.

Although a chapter on photographic esthetics is included, it occupies but a page and a half, and making a picture beautiful as well as a picture is told in more concrete terms in a final chapter on portraits, landscapes and the other types.—G. S.

Whelan Takes Moon's Fox Exploitation Post

Leslie F. Whelan, eastern exploitation and publicity man for Harold Lloyd for many years, has taken over the exploitation position at Fox which was held by Russ Moon. A former newspaper man, Mr. Whelan joined Paramount Famous Lasky in 1919 as exploitation representative, and joined Harold Lloyd in 1925.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

PRO BONUS PUBLICO

If the bonus plan of compensation is desirable in stimulating managers to greater effort then by all means it should be encouraged. But from what evidence this department has been able to gather, results of such participation drives have not entirely succeeded in winning unanimous approval either from theatremen or their superiors.

The letter on a following page from a long-time member who unfortunately must remain anonymous to our readers, presents one side of the question. This protest comes almost coincidently with the announcement of RKO's profit-sharing plan for managers, which, we are told, has received an enthusiastic acceptance from the field and therefore may be said to take up some of the slack evident in similar projects.

Our correspondent is not against the idea of bonus drives but finds objection mainly to the manner in which those he has experienced have been handled. He maintains that quotas and final results are determined too arbitrarily. In other words, he says, "it's the good ole fix."

Undoubtedly, the run-of-the-mill bonus or participation drive has outlived its usefulness, if ever such existed. Never completely has any such plan won the entire confidence or accord of the theatreman who supposedly is most to be benefited. There are instances also where division heads have been critical. The reasons are not hard to find.

Firstly, no matter how conscientious or generous circuit heads may be in setting up quotas and prize money, these figures and awards being arbitrarily determined are oftimes open to question from the very beginning. Thus, enthusiasm is immediately dispelled and morale endangered.

Secondly, in many instances a manager may work himself into a lather and just miss his quota through circumstances over which he has little or no control. And though he may be given some little token in recognition of his efforts, this reward, by the rulings of the drive, must nevertheless be much less than the amounts taken down by the winners, no matter how close the runner-up finishes.

The answer may be the new slant inaugurated recently by the RKO circuit, in which a manager shares the profits of his operation, quarterly and annually, by a definite percentage of the increase over last year's net.

Although the plan has not been detailed for publication, it appears that the manager's share increases as his profits rise; that these percentages are first to be figured quarterly; that if the theatreman does not click in any one period he has an opportunity to make up lost ground in the succeeding periods without being penalized. And, most significant, is the provision by which a committee of executives will consider for some proportionate reward, the cases of those managers who have done a good job but missed "ringing the gong."

We favor the RKO plan if for no other reason than it embraces a percentage—the only just form of remuneration for the manager. Whether or not the percentages offered are liberal enough to encourage the theatreman's best is neither here nor there at this stage of the project.

The fact remains that for the first time, a theatre circuit gives managers—its salesmen, an opportunity to earn "commissions" as is customary in other lines of endeavor.

PRIMER

Oh, see the horse. He belongs to the farmer. The horse pulls the plow. The horse pulls the wagon that carries the farmer's crops to market. The horse is fat. He is well fed and rested. If he were not well fed and rested he would get thin and weak. He could not pull the plow or the wagon to market. The farmer would have to buy another horse. A horse costs money.

Now, see the manager. The manager is at the theatre. He works from early morn to late at night. He carries a heavy load. He is not well fed and rested. He is not a horse.

"AH, THOU VIXEN, SPRING"

Gently as a leaf falling, softly as summer rain on thirsty flowers, beguiling as a brook gurgling over whitened rocks, comes this tender message of Springtide:

"The sap is just beginning to run in the New England maples . . . the first robins are here . . . deep, flavorous, pungent smoke drifts idly from the smoke-house. Hickory smoke, cool, clean and zestful; hams from tender young pigs soaking in its flavor."

We quote from a letter addressed to Mr. Jerry Jerauld, of Motion Picture Daily, from the People's Market of New York, Purveyors of High Grade Meat and Poultry.

Radio and Papers Go Far for Rotsky

Broadcast electrical transcriptions of music from "Gold Diggers of 1935" prior to and during run proved an effective coverage medium for George Rotsky, Palace, Montreal, who also arranged for these to be played on two advertisers' programs. Stills and theatre copy were displayed in music departments of various stores.

Tieup with hair rinse manufacturer resulted in additional newspaper space, ad carrying Gloria Stuart face cut and theatre credits. Large canned soup ad featured Hollywood satelites imbibing with evident relish that company's product.

Sparrow Arranges Orphan Show on "Little Colonel"

With the cooperation of leading daily, Allen Sparrow, Loew's State, Norfolk, Va., arranged for orphans to attend special morning showing of "Little Colonel." Paper paid for bannered bus transportation and ran stories on event. Another paper through classified ad page offered Temple flip and "life" story books.

Photo enlargements of Shirley were placed in restaurants and ferry waiting rooms one week ahead and five and ten featured miniature editions of book.

APRIL DEADLINE AND APRIL JUDGES

Midnight of Monday, May 6, has been determined for the deadline on April Quigley Award entries, and managers are again reminded that campaigns must be at Committee Headquarters, 1790 Broadway, New York, by that time.

April judges are: George Schaefer, Paramount Pictures; J. R. Vogel, Loew Theatres, and Bruce Gallup, Columbia Pictures. Decisions will be announced in the issue of May 18.

Duke and Duchess Attend "Richelieu"

Royalty was headlined in the campaign on "Cardinal Richelieu" at the Radio City Music Hall when Hazel Flynn and Jim MacFarland persuaded the present Duke de Richelieu and his party to attend the opening, resultant publicity making a bit of to-do regarding the event.

Cardinal perfume, Cardinal colors, Richelieu pearls were among the various slants featured by many New York stores, as were the Richelieu collarettes by all Sears Roebuck stores in a 50-mile radius. Not even the Chateau Richelieu, a prominent local dine spot, was passed up for extra publicity.

Previews to helpful organizations and letters to school heads, club officials and the special Radio City mailing list also aided in spreading the word.

Morgan Puts On Parachute Jump for "West Point"

Herb Morgan, publicist, Loew's Century, Baltimore, Md., arranged with airport for a parachute jump stunt in connection with "West Point of the Air," awarding tickets to picture to first 25 estimating closest the correct altitude from which jump was made.

Herb engineered several street ballys, among which were planes maneuvering over theatre, miniature auto converted into plane touring streets with driver dressed as pilot and small planes with title and dates were stenciled on streets.

For his lobby Morgan secured the actual scaled working model of transpacific "Flying Clipper," recently completed at local air plant, and reports hundreds of spectators at the display.

Many Organizations Preview 'Miserables'

Important in the advance of United Artists' "Les Miserables" at the New York Rivoli, was a series of preview screenings to which were invited outstanding groups of lawyers, judges, clergy and educators. Among others responding was the National Committee on Public Education for Crime Control at New York University, which organization forwarded endorsements to its many members.

New York Board of Education distributed booklet to grade and high school pupils, teachers and heads of high school English departments being informed of the essay possibilities of the picture. The Hays office also cooperated with letters to leading club and organization leaders in the metropolitan district.

Further aid was obtained from French clubs, the French consul's office and the French newspaper "Corriere des Etats-Unis," which ran the serial based on the book. Saks' Fifth Avenue store plugged the dresses worn by Marilyn Knowlden in the film, Gimbel's the Cosette head dress, Macy's and Ovington's tied in on the candlestick slant in the picture. Title stickers were placed on all outgoing mail, and cooperating organizations also used these in correspondence.

Gotham hosiery Rochelle Hudson tieups were made in various sections of the city, and many book stores carried window displays and counter cards. Five stations tied in on plug broadcasts also using the electrical transcriptions.

The Lineup for Rosy's Show

"Popeye Carnival" Is Buildup for Grosses

There's a bear market on spinach in Oakland, Cal., according to Manager M. E. "Rosy" Rosenberg, of the Fairfax, in that spot, who utilized the strength-giving vegetable as a feature of his recent Saturday morning "Pop Eye Carnival."

The idea came about through the scarcity of suitable features for the kid matinee showing, so Rosy conceived the idea of the shorts, showing three Popeyes, a Walt Disney, and "Alice in Wonderland"—all repeats, to build up the start of a "Tailspin Tommy" serial, on the same program. And as a topper, Rosenberg booked a weight-lifting champ who demonstrated muscle control, bending steel rods with his teeth, and dipped into a can labelled "spinach" to gather more pep.

Heralds plugging the serial and the carnival were distributed in schools with the cooperation of local superintendent who endorsed entire bill, membership cards in the Popeye Club were distributed, Popeye musical pipes being given for all cards filled out and turned in, and local Hearst papers came in on the stunt through their Popeye cartoon.

Rosy says the show went over big, with a 300 per cent increase in his kid business on the opening of the serial, and following kid matinees doing equally as well, as is indicated by accompanying photo.

To keep up interest, guest tickets and other gifts are given weekly to members having birthdays between matinees, stage acts put on by youngsters with talent, and to sell the club title, the Popeye song, added to other selections, are included in every meeting. J. M. Hanson, assistant manager, is credited in the campaign.

Snappy Advance on "Bride of Frankenstein"

There's plenty of meat in the load of aids gotten out by Joe Weil, exploitation head of Universal on "Bride of Frankenstein," the newest of which being a series of snipes reduced from the 24 sheets, that are colorful and peppy.

Complete 15-minute radio script authored by Joe is also ready for managers playing the date, and another neat slant comprises a number of exploitation stunts sent out to the trade as mailing pieces. For instance, an emergency booth gag for lobbies, with nurse in attendance, booth containing candles for those afraid to go home after seeing the picture, hair dye for those whose hair turns white, spirits of ammonia, etc.

Manager Attacks Bonus Drives

From time to time the Round Table pages have carried accounts and results of bonus and participation drives instituted by circuits in various sections of the country. Below is published a letter from one of our long time members who gives his views on the subject as a manager who has taken an active part in a number of these competitions to encourage grosses. For obvious reasons, his name and situation are not attached to the letter and the writer's comments are printed in full for the information of the executives who sponsor these drives and the managers in the field who attempt to win some of the prize money.

Dear Mike:

To begin with the idea of Bonus or participation drives is all right. The trouble lies in the way it is handled. In the main it spurs activity among managers and results in increased grosses, as well as reduced expenditures of operation.

But the powers that be in our industry are short-sighted.

In the working plan of these so-called Bonus or Participation Drives it is so worked out that out of say ten drives, the individual manager may expect to win one or perhaps two of these Drives. If the manager wins a Drive his par figure is so "adjusted" that he will NOT win the next one unless a miracle happens.

In other words, the Drives will revolve around him until his par figure after several "adjustments" returns to his original figure, wherein he won his last Drive, and his chances will then again be very good. I'm afraid if I went into the complications used in the Drives we have, it would befuddle and confuse as they classify the houses in classes and if you do too good in one class they slip you into one more difficult.

The Drives in this organization have accomplished a lot, but on the whole I don't think they have been satisfactory to everyone, including the powers that be, and I understand that the present one is the last, and perhaps a salary increase all around is the order of the day.

However, I sincerely believe that the profit-sharing plan could be put in effect, even if a man only owned one house and put his manager on a profit-sharing basis. It would eliminate outside checkers, inside checkers, chiseling and a lot of petty evils that afflict both manager and owner. A manager who is part-owner or at least feels that he is, has a pride in his own business that no salaried employee ever feels.

To get away from showbusiness for the moment, let's take the commercial field and see how they handle it.

I think they handle it more sanely. Take J. C. Penney Co., Woolworth and Montgomery Ward for example. Their managers are paid a salary that compares favorably with the average theatre manager and they work on a yearly Bonus plan and it's not unusual in a town of say 10,000 to find the Montgomery Ward manager earning a $3,000 bonus yearly in addition to his salary. The manager of the Penney store is a third-owner in his store and consequently in the same sized town his store pays him around 8 to $10,000 per year. The Woolworth people work along similar lines.

Now as concerns the theatre manager, his average salary is below par. If a theatre grosses $100,000 per year, does the manager receive 10 per cent of that yearly as say salary and bonus? He does not! He receives a very small percentage of the gross as salary, although he carries as much, if not a greater responsibility than the managers of the chain stores in the commercial field.

I believe the solution to this problem in the theatre business lies in a profit-sharing plan, and it should be a generous one, basing same on the yearly gross of a theatre taken over a period of say five years, and then determine a figure that the manager CAN reach, where instead of making $50 a week, he knew if he could increase his yearly gross he might average $150 a week. And don't forget that every dollar that the manager piled up for himself in a year, his employer's profits would treble.

Eventually you will see this come to pass in the theatre business, strange as it may sound to some people.

Mister Rosenthal Gets Personal

Arthur don't be a clerk all your life—the whole town's talking.

Mabel, please come home—all is forgiven —and ditto.

Billy, you can't do that to me—the whole town's—yes.

And so it kept on for days until the last when the copy in newspaper personal columns called it all a draw and requested the folks to meet at the Majestic, from whence Rosy Rosenthal fooled the public at Bridgeport on "Whole Town's Talking."

Fresh flower lobby was planted by florist (see photo) in exchange for credit card, and for "Wedding Night," jeweler featured rings, offering guest tickets to those able to wear a certain size.

Sweepstake Winner Presents Radio Prizes

Lewis A. Doran, assistant manager, Brevoort, Brooklyn, N. Y., reports tieup on "Winning Ticket" and "Sequoia" with large radio store, in which prizes were awarded for three "winning tickets" held by theatre patrons. These included an all-wave radio set, with guest tickets for runnersup. Store devoted entire window to twin-bill display and prizes.

Tickets were obtained at box office (with admission ticket) one week prior to date, and theatregoers deposited stubs at radio store for drawing on opening day of show. Prominent official served as "drawer" of winning tickets at dealer's in presence of large turnout.

Dickens' Descendant Helps Boucher Sell Date

When Frank Boucher, Maryland, Hagerstown, Md., discovered a few days ahead of his Copperfield opening that Charles Dickens, a direct descendant of the famous author, was a local resident, he wasted no time letting the rest of the folks know about it. Special stories on relationship were run in local and county papers. Reception was tendered Dickens in the lobby opening night, at which time he presented Mayor Wertz and wife with a specially autographed edition of the book.

Frank further arranged a radio contest giving Copperfield dolls to youngsters in grammar schools writing best letters on "Why I Am Going to See David Copperfield." Dolls were presented from stage at Saturday matinee.

Contacting the MGM studios, Boucher secured Freddie Bartholomew's copy of the script autographed by members of the cast and auctioned it off from the stage, proceeds going to Boy Scouts who had just started local drive for funds.

BY-PRODUCTS OF THE PRESS BOOK

Round Tabler Explains Further Uses of Press Book Contents in Making Up Inexpensive Lobbies

by C. L. ("BILL") YEARSLEY
Manager, Smoot, Parkersburg, W. Va.

Some time ago, the author of this article forwarded a campaign in which were described and illustrated some of the various uses he makes of press books for display purposes. Bill indicated that there were many other things of value in press books on the major attractions, and upon our invitation has been kind enough to elaborate this thought. He is a well-known figure in the industry and speaks with authority.

Let's take a new slant in this debate about press books to which the HERALD is, wisely I think, giving so much space. My contention is that few exhibitors use press books for all they are worth, and further, that the men who make them do a far more thorough and intelligent job than the men who use them. Just to get my point over, I'll quote the essence of an argument that I've heard, and participated in, times without number. Our present characters are an Ad salesman and an Exhibitor. We'll call 'em Ad and Exhib for short. They are discussing advertising accessories. Exhib is having his say about their excessive cost and poor quality, when Ad breaks in:

Ad: "Are you losing money on press books, too?"

Exhib: "Huh?" Why, dumbbell, press books don't cost me anything."

Ad: "No? Maybe not directly, but you pay for them just the same."

Exhib: "Oh, yes. Sure, that way. Of course, we exhibitors pay all the industry's bills out of our box offices. I know that only too well. But press books! They ought to be free. Most of the stuff in them is of no use to me. All I use out of my press book is a couple of ads and maybe a publicity story or two. The rest goes in the waste basket.

"Don't see why they put so much junk in press books, anyway. Colored covers, great big newspaper ads, full-page feature stories, pages and pages of stuff that are no good for anything but to make a flash in the press book.

"No exhibitor that I know can afford to buy the space those big ads take, and as for getting those fat publicity stories in free—try and do it. No, sir! Press books are 90 per cent waste as far as I'm concerned."

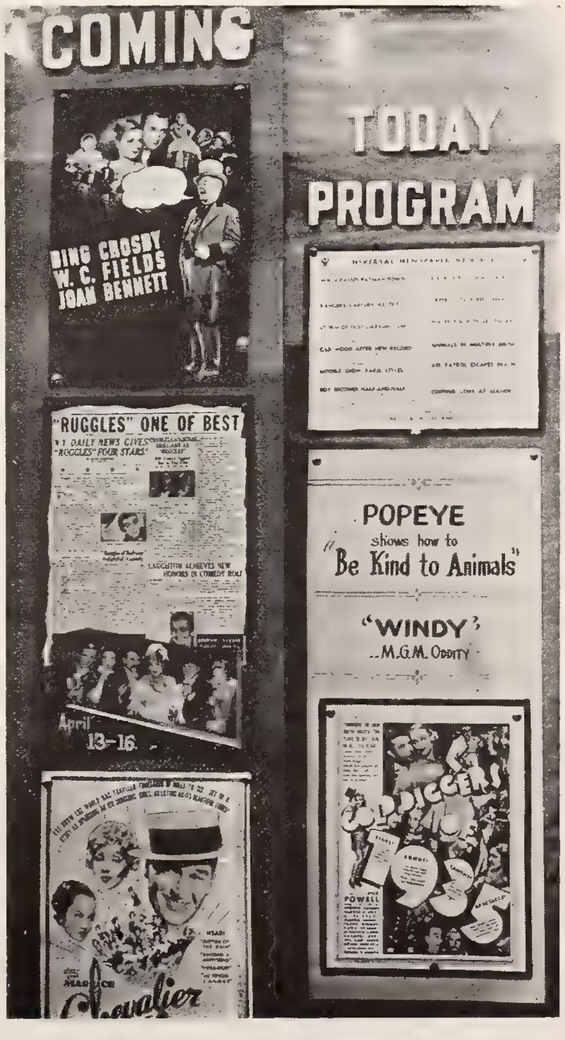
Which about sums up the exhibitor viewpoint. Press books are free. So why bother with anything but the few indispensable items. Wherefor a vast quantity of valuable advertising material, stuff that has real sales value, goes into theatre waste baskets.

Material Effective in Lobbies

As a matter of fact, and aside from its main function of supplying material for publication, inspiration and exploitation, there is in most press books on major attractions a wealth of left-over material which makes the most effective kind of front-of-the-house and lobby advertising. Without attempting to deal exhaustively with the subject, I will mention a few uses to which I regularly put such material.

The illustrations to right show two frames which are at convenient reading height alongside the entrance doors of the theatre. One lists coming attractions, the other the current program. They are made up of press book and trade paper ads mounted on separate cards, which permits them to be moved from the coming to the current program frame. They cost nothing, occupy little space, carry more selling punch than anything else on the front and are read by hundreds of people weekly. The difference between these printed ads and the usual coming and program cards is that the ads sell the show, whereas the cards merely announce it.

Most theatres have frames for displaying stills, and in those at the Smoot the center frames are occupied by ads from press books. These not only inform—they sell. We frequently use the colored sample heralds or reproductions of posters we find in press books. They are bright and good sellers. This sort of copy adds interest to the stills display.



Two of Yearsley's Press Book Frames

Theatres which have three-sheet frames at convenient reading height on the front or in the lobby can make effective use of a one-sheet or smash hand-painted poster for the top two-thirds of the frame and fill the space beneath it with one of those "useless" colored covers, full-page newspaper features or other by-products of the press book. This stuff pasted on cards, bordered with a bit of water color and fastened with thumb tacks against a permanent background of cloth or changeable background of crepe or other colored paper makes better selling display than any three-sheet or hand-painted read-as-you-run poster that fills the entire frame.

Press books often contain very attractive cuts and captions designed for the woman's page of newspapers: fashions, star portraits and the like. These, with a clipped and mounted press book ad on coming attractions are effective if neatly displayed on a bulletin board in the ladies' lounge. Other material, of more general interest, suitable for display in the theatre foyer, will be glanced over by patrons in idle moments.

Displays Must Be Interesting

It has been my observation over many years study of theatre advertising that too little attention is paid to making the lobby and front of the house advertising interesting as well as striking or artistic. The old idea that house advertising should all be read-as-you-run stuff can be disproved to the profit of any theatre advertiser who will take the little trouble necessary to make the test.

There is one more angle, and an important one, to the use of interesting material from the press book or trade paper ads, in theatre front advertising. It attracts and detains readers who have idle moments to spare, and who, even though they have no intention of buying a ticket at the time, serve as decoys who attract others who may and frequently do buy. Life about a theatre front is good for business. The read-as-you-run poster, however effective, will not hold attention. Press books are full of headlines and pictures which are devised with almost devilish cunning to catch the attention and hold it until the desire is created that precedes every ticket bought.

These suggestions by no means exhaust the uses to which the by-products of the press book may be put by the theatre advertiser who is really interested in doing a thorough job. Try it for a month and see for yourself. And the beauty of it is that this kind of material is exactly what is needed to help sell the tough ones, pictures without the Gables, Munis, Colberts or Garbos. It will both save and make money for any theatre from the de luxe to the shooting gallery.

Before closing, I must add that much valuable material is to be found in trade paper ads. It's a pity that a lot of those swell colored inserts are not used to gladden the eyes and whet the box office appetites of the customers. They'll do it. Try it and see
